

Government Publications

Government
Publications

CAI

Y 1

- D 3 2

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2024 with funding from University of Toronto

<https://archive.org/details/31761119716611>

D
R-6

2
Parliament

4
11

DEBATES OF THE SENATE

Feb. vol

OFFICIAL REPORT
(HANSARD)

THE HONOURABLE RENAUDE LAPOINTE
SPEAKER

1977-78
THIRD SESSION, THIRTIETH PARLIAMENT
26-27 ELIZABETH II

---

Parliament was opened on October 18, 1977 and was prorogued on October 10, 1978

The Speaker

THE HONOURABLE RENAUDE LAPOINTE

The Leader of the Government

THE HONOURABLE RAYMOND J. PERRAULT, P.C.

The Leader of the Opposition

THE HONOURABLE JACQUES FLYNN, P.C.

THE MINISTRY

According to Precedence

At Prorogation, October 10, 1978

The Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau	Prime Minister
The Honourable Allan Joseph MacEachen	Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada
The Honourable Jean Chrétien	Minister of Finance
The Honourable Donald Campbell Jamieson	Secretary of State for External Affairs
The Honourable Robert Knight Andras	President of the Treasury Board
The Honourable Otto Emil Lang	Minister of Transport and Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada
The Honourable Jean-Pierre Goyer	Minister of Supply and Services
The Honourable Alastair William Gillespie	Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources
The Honourable Eugene Francis Whelan	Minister of Agriculture
The Honourable W. Warren Allmand	Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs
The Honourable James Hugh Faulkner	Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development
The Honourable André Ouellet	Minister of State for Urban Affairs
The Honourable Daniel Joseph MacDonald	Minister of Veterans Affairs
The Honourable Marc Lalonde	Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations
The Honourable Jeanne Sauvé	Minister of Communications
The Honourable Raymond Joseph Perrault	Leader of the Government in the Senate
The Honourable Barnett Jerome Danson	Minister of National Defence
The Honourable J. Judd Buchanan	Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology
The Honourable Roméo LeBlanc	Minister of Fisheries and the Environment
The Honourable Marcel Lessard	Minister of Regional Economic Expansion
The Honourable Jack Sydney George Cullen	Minister of Employment and Immigration
The Honourable Leonard Stephen Marchand	Minister of State (Environment)
The Honourable John Roberts	Secretary of State of Canada
The Honourable Monique Bégin	Minister of National Health and Welfare
The Honourable Jean-Jacques Blais	Solicitor General of Canada
The Honourable Anthony Chisholm Abbott	Minister of State (Small Businesses)
The Honourable Iona Campagnolo	Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)
The Honourable Joseph-Philippe Guay	Minister of National Revenue
The Honourable John Henry Horner	Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce
The Honourable Norman A. Cafik	Minister of State (Multiculturalism)
The Honourable J. Gilles Lamontagne	Postmaster General

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

Yvon Pinard	to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council
Alan Martin	to Minister of Finance
Louis Duclos	to Secretary of State for External Affairs
Thomas-Henri Lefebvre	to President of the Treasury Board
Claude-André Lachance	to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada
Charles Lapointe	to Minister of Transport
Pierre Bussières	to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources
Yves Caron	to Minister of Agriculture
Aideen Nicholson	to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs
Hugh Anderson	to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development
Harold Thomas Herbert	to Minister of State for Urban Affairs
Gilbert Parent	to Minister of Veterans Affairs
Gus MacFarlane	to Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations
Crawford Douglas	to Minister of Communications
Raymond Dupont	to Minister of National Defence
Maurice Harquail	to Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology
Jack Pearsall	to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment
Donald Paul Wood	to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion
Frank Maine	to Minister of Employment and Immigration
Robert Daudlin	to Secretary of State
William Kenneth Robinson	to Minister of National Health and Welfare
Roger Young	to Solicitor General
Yves Demers	to Minister of National Revenue
Bernard Loiselle	to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce
William Andres	to Minister of State (Multiculturalism)
David Collette	to Postmaster General

SENATORS OF CANADA

ACCORDING TO SENIORITY

At Prorogation, October 10, 1978

Senators	Designation	Post Office Address
THE HONOURABLE
Salter Adrian Hayden	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.
Norman McLeod Paterson	Thunder Bay	Thunder Bay, Ont.
Sarto Fournier	de Lanaudière	Montreal, Que.
John J. Connolly, P.C.	Ottawa West	Ottawa, Ont.
Donald Cameron	Banff	Banff, Alta.
David A. Croll	Toronto-Spadina	Toronto, Ont.
Fred A. McGrand	Sunbury	Fredericton Junction, N.B.
Donald Smith	Queens-Shelburne	Liverpool, N.S.
Harold Connolly	Halifax North	Halifax, N.S.
Florence Elsie Inman	Murray Harbour	Montague, P.E.I.
Hartland de Montarville Molson	Alma	Montreal, Que.
Joseph A. Sullivan	North York	Toronto, Ont.
Lionel Choquette	Ottawa East	Ottawa, Ont.
John Michael Macdonald	Cape Breton	North Sydney, N.S.
Josie Alice Dinan Quart	Victoria	Quebec, Que.
Louis Philippe Beaubien	Bedford	Montreal, Que.
Allister Grosart	Pickering	Toronto, Ont.
Edgar Fournier	Madawaska-Restigouche	Iroquois, N.B.
Jacques Flynn, P.C.	Rougemont	Quebec, Que.
David James Walker, P.C.	Toronto	Toronto, Ont.
Rhéal Bélisle	Sudbury	Sudbury, Ont.
Paul Yuzyk	Fort Garry	Winnipeg, Man.
Orville Howard Phillips	Prince	Alberton, P.E.I.
Maurice Bourget, P.C.	The Laurentides	Lévis, Que.
Azellus Denis, P.C.	La Salle	Montreal, Que.
Eric Cook	Harbour Grace	St. John's, Nfld.
Daniel Aiken Lang	South York	Toronto, Ont.
William Moore Benidickson, P.C.	Kenora-Rainy River	Kenora, Ont.
Alexander Hamilton McDonald	Moosomin	Moosomin, Sask.
Earl Adam Hastings	Palliser-Foothills	Calgary, Alta.
Harry William Hays, P.C.	Calgary	Calgary, Alta.
Charles Robert McElman	Nashwaak Valley	Fredericton, N.B.
Douglas Keith Davey	York	Don Mills, Ont.
Jean-Paul Deschatelets, P.C.	Lauzon	Montreal, Que.
Hazen Robert Argue	Regina	Kayville, Sask.
J. G. Léopold Langlois	Grandville	Quebec, Que.
Paul Desruisseaux	Wellington	Sherbrooke, Que.
Douglas Donald Everett	Fort Rouge	Winnipeg, Man.
Maurice Lamontagne, P.C.	Inkerman	Aylmer, Que.
Andrew Ernest Thompson	Dovercourt	Kendal, Ont.
Keith Laird	Windsor	Windsor, Ont.
Herbert O. Sparrow	Saskatchewan	North Battleford, Sask.
Richard James Stanbury	York Centre	Toronto, Ont.
William John Petten	Bonavista	St. John's, Nfld.
Raymond Eudes	de Lorimier	Montreal, Que.
Louis de Gonzague Giguère	de la Durantaye	Montreal, Que.
Ernest C. Manning, P.C.	Edmonton West	Edmonton, Alta.
Gildas L. Molgat	Ste. Rose	St. Vital, Man.

SENATORS—ACCORDING TO SENIORITY

Senators	Designation	Post Office Address
THE HONOURABLE
Eugene A. Forsey .....	Nepean .....	Ottawa, Ont.
William C. McNamara .....	Winnipeg .....	Winnipeg, Man.
Paul C. Lafond .....	Gulf .....	Hull, Que.
Ann Elizabeth Bell .....	Nanaimo-Malaspina .....	Nanaimo, B.C.
Edward M. Lawson .....	Vancouver .....	Vancouver, B.C.
H. Carl Goldenberg .....	Rigaud .....	Westmount, Que.
George Clifford van Roggen .....	Vancouver-Point Grey .....	Vancouver, B.C.
Sidney L. Buckwold .....	Saskatoon .....	Saskatoon, Sask.
Renaude Lapointe (Speaker) .....	Mille Isles .....	Montreal, Que.
Mark Lorne Bonnell .....	Murray River .....	Murray River, P.E.I.
Guy Williams .....	Richmond .....	Richmond, B.C.
Michel Fournier .....	Restigouche-Gloucester .....	Pointe Verte, N.B.
Frederick William Rowe .....	Lewisporte .....	St. John's, Nfld.
George James McIlraith, P.C. ....	Ottawa Valley .....	Ottawa, Ont.
Margaret Norrie .....	Colchester-Cumberland .....	Truro, N.S.
Henry D. Hicks .....	The Annapolis Valley .....	Halifax, N.S.
Bernard Alasdair Graham .....	The Highlands .....	Sydney, N.S.
Martial Asselin, P.C. ....	Stadacona .....	La Malbaie, Que.
John James Greene, P.C. ....	Niagara .....	Niagara Falls, Ont.
Joan Neiman .....	Peel .....	Caledon East, Ont.
Raymond J. Perrault, P.C. ....	North Shore-Burnaby .....	Vancouver, B.C.
John Morrow Godfrey .....	Rosedale .....	Toronto, Ont.
Maurice Riel .....	Shawinigan .....	Westmount, Que.
Louis-J. Robichaud, P.C. ....	L'Acadie-Acadia .....	Saint Antoine, N.B.
Daniel Riley .....	Saint John .....	Saint John West, N.B.
Augustus Irvine Barrow .....	Halifax-Dartmouth .....	Halifax, N.S.
Ernest George Cotteau .....	South Western Nova .....	Yarmouth, N.S.
George Isaac Smith .....	Colchester .....	Truro, N.S.
Jack Austin .....	Vancouver South .....	Vancouver, B.C.
Paul Lucier .....	Yukon .....	Whitehorse, Yukon.
Jean Marchand, P.C. ....	de la Vallière .....	Quebec, Que.
David Gordon Steuart .....	Prince Albert-Duck Lake .....	Regina, Sask.
Pietro Rizzuto .....	Repentigny .....	Laval sur le Lac, Que.
Willie Adams .....	Northwest Territories .....	Rankin Inlet, N.W.T.
Horace Andrew (Bud) Olson, P.C. ....	Alberta South .....	Idlesleigh, Alta.
Royce Frith .....	Lanark .....	Perth, Ont.
Peter Bosa .....	York-Caboto .....	Etobicoke, Ont.
Duff Roblin, P.C. ....	Red River .....	Winnipeg, Man.
Joseph-Philippe Guay, P.C. ....	St. Boniface .....	St. Boniface, Man.
Stanley Haidasz, P.C. ....	Toronto-Parkdale .....	Toronto, Ont.
Florence Bayard Bird .....	Carleton .....	Ottawa, Ont.
Philip Derek Lewis .....	St. John's .....	St. John's, Nfld.
Jack Marshall .....	Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe .....	Corner Brook, Nfld.
Margaret Jean Anderson .....	Northumberland-Miramichi .....	Newcastle, N.B.
Joseph Napoléon Claude Wagner .....	Kennebec .....	Montreal, Que.

Note: For names of senators who resigned, retired, or died during the Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament, see Index.

SENATORS OF CANADA

ALPHABETICAL LIST

At Prorogation, October 10, 1978

Senators	Designation	Post Office Address
THE HONOURABLE
Adams, Willie .....	Northwest Territories .....	Rankin Inlet, N.W.T.
Anderson, Margaret Jean .....	Northumberland-Miramichi .....	Newcastle, N.B.
Argue, Hazen .....	Regina .....	Kayville, Sask.
Asselin, Martial, P.C. ....	Stadacona .....	La Malbaie, Que.
Austin, Jack .....	Vancouver South .....	Vancouver, B.C.
Barrow, Augustus Irvine .....	Halifax-Dartmouth .....	Halifax, N.S.
Beaubien, L. P. ....	Bedford .....	Montreal, Que.
Bélisle, Rhéal .....	Sudbury .....	Sudbury, Ont.
Bell, Ann Elizabeth .....	Nanaimo-Malaspina .....	Nanaimo, B.C.
Benidickson, W. M., P.C. ....	Kenora-Rainy River .....	Kenora, Ont.
Bird, Florence Bayard .....	Carleton .....	Ottawa, Ont.
Bonnell, M. Lorne .....	Murray River .....	Murray River, P.E.I.
Bosa, Peter .....	York-Caboto .....	Etobicoke, Ont.
Bourget, Maurice, P.C. ....	The Laurentides .....	Lévis, Que.
Buckwold, Sidney L. ....	Saskatoon .....	Saskatoon, Sask.
Cameron, Donald .....	Banff .....	Banff, Alta.
Choquette, Lionel .....	Ottawa East .....	Ottawa, Ont.
Connolly, Harold .....	Halifax North .....	Halifax, N.S.
Connolly, John J., P.C. ....	Ottawa West .....	Ottawa, Ont.
Cook, Eric .....	Harbour Grace .....	St. John's, Nfld.
Cottreau, Ernest G. ....	South Western Nova .....	Yarmouth, N.S.
Croll, David A. ....	Toronto-Spadina .....	Toronto, Ont.
Davey, Keith .....	York .....	Don Mills, Ont.
Denis, Azellus, P.C. ....	La Salle .....	Montreal, Que.
Deschatelets, Jean-Paul, P.C. ....	Lauzon .....	Montreal, Que.
Desruisseaux, Paul .....	Wellington .....	Sherbrooke, Que.
Eudes, Raymond .....	de Lorimier .....	Montreal, Que.
Everett, Douglas D. ....	Fort Rouge .....	Winnipeg, Man.
Flynn, Jacques, P.C. ....	Rougemont .....	Quebec, Que.
Forsey, Eugene A. ....	Nepean .....	Ottawa, Ont.
Fournier, Edgar .....	Madawaska-Restigouche .....	Iroquois, N.B.
Fournier, Michel .....	Restigouche-Gloucester .....	Pointe Verte, N.B.
Fournier, Sarto .....	de Lanaudière .....	Montreal, Que.
Frith, Royce .....	Lanark .....	Perth, Ont.
Giguère, Louis de G. ....	de la Durantaye .....	Montreal, Que.
Godfrey, John Morrow .....	Rosedale .....	Toronto, Ont.
Goldenberg, H. Carl .....	Rigaud .....	Westmount, Que.
Graham, Bernard Alasdair .....	The Highlands .....	Sydney, N.S.
Greene, John James, P.C. ....	Niagara .....	Niagara Falls, Ont.
Grosart, Allister .....	Pickering .....	Toronto, Ont.
Guay, Joseph-Philippe, P.C. ....	St. Boniface .....	St. Boniface, Man.
Haidasz, Stanley, P.C. ....	Toronto-Parkdale .....	Toronto, Ont.
Hastings, Earl A. ....	Palliser-Foothills .....	Calgary, Alta.
Hayden, Salter A. ....	Toronto .....	Toronto, Ont.
Hays, Harry, P.C. ....	Calgary .....	Calgary, Alta.
Hicks, Henry D. ....	The Annapolis Valley .....	Halifax, N.S.
Inman, F. Elsie .....	Murray Harbour .....	Montague, P.E.I.
Lafond, Paul C. ....	Gulf .....	Hull, Que.

Senators

Designation

Post Office Address

THE HONOURABLE

Laird, Keith .....	Windsor .....	Windsor, Ont.
Lamontagne, Maurice, P.C. ....	Inkerman .....	Aylmer, Que.
Lang, Daniel A. ....	South York .....	Toronto, Ont.
Langlois, Léopold .....	Grandville .....	Quebec, Que.
Lapointe, Renaude (Speaker) .....	Mille Isles .....	Montreal, Que.
Lawson, Edward M. ....	Vancouver .....	Vancouver, B.C.
Lewis, Philip Derek .....	St. John's .....	St. John's, Nfld.
Lucier, Paul .....	Yukon .....	Whitehorse, Yukon.
Macdonald, John M. ....	Cape Breton .....	North Sydney, N.S.
Manning, Ernest C., P.C. ....	Edmonton West .....	Edmonton, Alta.
Marchand, Jean, P.C. ....	de la Vallière .....	Quebec, Que.
Marshall, Jack .....	Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe....	Corner Brook, Nfld.
McDonald, A. Hamilton .....	Moosomin .....	Moosomin, Sask.
McElman, Charles .....	Nashwaak Valley .....	Fredericton, N.B.
McGrand, Fred A. ....	Sunbury .....	Fredericton Junction, N.B.
McIlraith, George J., P.C. ....	Ottawa Valley .....	Ottawa, Ont.
McNamara, William C. ....	Winnipeg .....	Winnipeg, Man.
Molgat, Gildas L. ....	Ste. Rose .....	St. Vital, Man.
Molson, Hartland de M. ....	Alma .....	Montreal, Que.
Neiman, Joan .....	Peel .....	Caledon East, Ont.
Norrie, Margaret .....	Colchester-Cumberland .....	Truro, N.S.
Olson, Horace Andrew (Bud), P.C. ....	Alberta South .....	Idesleigh, Alta.
Paterson, Norman McL .....	Thunder Bay .....	Thunder Bay, Ont.
Perrault, Raymond J., P.C. ....	North Shore-Burnaby .....	Vancouver, B.C.
Petten, William J. ....	Bonavista .....	St. John's, Nfld.
Phillips, Orville H. ....	Prince .....	Alberton, P.E.I.
Quart, Josie D. ....	Victoria .....	Quebec, Que.
Riel, Maurice .....	Shawinigan .....	Westmount, Que.
Riley, Daniel .....	Saint John .....	Saint John West, N.B.
Rizzuto, Pietro .....	Repentigny .....	Laval sur le Lac, Que.
Robichaud, Louis-J., P.C. ....	L'Acadie-Acadia .....	Saint Antoine, N.B.
Roblin, Duff, P.C. ....	Red River .....	Winnipeg, Man.
Rowe, Frederick William .....	Lewisporte .....	St. John's, Nfld.
Smith, Donald .....	Queens-Shelburne .....	Liverpool, N.S.
Smith, George I. ....	Colchester .....	Truro, N.S.
Sparrow, Herbert O. ....	Saskatchewan .....	North Battleford, Sask.
Stanbury, Richard J. ....	York Centre .....	Toronto, Ont.
Steuart, David Gordon .....	Prince Albert-Duck Lake .....	Regina, Sask.
Sullivan, Joseph A. ....	North York .....	Toronto, Ont.
Thompson, Andrew .....	Dovercourt .....	Kendal, Ont.
van Roggen, George .....	Vancouver-Point Grey .....	Vancouver, B.C.
Wagner, Joseph Napoléon Claude .....	Kennebec .....	Montreal, Que.
Walker, David, P.C. ....	Toronto .....	Toronto, Ont.
Williams, Guy .....	Richmond .....	Richmond, B.C.
Yuzyk, Paul .....	Fort Garry .....	Winnipeg, Man.

SENATORS OF CANADA

BY PROVINCES

At Prorogation, October 10, 1978

ONTARIO—24

Senators	Designation	Post Office Address
THE HONOURABLE
1 Salter Adrian Hayden .....	Toronto .....	Toronto.
2 Norman McLeod Paterson .....	Thunder Bay .....	Thunder Bay.
3 John J. Connolly, P.C. ....	Ottawa West .....	Ottawa.
4 David A. Croll .....	Toronto-Spadina .....	Toronto.
5 Joseph A. Sullivan .....	North York .....	Toronto.
6 Lionel Choquette .....	Ottawa East .....	Ottawa.
7 Allister Grosart .....	Pickering .....	Toronto.
8 David James Walker, P.C. ....	Toronto .....	Toronto.
9 Rhéal Bélisle .....	Sudbury .....	Sudbury.
10 Daniel Aiken Lang .....	South York .....	Toronto.
11 William Moore Benidickson, P.C. ....	Kenora-Rainy River .....	Kenora.
12 Douglas Keith Davey .....	York .....	Don Mills.
13 Andrew Ernest Thompson .....	Dovercourt .....	Kendal.
14 Keith Laird .....	Windsor .....	Windsor.
15 Richard James Stanbury .....	York Centre .....	Toronto.
16 Eugene A. Forsey .....	Nepean .....	Ottawa.
17 George James McIlraith, P.C. ....	Ottawa Valley .....	Ottawa.
18 John James Greene, P.C. ....	Niagara .....	Niagara Falls.
19 Joan Neiman .....	Peel .....	Caledon East.
20 John Morrow Godfrey .....	Rosedale .....	Toronto.
21 Royce Frith .....	Lanark .....	Perth.
22 Peter Bosa .....	York-Caboto .....	Etobicoke.
23 Stanley Haidasz, P.C. ....	Toronto-Parkdale .....	Toronto.
24 Florence Bayard Bird .....	Carleton .....	Ottawa.

SENATORS BY PROVINCES

QUEBEC—24

Senators	Electoral Division	Post Office Address
THE HONOURABLE
1 Sarto Fournier .....	de Lanaudière .....	Montreal.
2 Hartland de Montarville Molson .....	Alma .....	Montreal.
3 Josie Alice Dinan Quart .....	Victoria .....	Quebec.
4 Louis Philippe Beaubien .....	Bedford .....	Montreal.
5 Jacques Flynn, P.C. ....	Rougemont .....	Quebec.
6 Maurice Bourget, P.C. ....	The Laurentides .....	Lévis.
7 Azellus Denis, P.C. ....	La Salle .....	Montreal.
8 Jean-Paul Deschatelets, P.C. ....	Lauzon .....	Montreal.
9 J. G. Léopold Langlois .....	Grandville .....	Quebec.
10 Paul Desruisseaux .....	Wellington .....	Sherbrooke.
11 Maurice Lamontagne, P.C. ....	Inkerman .....	Aylmer.
12 Raymond Eudes .....	de Lorimier .....	Montreal.
13 Louis de Gonzague Giguère .....	de la Durantaye .....	Montreal.
14 Paul C. Lafond .....	Gulf .....	Hull.
15 H. Carl Goldenberg .....	Rigaud .....	Westmount.
16 Renaude Lapointe (Speaker) .....	Mille Isles .....	Montreal.
17 Martial Asselin, P.C. ....	Stadacona .....	La Malbaie.
18 Maurice Riel .....	Shawinigan .....	Westmount.
19 Jean Marchand, P.C. ....	de la Vallière .....	Quebec.
20 Pietro Rizzuto .....	Repentigny .....	Laval sur le Lac.
21 Joseph Napoléon Claude Wagner .....	Kennebec .....	Montreal.
22 .....	.....	.....
23 .....	.....	.....
24 .....	.....	.....

NOVA SCOTIA—10

Senators	Designation	Post Office Address
THE HONOURABLE
1 Donald Smith .....	Queens-Shelburne .....	Liverpool.
2 Harold Connolly .....	Halifax North .....	Halifax.
3 John Michael Macdonald .....	Cape Breton .....	North Sydney.
4 Margaret Norrie .....	Colchester-Cumberland .....	Truro.
5 Henry D. Hicks .....	The Annapolis Valley .....	Halifax.
6 Bernard Alasdair Graham .....	The Highlands .....	Sydney.
7 Augustus Irvine Barrow .....	Halifax-Dartmouth .....	Halifax.
8 Ernest George Cottreau .....	South Western Nova .....	Yarmouth.
9 George Isaac Smith .....	Colchester .....	Truro.
10 .....	.....	.....

NEW BRUNSWICK—10

THE HONOURABLE
1 Fred A. McGrand .....	Sunbury .....	Fredericton Junction.
2 Edgar Fournier .....	Madawaska-Restigouche .....	Iroquois.
3 Charles Robert McElman .....	Nashwaak Valley .....	Fredericton.
4 Michel Fournier .....	Restigouche-Gloucester .....	Pointe Verte.
5 Louis-J. Robichaud, P.C. ....	L'Acadie-Acadia .....	Saint Antoine.
6 Daniel Riley .....	Saint John .....	Saint John West.
7 Margaret Jean Anderson .....	Northumberland-Miramichi .....	Newcastle.
8 .....	.....	.....
9 .....	.....	.....
10 .....	.....	.....

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—4

THE HONOURABLE
1 Florence Elsie Inman .....	Murray Harbour .....	Montague.
2 Orville Howard Phillips .....	Prince .....	Alberton.
3 Mark Lorne Bonnell .....	Murray River .....	Murray River.
4 .....	.....	.....

---

MANITOBA—6

---

Senators

Designation

Post Office Address

---

THE HONOURABLE

1 Paul Yuzyk .....	Fort Garry .....	Winnipeg.
2 Douglas Donald Everett .....	Fort Rouge .....	Winnipeg.
3 Gildas L. Moigat .....	Ste. Rose .....	St. Vital.
4 William C. McNamara .....	Winnipeg .....	Winnipeg.
5 Duff Roblin, P.C. ....	Red River .....	Winnipeg.
6 Joseph-Philippe Guay, P.C. ....	St. Boniface .....	St. Boniface.

---

---

BRITISH COLUMBIA—6

---

---

THE HONOURABLE

1 Ann Elizabeth Bell .....	Nanaimo-Malaspina .....	Nanaimo.
2 Edward M. Lawson .....	Vancouver .....	Vancouver.
3 George Clifford van Roggen .....	Vancouver-Point Grey .....	Vancouver.
4 Guy Williams .....	Richmond .....	Richmond.
5 Raymond J. Perrault, P.C. ....	North Shore-Burnaby .....	Vancouver.
6 Jack Austin .....	Vancouver South .....	Vancouver.

---

---

SASKATCHEWAN—6

---

---

THE HONOURABLE

1 Alexander Hamilton McDonald .....	Moosomin .....	Moosomin.
2 Hazen Robert Argue .....	Regina .....	Kayville.
3 Herbert O. Sparrow .....	Saskatchewan .....	North Battleford.
4 Sidney L. Buckwold .....	Saskatoon .....	Saskatoon.
5 David Gordon Steuart .....	Prince Albert-Duck Lake .....	Regina.
6 .....	.....	.....

---

---

ALBERTA—6

---

---

THE HONOURABLE

1 Donald Cameron .....	Banff .....	Banff.
2 Earl Adam Hastings .....	Palliser-Foothills .....	Calgary.
3 Harry William Hays, P.C. ....	Calgary .....	Calgary.
4 Ernest C. Manning, P.C. ....	Edmonton West .....	Edmonton.
5 Horace Andrew (Bud) Olson, P.C. ....	Alberta South .....	Iddesleigh.
6 .....	.....	.....

---

NEWFOUNDLAND—6

Senators

Designation

Post Office Address

THE HONOURABLE

1 Eric Cook .....	Harbour Grace .....	St. John's.
2 William John Petten .....	Bonavista .....	St. John's.
3 Frederick William Rowe .....	Lewisporte .....	St. John's.
4 Philip Derek Lewis .....	St. John's .....	St. John's.
5 Jack Marshall .....	Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe....	Corner Brook.
6 .....	.....	.....

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—1

THE HONOURABLE

1 Willie Adams .....	Northwest Territories .....	Rankin Inlet.
----------------------	-----------------------------	---------------

YUKON TERRITORY—1

THE HONOURABLE

1 Paul Lucier .....	Yukon .....	Whitehorse.
---------------------	-------------	-------------

THE SENATE

OFFICERS AND CHIEFS OF PRINCIPAL BRANCHES

Clerk of the Senate and Clerk of the Parliaments	Robert Fortier, Q.C., B.A., LL.B.
Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel	R. L. du Plessis, Q.C., B.A., LL.L.
First Clerk Assistant	Alcide Paquette, B.A.
Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod	A. G. Vandelac, M.C., C.D.
Director of Administration and Personnel	J. Walter Dean
Editor of Debates and Chief of Reporting Branch	T. S. Hubbard
Director of Committees	Flavien J. Belzile, B.A.
Chief of Minutes and Journals (English)	Mrs. Jean F. Sutherland
Chief of Minutes and Journals (French)	Miss Madeleine Ouimet
Assistant Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod	Charles H. E. Askwith

---

REPORTING BRANCH

Editor of Debates and Chief of Reporting Branch	T. S. Hubbard
Assistant Chief of Reporting Branch	G. R. Baker
Associate Editor and Senior Reporter, English	H. D. Griffith
Associate Editor and Senior Reporter, French	J. R. Langlois
Reporters	Aurèle Chénier, W. J. Culleton, G. K. Hubbard, D. L. Sellers, A. A. Gallagher, L. R. Powis, H. C. Warburton, Maurice Bolduc, N. C. Keeley, Miss K. M. Olszewska, B. C. Keeley.

---

TRANSLATORS

Department of Secretary of State

Director, Special Operations	Roch Blais
Chief, Parliamentary Translations	André Audette
Chief of Debates	Mireille Couillard

---

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

Parliamentary Librarian	Erik J. Spicer, C.D., B.A., B.L.S., M.A.L.S.
Associate Parliamentary Librarian	Gilles J. C. Frappier, B.A., B.Ph., B.L.S.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, October 18, 1977

OPENING OF THE THIRD SESSION

THIRTIETH PARLIAMENT

Parliament having been summoned by Proclamation to meet this day for the dispatch of business:

The Senate met at 3.30 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CANADIAN SECRETARY TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform you that I have received the following communication from the Canadian Secretary to Her Majesty the Queen:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
OTTAWA, CANADA

October 18, 1977

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that Her Majesty the Queen will arrive at the Main Entrance of the Parliament Buildings at 3.45 p.m. on this day, Tuesday, the 18th of October 1977, and when it has been signified that all is in readiness, will proceed to the Chamber of the Senate to open formally the Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament of Canada.

I have the honour to be,
Madam,

Your obedient servant,
Michel Gauvin
Canadian Secretary to the Queen.

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

At 4 p.m. Her Majesty the Queen proceeded to the Senate Chamber and took her seat upon the Throne. Her Majesty was pleased to command the attendance of the House of Commons, and, that House being come, with their Speaker, Her Majesty the Queen was pleased to open the Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament of Canada with the following speech:

● (0000)

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have greatly looked forward to being with you here in the Canadian Parliament in my Silver Jubilee year. Whenever I am in this wonderful country of Canada, with her vast resources and unlimited challenges, I feel thankful that Canadians have been so successful in establishing a vigorous democracy well suited to a proud and free people.

In this historic Chamber surrounded by the symbols and records of generations of Canadian legislators, I am very conscious of what Parliament has achieved—by transforming the visions and ideals of a great country into the enduring law of the land.

In ten visits together to Canada spread over a quarter of a century—seven in the last decade alone—Prince Philip and I have met many thousands of Canadians in all walks of life, of all ages, in every province and territory. My happiest memories of our travels throughout Canada have been these individual contacts which have revealed the enormous strength and astonishing diversity of this nation.

A generation of Canadians has been born, and grown to maturity during my reign. I know you will understand when I say that I have a special interest in these young men and women, contemporaries of our own children. They are people made strong by the achievements of their parents and grandparents, but not imprisoned by the prejudices of the past. In their sensitivity towards other people, in their sense of justice, their generosity and good will, lie not only lessons for us all, but also the best and surest hope for unity and understanding among Canadians everywhere. I look forward to meeting more of them next year in Edmonton when I shall have the pleasure of opening the Commonwealth Games.

I have always been full of admiration for what Canada is: the new generation fill me with confidence for what Canada can become.

The growth of those young men and women over the past quarter-century has been matched by a rapid expansion of Canada's economic strength and international stature.

Within an evolving Commonwealth, Canada's influence is steadily growing, particularly as an advocate of human dignity, justice and co-operation.

This greater influence has been used by Canada to pursue such critical goals as a more equitable sharing of wealth and opportunity, the enhancement of individual freedom, the conservation of the planet's scarce resources, and the prudent control of nuclear technology.

The post-war period of sustained economic growth conferred great new wealth upon Canada. Productivity and standards of living improved substantially, and the country could afford to provide better economic protection for the sick, the aged, the unemployed and the poor.

But growth produced new sets of problems with which the whole community has not yet learned to cope successfully.

High rates of unemployment and inflation are clear signals of the inadequacy of economic strategies appropriate to simpler times. They are also signals of the urgent need for important structural adjustments in the economies of Canada and other industrialized countries. More than that, they are the symptoms of an illness which can be cured only by a readjustment of our values, and by a re-discovery of the merits of self-discipline and fair sharing.

The process of change will require continued consultation with Canadians, so that there may be a shared appreciation of current problems, and a shared acceptance of strategies for the future.

The government publications entitled The Way Ahead and The Agenda For Co-operation were designed to involve all Canadians in the discussion of how best to adapt to changing economic circumstances.

The changes that are now taking place impose burdens on some Canadians, and the Government remains committed to protecting these individuals.

The Government has recently made new funding proposals to the provinces which will improve the efficiency and flexibility of social services such as the rehabilitation of disabled persons, day care and community development services. The delivery of these services will thereby better reflect varying conditions and priorities across the country. It is hoped that the response of provincial governments will lead to the introduction of a revised Social Services Act during this Session.

The human hardship imposed by the current level of unemployment in Canada is deeply disturbing. It is neither just nor tolerable that in this country there should be so many men and women deprived of the dignity of self-supporting work, unable to meet their financial commitments and plan confidently for the future. It is intolerable that so many are deprived of their right to secure and productive lives, and that their families bear an unfair burden of worry, uncertainty, and deprivation. On a national scale, unemployment now constitutes a very serious obstacle to economic growth.

The benefits of existing government job stimulation programs, such as youth and community employment projects, and direct job creation by government, are visible to all. New initiatives have also been taken to encourage the mobility and upgrade the skills of the Canadian labour force, and to encourage small business. But more must be done.

To stimulate the expansion of industrial activity and create jobs in the private sector, the Government adopted a number of initiatives in its March budget. The investment tax credit was extended and was also increased in slower-growing regions of the country as a means of reinforcing the regional development policy of the Government. Tax incentives were increased for energy exploration and rail facilities. The dividend tax credit was substantially increased to encourage investment; deductible capital losses were doubled; and businesses were permitted to adjust inventory valuations to partially offset the effects of inflation.

Legislation will be reintroduced to effect these tax reductions and investment incentives. But the current unemployment situation obviously requires further action. Therefore, this legislation will be significantly strengthened to provide further immediate stimulus to the economy and to create new employment. The details of these further initiatives will be announced by the Minister of Finance during the course of the debate which begins tomorrow.

Further stimulus must not be allowed to compromise our objective of continuing reductions in inflation. The Government will continue to exercise responsibility in controlling its expenditures. The continuation of the income and price controls program through the early part of 1978 will help to contain inflationary pressures, but controls on prices and incomes must then end. You will be asked to approve legislation to amend the Anti-Inflation Act to allow an orderly process of decontrol, as well as legislation to create a monitoring agency.

The Government is confident that the outcome of the Multilateral Trade Negotiations now underway in Geneva will be of considerable benefit to Canada. Consultations with the provinces and with the private sector will be intensified, in order to ensure that this benefit is shared by all regions of the country.

In preparation for the new trading environment which Canada will face in the 1980's, the Government will introduce measures in this Session to enhance Canada's exports. Further support will be provided to the private sector in undertaking large capital projects in other countries.

In the continuing implementation of its food strategy, the Government will work with the provinces to ensure a co-ordinated approach to agricultural development, making better use of Canada's food-producing potential.

As part of the Government's consultation process, a National Food Conference will be held. It will bring together representatives of governments, producers, consumers and the food industry to work together toward a national agreement on how Canada's food strategy should be further developed and implemented. New initiatives are underway to provide the consumer with readily accessible information on food prices and nutrition. The Government will ensure that the views of producers, processors and consumers are adequately represented on marketing boards and agencies, so that they may operate more effectively.

Several measures will be placed before you to improve the national transportation system. For example, new ports legislation will be introduced which will enhance local autonomy while maintaining the overall national interest.

In the field of energy, it will continue to be the determined policy of the Government to work with the provinces toward the goal of self-reliance, particularly by encouraging exploration and conservation to reduce our dependence on imported oil. Further encouragement will be given to the development of energy saving technology, of renewable energy sources, and of the application of solar energy.

There are encouraging signs that the policy measures introduced over the past few years to promote exploration and development are beginning to bear fruit. In particular, exploration for natural gas in Western Canada appears to have been highly successful over the past two years. There are also encouraging prospects in the Beaufort Sea area and the Arctic Islands. Petro-Canada, in co-operation with the private sector, is seriously examining the feasibility of delivering natural gas to markets in Quebec and the Atlantic Provinces.

Exploration in the Arctic will be further encouraged by the proposed northern gas pipeline. A Bill will be placed before you to seek your approval for the implementation of the pipeline agreement negotiated with the Government of the United States. This historic agreement—which will launch one of the largest civil engineering projects in the history of the world—will provide immense benefits to Canada through jobs, investment, the purchase of materials and through easier and cheaper access to northern Canadian gas reserves.

You will also be asked to approve a Canadian Petroleum and Natural Gas Act, which will regulate oil and gas exploration on federally administered lands and establish a system of royalty payments.

● (0000)

The Government is committed to ensure that northern development occurs in a manner consistent with the rights of northern native peoples to negotiate a just and reasonable settlement of their land claims, and to participate in and shape such development. Consultations with native groups are continuing. In the Yukon, the Government will propose special measures to ensure that pipeline construction will not prejudice native rights or foreclose opportunities. In the Northwest Territories, the Government has appointed a commissioner to consult with interested groups and advise on the pace and manner of the further constitutional evolution of the Territories.

So pervasive are economic influences on people's daily lives that failure to secure economic stability and justice would, in itself, stimulate a sense of alienation, mutual hostility, and divisiveness among Canadians. In the context of the current national unity debate, therefore, it is imperative that feelings of linguistic or cultural inequality not be allowed to be further poisoned by evidence of economic injustice. Conversely, there is no doubt that the level of uncertainty evident in Quebec has a negative effect on the economy.

Few countries are as blessed as Canada, where a wealth of freedom and of this world's goods is apparent for all to see. Perhaps only those who have come here from less fortunate lands can appreciate to the full the great good fortune of living in a country so favored by nature, and so enriched by its cultural diversity.

Even in the midst of plenty, however, there are Canadians who know they are not receiving their fair share. To cite just one example, in those parts of the Atlantic Provinces where unemployment is particularly severe, some see themselves as an excluded group, able to gaze upon the good life only from a distance. There are many living in the West who have contributed much to Canada, yet believe their voice is little heard by others. There are many living in Quebec who feel deeply that Canada at present does not provide them with the opportunity to fulfill their reasonable aspirations. There are native peoples across the land who are still in search of a better life for themselves and their children.

This discontent in such a wealthy country must find its causes in the human spirit, and it is there also that the unity of the nation must be found. A greater willingness to listen to each other, to understand each other's needs, a greater generosity between individuals and between different parts of the country, a greater willingness to sacrifice so that others may have a chance, to take less so that others may have enough—all these are in the realm of the spirit. All are essential to the unity of the country. Governments, of course, have a special responsibility to both encourage and respond to the spirit of unity by their words and their actions. Canadians are, I believe, coming to recognize the seriousness of the problem. They are recognizing the need to make a new and deeper dedication to mutual understanding and sharing.

The Government dedicates itself profoundly to the re-discovery of the spirit of unity. It wishes to learn from all who are interested in Canada and who have thoughts on how it can be made a better place in which to live. It is prepared, particularly, to work with the governments of the provinces, all of whom have a vital interest in a better Canada.

The Government recently appointed the Task Force on Canadian Unity which is now in the process of canvassing opinion in all parts of Canada. The work of the Task Force should assist Canadians to participate more actively in debate, and to make a greater contribution to the future shaping of the country.

The Government will also be placing before Parliament, and in this way before the people of Canada, later in this Session, a measure that will contain a number of proposals relating to the Constitution of Canada, which it believes will be of particular importance for the future of the country. The proposals will be concerned, among other matters, with the essential nature of the Canadian federation and its objectives, with certain fundamental rights and freedoms which the Government feels should be enjoyed by all Canadians as being essential to Canada's continuing existence as a free and democratic society, and with certain elements of the framework of the Canadian federation that are important to its effective functioning.

It is the hope of the Government that these proposals will stimulate a process of constitutional review in which all governments in Canada will share and in which Canadians generally will have an opportunity to express their views and convictions about the kind of Canada they wish to have now and in the future. We may confidently expect that, from that process, may emerge a new federalism that will receive the support and the devotion of Canadians everywhere.

The question of language rights is of particular relevance to national unity, and the Government has therefore welcomed the historic "Statement on Language" approved at the meeting of provincial Premiers at St. Andrews in August. The Government believes that this important initiative can and should become a basic part of our Constitution and has recently asked the provinces to consider this possibility.

After consultation with the provinces, the Government will amend the criminal code to guarantee the right of accused persons to be tried in the official language of their choice.

The goal of enhancing the rights and freedoms of Canadians can also be pursued through commitment to the principle of open government. An example of that commitment was the enactment of the Human Rights Act, and the recent appointment of the Human Rights Commission and the Privacy Commissioner. To the same end, the Government looks forward to hearing the views of Parliament on the Government's proposals concerning public access to official documents. In the further promotion of open government, you will be asked to approve the establishment of the office of ombudsman to deal with complaints arising from federal administrative actions.

The Government will also propose the amendment of the Official Languages Act, in order to make more specific its provisions respecting the language of work of federal employees, to strengthen the role of the Commissioner of Official Languages, and to clarify the role of the courts in safeguarding the equality of status of the official languages within the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada.

A comprehensive policy for official language minorities will be announced, and initiatives will be taken to ensure its full implementation within federal institutions. In the coming months, the Government will be proposing specific initiatives to be taken in collaboration with the provinces, and exploring ways of assisting the provinces in measures which they propose for ensuring greater availability of education in both official languages to all Canadians.

The unity of Canadians is often judged by the manner in which the federal and provincial governments work together for the benefit of the citizen. It is in recognition of this that the Government has recently designated a Minister of State responsible for federal-provincial relations, so that greater attention can be given to the search for harmony and co-operation between governments in Canada.

Given the new economic realities to which Canada must adjust, and the urgency of promoting linguistic and cultural harmony, it is readily apparent that Canada is now entering a new era.

It can be an era of increasing confrontation, tension and division, or an era of enhanced freedom, co-operation and unity of purpose. Fundamentally, the choice must be made by every citizen every day.

It is apparent to thoughtful Canadians everywhere that this is a time of great decisions for Canada, a time for re-discovering the strength and potential of a marvellously free and caring society.

That re-discovery will require that Canadians rededicate themselves to each other's well-being, just as I dedicate myself anew today to the people and the nation I am very proud to serve.

Members of the House of Commons,

You will be asked to consider budget proposals and to approve the expenditure of funds required for the administration of government services and programs.

Honourable Members of the Senate,

Members of the House of Commons,

May God bless and inspire all your deliberations and decisions.

The House of Commons withdrew.

Her Majesty the Queen was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

RAILWAYS BILL

FIRST READING

Senator Langlois presented Bill S-1, relating to railways.

Bill read first time.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONSIDERATION NEXT SITTING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform you that Her Majesty the Queen has caused to be placed in my hands a copy of Her Speech delivered this day from the Throne to the two Houses of Parliament. It is as follows:

Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this Speech be taken into consideration?

Senator Langlois moved, seconded by Senator Petten:

That the Speech of Her Majesty the Queen, delivered this day from the Throne to the two Houses of Parliament, be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

ADDRESS TO HER MAJESTY

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., that an humble Address be engrossed and presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

TO HER MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY

ELIZABETH THE SECOND,

By the Grace of God of the United Kingdom, Canada and Her other Realms and Territories Queen, Head of the Commonwealth, Defender of the Faith:

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN:

We, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada, in Parliament assembled, humbly wish to convey to Your Majesty the loyalty, affection and deepest respect of this House and of all Canadians, our happiness in welcoming Your Majesty and His Royal Highness the Prince Philip to Canada during Your Majesty's Silver Jubilee, and our gratitude to Your Majesty for graciously opening the Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON ORDERS AND CUSTOMS

APPOINTMENT

Senator Langlois moved, seconded by Senator Petten:

That all the senators present during this session be appointed a committee to consider the Orders and Customs of the Senate and Privileges of Parliament, and that the said committee have leave to meet in the Senate Chamber when and as often as they please.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

APPOINTMENT

Senator Langlois moved, seconded by Senator Petten:

That pursuant to rule 66, the following senators, to wit: the Honourable Senators Bourget, Choquette, Denis, Flynn, Grosart, Inman, Langlois, Macdonald, Perrault, Petten and Quart, be appointed a Committee of Selection to nominate senators to serve on the several select committees during the present session; and to report with all convenient speed the names of the senators so nominated.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, October 19, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SENATE GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators who wish to sit in the Senate Gallery of the House of Commons are requested to use the north corridor to gain access to the gallery because the south corridor is under repair.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report on the activities of the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) for the fiscal year 1976-77, pursuant to section 3 of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations Act, Chapter F-26, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada, Volume I, Abstract of Statements of Insurance Companies in Canada, for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 8 of the Department of Insurance Act, Chapter I-17, R.S.C., 1970.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

TERMINATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY ON EIGHTH SITTING DAY

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), I move, seconded by Senator Perrault:

That the proceedings on the order of the day for resuming the debate on the motion for an Address in reply to Her Majesty the Queen's Speech from the Throne addressed to both Houses of Parliament be concluded on the eighth sitting day on which the order is debated.

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

HEATING OF OFFICES—QUESTION

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask the Leader of the Government a question with relation to the heat, or lack of it, in certain offices? I thoroughly agree with the policy of conserving energy, but I think we might also do a little to conserve senators. I find that there is at least one other senator having the same experience as I, that is that the office is very chilly.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the Honourable Senator Forsey has correctly ascertained that there is a concerted effort on the part of the government to conserve energy. Allegations have been made—allegations not confined to members of this chamber—that some of the building temperatures being maintained may be somewhat lower than those levels necessary for human survival. I wish to assure the honourable senator that an inquiry will go forward and I shall bring his observations to the attention of the appropriate authorities.

Senator Flynn: Who are the appropriate authorities?

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

LEGISLATION—QUESTION

Senator Olson: Can the Leader of the Government give us today, or very shortly, an indication of the magnitude of the number of bills that the government intends to initiate in this chamber during this session?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that is a matter for discussion. I hope that at some time before we adjourn this week, information can be made available to members of the Senate in that respect. There are indications, on the basis of the gracious Speech delivered yesterday by Her Majesty the Queen, that this will be a very busy and productive session for all of us.

Senator Flynn: You should move the motion for an Address in reply.

RULES OF THE SENATE

AMENDMENTS

Senator Molson: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wonder if I might have leave to call your attention to the fact that you will find in your desks today a revised copy of the Rules of the Senate.

It will be recalled that the rules were revised during the last session, and it was agreed that the revisions would become effective with the opening of the new session, which was yesterday. The amendments will be easily identified, and I would suggest that if you do not have a particular reason for retaining your old copy of the rules you leave that copy on your desk at the end of today's sitting so that it may be picked up and returned to the Law Clerk. From this point on the Rules of the Senate, amended as of October 18, 1977, will govern our conduct.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I wonder if I might make an observation. I seem not to have been the beneficiary of the distribution system, unless I misunderstood the honourable senator, because the only book I see on my desk is dated 1976, and has in it a number of notes which I made on another occasion. I am wondering if perhaps I missed something.

Sometimes, you know, a little comment will bring about miraculous results. Since beginning my remarks, a copy of the revised Rules of the Senate has landed on my desk. I wonder if we could be assured that when we address similar comments to the Leader of the Government, the response will be as prompt and effective as when we address comments to Senator Molson.

Senator Molson: Honourable senators, I suppose it would be out of order to say that the honourable senator's situation has been covered by rule X, which is that the squeaky wheel gets the grease.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask the chairman of the Rules Committee if it is the intention to update Appendix 1, which is a very important appendix to our rules. It lists related documents which affect our procedures and rights and privileges in the Senate. The appendix is very much out of date, and I imagine the Law Clerk could easily bring it up to date.

● (1410)

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of Her Majesty the Queen's Speech at the opening of the Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament.

Hon. Royce Frith moved:

That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:
Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Majesty for the Gracious Speech which Your Majesty has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

He said: Honourable senators, before speaking in support of this motion, I should like to make a brief reference to the last session, which was my first session as a member of Parliament. I want to take this occasion to pay my compliments to and thank the Speaker, and to congratulate her on the resumption of another, and I hope long, gracious, warm and good-humoured reign. I also want to express my thanks and appreciation to the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the deputy leader for their thorough, skilful and, to me, most impressive attention to the Senate's business; to our smiling, efficient, velvet-gloved but iron-fisted Whip, Senator Petten, and also, if I may, honourable senators, to the Leader of the Opposition, the Honourable Jacques Flynn, P.C., and his colleagues, for what seemed to me to be their very loyal, effective work in the Senate in circumstances that I think should be acknowledged as difficult, having regard for the obligations that he and his colleagues have both in the Senate and in the manning of committees. The way they have carried that burden has earned the respect and admiration of us all.

If I may, I should like to add just one other word of appreciation for the staff, and to say how proud I was yesterday to be a senator playing, with all of you my colleagues, host to the House of Commons and many distinguished guests, and participating in an impressive and moving ceremony that went so well. In my experience, things like that just do not happen without hours and hours of hard detailed work by the staff.

Honourable senators, it is a privilege to be given the opportunity to move this motion, and a privilege to be a Canadian in these times—although I am beginning to understand that famous Chinese curse: May you live in interesting times.

The 25 years of Her Majesty's reign have certainly been interesting times. Perhaps it was less of a strain to be a Canadian in the more bountiful and placid fifties, when Her Gracious Majesty was crowned, than it is in the year of her jubilee, but I think that most of us welcome today's chance to test our individual and national mettle.

In speaking in support of the motion, honourable senators, I wish to examine an important theme that I heard throughout the Speech from the Throne. It seems to me that Her Majesty's gracious Speech to both houses of Parliament clearly addressed problems in terms of people and, in doing so, recognized the alienation and frustration of the individual human being in post-industrial society.

The Speech looks at unemployment, for example, in terms of its human hardship; not in terms of global statistics. It speaks of food and energy in terms of self-reliance and conservation; of the northern pipeline in terms of government consultation and native rights; of unity in terms of alienation, inequality and economic injustice. It speaks of finding the cause of problems in the human spirit, of the need to listen to each other, of generosity, of the realm of the spirit and the rediscovery of the spirit of the country that is in all of us. It speaks of learning from those who are interested in Canada and who have thoughts on how it can be a better place in which to live; of language rights of those who are members of minorities; of public access to official documents; and of a new era.

In the 25 years that have led to this Silver Jubilee, the world has changed dramatically, and so has our country. Our own experience confirms Alvin Toffler's analysis of accelerated change—change that has taken place in 25 years that in earlier times took 100 years or more. Canada, as we know it today, has come a long way from the Canada we knew in the 1950s.

I do not believe it is just retrospect that makes me remember the year of Her Majesty's Coronation as a time when the world was a much simpler place. First, the industrialized world was just beginning to recover from the Second World War's acute polarization of purpose, and the Third World was only on the threshold of its thrust towards independence.

In Canada, change was taking place rapidly in an era of common purpose and optimism about the future. As we headed toward the age of affluence, our standard of living improved steadily and quickly. More and more parents could afford to give their children a university education, science and technology were advancing, everything seemed possible, and there was little time to think about where growth was leading us. We were confident that we were heading toward the most sophisticated and affluent society in the history of mankind. Now, with perhaps some collective humility, we can pause to admit that we ran aground somewhere along the way.

● (1420)

The whole experience is a stunning one for the individual, particularly in the post-industrial world. McLuhan's "global village" is here and it is too big. The city dweller feels alone in too big a community, and begins organizing "block" and "village" communities; and even the rural dweller, who may have a warmer sense of community, feels cut off from and often ignored by those making decisions affecting his or her life. Smaller social, political and even spiritual universes become more attractive. People begin turning inward. Even students tend to abandon the collective causes of the sixties for more personal and introspective interests. People are reacting against bigness and remoteness. There is a sense of frustration born of circumstances that are beyond the control of individuals. We long for what Martin Luther King called "a sense of 'somebodyness'".

In its demographic manifestation this phenomenon of individualism becomes regionalism: the regionalism that pits our provinces against each other and makes us emphasize differences to justify identity rather than rejoicing that these distinctions are complementary elements of a greater, more stimulating, entity. It is the same regionalism that impels the Basques of Spain, the Bretons of France, the Scots and the Welsh to look for separate independence rather than federal independence in a greater country.

In that context, Canadian regionalism, gnawing at the fabric of our nation, is in many ways a petty reaction to the complexities of a global village that daily show up in our homes in too vivid, too living colour to be ignored with news of one or the other of its troubled regions. The same individualism is a reaction of the multiplication of "causes" that solicit our involvement. As we become more educated, as communications networks grow, and as we become more conscious of the entire world, we feel the pressure for "concern"—concern about Vietnam, the seals, South Africa, the elephants, democracy in India, oil drilling in the Beaufort, the PLO, the Canadian snow goose, Israel, the leopards, drought, Indian land rights, earthquakes in Guatemala, French schools in Essex County, chemical pollution in Dryden, James Bay and in the world's oceans, French in the air, freedom in Uganda—all with merit and all strident.

Of course, the concern for causes, for one's fellow human being, is the dynamo for all social reform; but the true obligation of a human being is also to himself. Here is Louis Pauwels:

[Translation]

There is something more important and more fundamental than the ideal social order, that is the actual inner order; there is nothing, but nothing, more precious to man than his inner order.

[English]

Where do we find the balance? As our colleague Senator Lamontagne puts it, where do we find the "equilibrium between freedom and consensus"? We have tried to find solutions in confrontation—synthesis in the adversary system, management versus labour, government versus government, native versus white, farmer versus consumer, fisherman versus canner—and it has not worked. After more than two decades of confrontation and protest perhaps we are ready to discover the value and benefits of cooperation, and pass from "we" and "them" to just "we".

Can we, as uninvolved citizens, raging about what they—government, labour, business or whoever—are doing to us or not doing for us, become involved in something useful, something satisfying? Most feel that they cannot participate in the political process, and that they cannot influence the way their lives are being affected by big companies, big unions, big government, but these same frustrations led to one of the greatest, genuine populist movements in North America—the populist movement of the late 1800s in the United States. Lawrence Goodwyn in a recent book, Democratic Promise—The Populist Moment in America, describes and analyzes this populist movement and speaks of a need for the people to "see themselves experimenting in democratic forms." The movement was a manifestation of the kind of popular will that is capable of mobilizing energies and forces, capable of evolving solutions that are in unison with the feelings of the people—the vital juices of a community or a nation.

According to polls on the subject, respondents feel that the simple citizen has little or no influence on the future of the country, that the business world exercises a great influence, and that even the Prime Minister has less influence than the tycoons. But must that be true? Plato said that the best unifying agent is an enemy at the gate. Have we seen the enemy? Is it us—parochial and-proud-of-it us?

The challenge is great because we may be on the threshold of a fundamental reassessment of our values—a fundamental reassessment of what Canada means to each one of us and of what kind of Canada we want for ourselves, our children and their children. In particular, how do we want to be governed and how do we want to participate in the decisions that affect us? If our problems are not uniquely Canadian but are simply our version of a worldwide phenomenon, then the séparatistes in Québec will not convince their francophone compatriots that theirs is an exotic and unique malaise. The essence of Québec séparatisme is the manifestation of a worldwide phenomenon.

But the challenge is not thereby less great because what is required is a fundamental reassessment of our values, a fundamental reassessment of what Canada means to each one of us and of what kind of Canada we want.

How far are we ready to go to restructure our society?

To define the symptoms, we may need to continue our sessions of organized, structured "collective self-analysis" in conferences and task forces. We need this debate and dialogue between the various interests. We should continue to have both experts and lawyers taking a thorough look at our Constitution to see whether or not changes are needed and, if so, to say what changes. I hope that the matter of constitutional amendment will be addressed in this debate by our learned colleague, Senator Forsey, and others.

All these elements—debate, dialogue, analysis and reform—are important ones in defining the problems, but a lasting remedy will only come through the political process and from people-participation in the political process. If the frustration and the alienation we have been speaking of are real, then more people will voluntarily become involved in the political process to take advantage of an opportunity most of our fellow human beings on this planet do not have.

I believe the pressures of this populist phenomenon have already been transformed into political reality. Studies show that until recently only 10 to 20 per cent of the population really engaged in any way in the political process. In saying that I am referring to engagement ranging all the way from engagement in political campaigns, at the ballot box, as candidates in federal, provincial or municipal "legislatures", organized participation through political parties or voluntary associations, and consultative participation.

● (1430)

The consultative participation is particularly important as evidence of the growing expectation that interested groups have a right to be consulted, and the realization by governments that they need to be consulted. Of course, the immediacy of some decisions makes prolonged consultation impossible, but many, if not most, of the decisions taken can and should involve consultation with the people whose rights and lives are being affected. The pipeline hearings are dramatic evidence of this trend. So is the practice established some years ago by the government to extend the process of consultation by the use of white papers, royal commission inquiries and the presentation of briefs to the cabinet.

More such participatory action helps close the alienation gap and engages citizens in the political process in every way, including party political activity and participation in and between elections. Such activity would bring us genuinely to grips with the essence of our particular version of this worldwide phenomenon, the separatist movement in Quebec.

That "problem", as it is called, only genuinely commanded our attention after a hundred years of "concern" because of a political event, the Quebec election of November 15, 1976. Then, through the political process—not by referendum, not by editorials, not by dialogue, not by conference, not by learned articles, not by constitutional amendment, but by the only truly significant political event in a democracy, an election—a political party capable of bringing about separatism took power. While it is true that it did not win that power on a separatist platform, it is there, in power, as a result of a political event. Only an equivalent political event removing it from, or confirming it in, power will deal directly with the question of national unity.

Honourable senators, I have a few words to say about the Senate. If we are looking at a worldwide phenomenon demanding fundamental re-examination of our society, our values and our institutions, what is the Senate's role in that process?

Since its origin as a founding institution of Confederation, with the duty to protect provincial and minority rights, the Senate has evolved into an institution doing more than that. The Senate has exercised its duty to apply sober second thought to legislation, and has at the same time evolved a highly effective committee system—probably the part of the Senate's work that is unanimously admired and respected.

As is to be expected, and indeed encouraged in a free country, the Senate's work has been the subject of criticism, and there has been a recurring and sometimes strident cry for Senate reform, a cry that comes from outside the Senate itself.

Meanwhile the Senate's work has continued, and an important part of its committee work has been the very examination and study of changing Canadian social, political and economic values. Its excellent reports on those subjects to the nation have played, and continue to play, an important role in our country's life. Who, then, is better able to weigh and evaluate proposals for Senate reform than the Senate itself through the work of a special committee?

What I am proposing, honourable senators, for your earnest consideration, is the establishment of a committee of the Senate to study proposals for Senate reform, wherever they may come from and whatever they may be. The committee and the Senate can then report to Canadians, as it has done on many other important Canadian issues, how the Senate itself feels it can best serve fundamental, social and political changes that world and Canadian institutions require for the next twenty-five years of Her Gracious Majesty's reign.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand: Honourable senators, first of all I would like to congratulate my colleague, Senator Frith. By the same token, I would like to include all the names he mentioned at the beginning as those people who in this house, if you like, make a daily worthy contribution. I will not repeat the names but I wholeheartedly agree.

Honourable senators, for the past year, probably like many Canadians, I have been trying to understand what was going on in the country. I read just about everything that can be written on Canada, on the Constitution or constitutional reform, and on the way to remake the country in order to change the things that seem to stand correcting.

My Quebec colleagues will no doubt forgive me for a few minutes if I try to bring you up to date on what has happened in Quebec and place you in the context of the November 15, 1976 election. As you know, I participated in that election. It is needless for me to tell you the results. Anyway, if you went through the election, as I did, it is crystal clear that on November 15, 1976 the province of Quebec did not put a separatist party in power. What happened was there were so many grievances against the government or governments that the impossible happened.

Well, many of you know politics, and you know full well that when the electorate is unhappy, the first candidate who shows up gets it in the kisser, because nobody makes a fine distinction between jurisdictions, the Olympics, the dairy policy and indeed all the problems that may arise such as strikes in hospitals and schools, inflation, unemployment and what have you. The electorate will have a mass reaction when dissatisfied with the way it is being governed. I am not saying that Mr. Bourassa was responsible for all of that; I am just saying that he is the one who received the blow. And a severe blow it was, for he lost over half of his seats, retaining only some forty of them.

I am not saying either that the November 15 Quebec election was not an important one, honourable senators; in fact, that a separatist party should be in power in Quebec is very significant. This very fact is big with consequences. Therefore, I must not ignore it. But I suggest that this is not the true will of the people. If you consider what the political situation was in the province of Quebec on November 15, 1976, you will realize that the PQ was the only party which could really take advantage of the people's discontent. It was the only one which was well organized. In the Union Nationale party, Mr. Bellemare who had been elected following a by-election was practically alone. On the other hand, Social Crediters were also nearing the point of extinction. Therefore, what was left? Only the PQ, which was well organized, not only at the National Assembly level, but also within the various counties.

In order to gain the people's confidence and not scare the voters away, it came up with a great assurance which could be summarized as follows—certainly a master stroke: Gentlemen, voting for us is not voting for separation. It is voting against the Bourassa administration. The referendum will come later. So there are a great many people who voted against the Bourassa administration and for the PQ party who were not at all PQ sympathizers. It is a fact that many English-speaking Montrealers voted for the PQ, whether you like it or not. It was the only logical move. They rationalized: When and if a referendum is held, we will put an end to this movement. However, when a party forms a government and administers a budget of some $12 billion, you realize that many things may happen on the way.

[Senator Marchand.]

Therefore, there are two assurances of the PQ government which we must keep in mind. The first one is that a referendum will be held on the separation issue. The second one is that the Quebec government would behave until such time like any other ordinary government, which it has failed to do, unfortunately.

● (1440)

[English]

I do not think that the PQ government behaved in the manner of a normal provincial government. I could give many examples of this. For instance, you know that they even refused to participate in a meeting at which the Honourable André Ouellet was the speaker—and Mr. Ouellet is not someone from Calgary; his home is in Charlesbourg, Quebec. Of course, any provincial minister could have gone and said he thought that the federal government should be out of this field. That is something that could be discussed. However, the attitude that was taken was one of refusal, and not only in that case but at certain international conferences too. Mr. Louis O'Neill refused to participate in the federal-provincial conference on communications.

To tell me that they respected the word they gave to the population of Quebec is not correct. I regret saying it, but they did not respect their word. So right now, while we read many good things, such as the speeches of Senator Lamontagne and Senator Forsey and certain articles in the newspapers, the thing which worries me is that I have never seen in the history of the world a country which can be changed in that manner without terrible cost. It is not sufficient to simply decide to sit around a table and modify the whole thing, unless it is after a crisis of some kind like a civil war, or a war.

[Translation]

A great French author once said:

What is a border? A border is usually drawn as a result of a war or as an indication of a balance of forces.

Such is the definition of a border. So whenever things are explained to me I want to understand them because I take them seriously. I may be wrong but I would like someone to tell me clearly what precisely is the proposal. For instance, when the Parti Québécois says it is in favour of sovereignty-association, well, it is quite hypothetical. Indeed no one in Canada has ever given any definition of these terms. On what would agreement be reached, on what association, under what terms and conditions? No one knows. When people go to the polls, they will not know on what they have to vote. They will not know what kind of country they are building. Do you believe such an effort of the mind is possible? There is only one way, I suggest, only one way that is honest, proper and frank under the circumstances: there must be a referendum to answer a "yes or no" question. Are we to preserve this country or to separate it? Afterwards, we shall sit down if necessary and discuss together what our new country should be. This is, in my view, the only way to proceed if we do not want to be in a mess.

As you know, I have heard all the other arguments, for instance "let us be flexible" and so on. Flexible on what? I, for one, am quite prepared to be as flexible as possible, but I would like to know in what matters precisely I should be so. They do not say. They refer to very general concepts. Therefore, one thing is certain, the sooner this referendum takes place the better for everybody—Quebecers as well as other Canadians. The sword of Damocles cannot hang this way over the people's head, as it is at present, without running into a disaster, because people want to know where this adventure will lead them. Then, what will happen? What kind of formula will be used? I read the white paper on the referendum. Well, I am sorry to say it is not honest to ask a question in this way of the people.

It does not mean that a large majority of Quebecers are in favour of separatism. I, for one, was a separatist at the age of 17. It is not a crime in itself. On the contrary, it is a crime to manipulate people and force them to go where they do not want to go. It is both criminal and unfair. We are therefore at this stage of our proceedings. An inquiry has been undertaken under the chairmanship of Mr. Robarts and Mr. Pepin. The more opinions that will be expressed, the better it will be. I have no objection to that, but it reminds me of what goes on in a laboratory. In a lab, it is possible to have several guinea pigs; if one is a failure, another is used, but you cannot do that with a nation. You see, there are some people who believe that they can break up a country without taking the consequences. It is impossible. It has never been the case and never will be. If you break up a country, bad feelings will last a long time, if not always. Therefore, I believe that if one wants to be really honest, one must say those things and that if separation occurs, and I sincerely believe this, Quebecers will have a high price to pay. Very high! I do not object to their saying it to them and perhaps our people are willing to make that sacrifice. But it is to mislead them to make them believe that our problems will be easily resolved afterwards.

[English]

I was listening to some people saying that one of the main causes of Quebec's wanting to separate is unemployment. Come on! You have never been in Quebec if you think that way. The support the PQ got was not in the poor regions of Quebec, but in Montreal, where people are working and earning good wages. That is where they got the support of teachers and students. Do not come and tell me it was because of unemployment in Quebec. The province would have separated two or three generations ago if that were the case.

Don't think I like the unemployment there is in Quebec. All I am saying is that it is not the cause of the secessionist movement. Think of the Gaspé, and the St. Lawrence and Lake St. John regions, where in the winter there is sometimes 20 or 25 per cent unemployment. Those are not the places where the separatists are the strongest.

It is often repeated that the federal government is for the status quo. French Canadians have been in this country for many years, and they have had, and will continue to have, many reasons for complaint. In the reports of the B and B

Commission we can read of all kinds of vexations and injustices. Just read them, and you will have all the complaints you need.

However, if each country in which there have been problems is going to proceed backwards, and try to correct past injustices, I think the world would turn out to be an awful hell. If things had not turned out in the manner in which they did, such as in the case of the war of secession in the United States, why not start it all over again? Consider for a moment the way in which France was united, the way in which Italy was united, and even the way in which Britain, at one time, was united. History is full of situations which are impossible to correct after centuries have passed.

Sometimes, from places in the west, I hear things like: "Those damn French Canadians, we're going to teach them a lesson. We're going to start 1760 all over again, and they're going to get it." Such talk is entirely silly and irresponsible. You know, this is not much better than what we hear sometimes in Quebec. So I tell those people that a big country, the United States of America, tried to control Vietnam and did not succeed. So I do not believe that we should look in that direction for a sound solution.

I am not trying to provoke; I am not trying to start a war of any kind. All I want you to understand is that we must be realistic. We have a living country, and it is just like a human being, in that it cannot be operated on in the same manner as cattle.

● (1450)

[Translation]

It would not be the same thing, for sure.

So, now you have people saying they are going to revamp the whole country. You have the Maritimes. You have Prince Edward Island. You have New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. They are going to make five or six regions. They are going to have a corridor. In short, 150 different theories can be had. But the one thing we know for sure is that Canada is what it is, and the only thing to do if we do not want to break it down is to change it by meeting and negotiating honestly and seeking solutions to our problems. We know that the Constitution must be amended. It was amended several times in the past and will again be in the future. There is probably not enough flexibility in this area. The Russians have just amended theirs. They did it by a show of hands and they immediately sent it to the moon. I think it did not get there, for that matter. But, in any case, the Constitution can be amended, and, as I suggested, there has probably been too much rigidity in this area. But I do not think it is possible to continue playing this game of hide-and-seek. We are going to separate or we are not going to. That is the basic issue. Once it has been dealt with, it will be time for the constitutionalists, the specialists, to try and correct what is wrong in our constitutional structures. But not under the threat of a separation that nobody has been elected to bring about—I repeat, that nobody has been elected to bring about.

When I read some of our newspapers, I get the impression that that is what was decided on November 15 and that the problem has been solved. I am sorry, but that was not decided on November 15.

So it will take a lot of co-operation on everybody's part. I think the Senate can certainly provide a worthwhile co-operation. The idea put forward by my colleague, Senator Frith, is quite acceptable to me. I do not see why we should not try to re-think our role in this whole government process. I am thinking of the role of the Senate. Perhaps that could be dealt with and we could look for a way to correct and amend our instruments of work. None of those things are impossible to do, but they can only be done in a serene state of mind. I do not mean that there will be no tensions. There are always tensions wherever you have overlapping jurisdictions. Municipalities apply pressure on the provinces, the provinces apply pressure on the federal state. So one must not expect that there will be no tensions but those tensions must be productive. They must benefit the country as a whole, and the only way to do that is to meet in frank discussions.

I suggest we must stop dreaming in colours. I am sick and tired of these people who are doing everything they can to destroy this country and then, the next day, represent it to me in an unrecognizable way, for I know it is impossible to do what they are saying. It is impossible from an ideal point of view, still less so with a country which is already organized, with ties between its various parts and indeed with the United States, a country which has always behaved and still behaves according to basic principles. In my opinion, we must start from there. I feel that we should all together try to convince Mr. Lévesque to hold his referendum as soon as possible, so that we may finally know where we stand and shed our poker faces, because we have no indication as to what tomorrow may bring.

Therefore, honourable senators, I take great pleasure in supporting the motion introduced by Senator Frith.

Senator Flynn: I move that this debate be adjourned until next Tuesday. Until then, we shall have ample time to think this matter over.

On motion of Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.
[English]

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

---

THE SENATE

Thursday, October 20, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of a Memorandum of Understanding between the Department of National Revenue, Taxation and the Department of the Solicitor General of Canada, with respect to combatting Organized Crime through prosecution under the Income Tax Act, dated April 27, 1972.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, October 25, 1977, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Honourable senators, before the question is put I should like to give a brief outline of the work for next week. We shall continue with the Throne Speech debate and the debate on Senator Argue's inquiry calling the attention of the Senate to the interim report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, which was authorized in the last session of Parliament to inquire into the desirability of long-term stabilization of the Canadian beef industry.

Motion agreed to.

ALASKA HIGHWAY PIPELINE

PLANNING AND CO-ORDINATING AUTHORITY—QUESTION

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

What has the government done to create immediately a pipeline authority to co-ordinate planning and programs involving the Alaska Highway pipeline? Has there been, or will there be, Yukon involvement in developing the single regulatory authority?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I must take that important question as notice. I hope that it will be possible to have a reply during the coming week.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

LEGISLATION—QUESTION

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, in relation to a question I asked yesterday, the Leader of the Government said he would be prepared to reply before the Senate adjourned this week. My question related to the number of bills it is proposed to initiate in the Senate.

I am wondering whether it is too early to ask for that reply now.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, unfortunately, the government house leader in the other place is ill. It is hoped that he will be restored to his usual vigour and good health very shortly. Because the essence of the honourable senator's question is primarily a subject for discussion between the house leaders in both places, there has been a delay in obtaining an answer to the question posed by the honourable senator. Hopefully at the beginning of next week we will have a better idea of where our legislative program lies.

Senator Flynn: Did you say "subject to discussion" or "subject to disposition" by—

Senator Perrault: The word, of course, is "discussion".

AGRICULTURE

"RECOGNIZING THE REALITIES: A BEEF IMPORT POLICY FOR CANADA"—INTERIM REPORT ON CANADIAN BEEF INDUSTRY— DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Hazen Argue rose pursuant to notice of October 19, 1977:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the interim report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, appointed in the last session of Parliament and authorized in that session to examine from time to time any aspect of the agricultural industry in Canada, on its inquiry into the desirability of long-term stabilization in the Canadian beef industry, entitled: "Recognizing the Realities: A Beef Import Policy for Canada", tabled in the Senate on Friday, 14th October, 1977.

He said: Honourable senators, I am very pleased to speak in the chamber at this time with regard to this report.

● (1410)

This report is the result of a tremendous amount of work done by members of the committee—that is to say, by the senators who are members of the committee; by our research staff, Mr. Albert Chambers and Mr. Rick Andrews, by Mr. Len Christie of the Research Branch of the Library of Parliament, and by the people who appeared before that committee. I should also like to acknowledge, in particular, the contributions made in releasing the report by Senator Molgat, who held a press conference in Winnipeg, and Senator Sparrow, who held a press conference in Saskatoon. Senator Hays had hoped to be able to hold a press conference in Calgary but was unable to do so.

The report was also made possible by the generous support given the Agriculture Committee by the Senate itself, by the members of the Internal Economy Committee and, in particular, by Senator Perrault, the government leader in the Senate who encouraged and supported us in proceeding with this inquiry.

I should also like to add that this is a non-partisan report which has the support of all the members of the committee. In that connection, I acknowledge the work done by Senator Yuzyk both in the committee itself and on the steering committee during the time the report was being prepared. I know it is somewhat dangerous to name specifically certain people because it is always possible to overlook others who made an equal contribution. However, the acknowledgements are in the report itself, which mentions the senators who travelled west, namely, Senator Michaud, Senator Norrie, Senator Belisle, Senator Hays, Senator Sparrow, Senator Molgat and myself. I shall also mention Senator A. H. McDonald who assisted in drafting the report.

This is the third report to be presented by the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture. The first report had to do with Kent County, and I suggest that the beneficial effects of that report are still being felt, and will continue to be felt and to bear fruit in the days ahead. The second report had to do with crop insurance, the main result of which was to give producers in the three prairie provinces access to an improved and more uniform type of crop insurance.

I hope that this report, as we discuss it in the chamber and with the Government of Canada, provincial governments and the producers' organizations, will result in the same kind of acceptance and the same kind of implementation.

This study was undertaken not in any frivolous way, but because there was a very serious problem which had developed in the Canadian beef industry over recent years. Up until perhaps 1973 the trend had been for beef prices to go up. Cattle production in Canada had been going up, and then, in 1973, a freeze was imposed by the Government of the United States on beef prices in that country and the American cattle producers reacted by not sending their cattle to market. As a result, there was a very large market in the United States for Canadian cattle, and our cattle went into that market. When the controls came off in the United States, the trend was reversed, and there developed an unstable market with, in one instance, the cattle going south and, in the other instance, the cattle coming north. Beginning at that time, and aggravated by the whole DES controversy with regard to hormone feeding of cattle for extra gains in weight, difficulties came about in the beef industry by way of prices. There have been intermittent periods when quotas have been imposed and then removed; when the Canadian government has removed all tariffs against United States cattle and then restored them; and when the Canadian government has doubled those tariffs and then reduced them.

[Senator Argue]

The beef business became so disorganized that the federal government had to bring in legislation to provide a certain measure of stability, but that was not done in a particularly certain and clear fashion because the support prices that were provided could vary between 90 per cent and 100 per cent of the prices obtained in the previous five years. There was uncertainty as to the amount of the support price and the level of the support price. There was uncertainty as to the number of cattle that would qualify for the support price. Some said there should be a limit; some said there should be no limit whatsoever. So, while these measures have been made effective, there has at times been a limit on the number of cattle that a given owner could qualify under this program.

It has been a hodge-podge. It has been a mixed-up situation, and during the whole period of time cattle prices fell to an exceedingly low figure. Now, while there has been a modest or moderate improvement in cattle prices recently in this country, probably in substantial measure because of the current discount on the Canadian dollar, the industry remains in a depressed and uncertain condition.

Almost without exception, the spokesmen for the industry who appeared before the committee agreed that there should be on the statute books of this country an import law that would outline the imports to be allowed into this country in a normal situation, that would tell the producers what they could look forward to by way of retaining a reasonable share of the Canadian market, and that would make it impossible in future for a situation such as that which developed in 1976 to develop again in this country. Last year huge quantities of beef from New Zealand and Australia came in and severely depressed our own market. At times it was selling at 27½ cents per pound under the price of the same product coming from the same countries and placed on the United States market. That raised hell with our markets. The producers understood what had happened. They came before the committee and repeated the representations they had made to the government when they asked for a beef import law.

The terms of reference of the Agriculture Committee are broad. We have to go beyond this interim report which deals with imports and an import law, and deal with the whole question of stabilization, and look, perhaps, at the grading system, at the marketing system and at the information system. But this report, while it is only an interim report, is nevertheless a major report and it does cover the beef industry in depth.

One of the questions asked most frequently—I believe Senator Hays asked it of every single witness who came before our committee—was: Do you think we should have a beef industry in Canada? The second most frequent question was: Do you think we can compete?

Well, our beef industry is obviously important to the beef producers, but we think it is important to the nation as a whole. The income from beef, in terms of agricultural products, is second only to the income received by the grain producers.

The meat packing industry of this country is a major industry. It is the largest single food industry in Canada. It is the third largest manufacturing industry, exceeded only by the automobile and small appliance industries.

● (1420)

In 1971 the beef industry contributed 12 per cent of the gross national product. I suggest that the most important part of the beef industry are those tens of thousands of beef producers all across this country. We consider it to be such a major industry, and so important to this country, that it behooves the Canadian government, the provincial governments, the House of Commons, the Senate, and all those interested in the national welfare, to ensure that beef producers have policies which will enable them to stay in business.

No beef producing country in the world that I know of, or have read about, takes the attitude: We will open our borders, we will let everyone ship into our country without quotas or restrictions, because we believe in free trade. No country that I know of is doing that. If any did, it would wipe out its beef industry. Our beef industry would not last more than a couple of years if we opened our doors without restriction to countries which obviously have lower costs of production.

We consider it important to keep our Canadian beef industry, an industry supported by 24 million acres of grain and hay, and by 45 million acres of pastureland. Would we consider for one moment letting this part of our nation go barren because we said we were going to give away the beef industry, because of short-sighted policies, to suppliers in other countries?

Therefore, after looking at the whole question very thoroughly and having held hearings in many parts of the country—there were nine public hearings across Canada, and many hearings in Ottawa—we have brought forward certain proposals.

Honourable senators, we sometimes wonder how the public views the Senate, whether it gives us any credence, and whether it considers us of any importance in the public life of this country. I wish to say that beef producers without exception—and that includes approximately 1,800 who attended our meetings—were pleased that senators had given them an opportunity to air their views. At all of the meetings, and in all the representations, not one single word of criticism of the Senate as an institution was uttered. They were glad we were there; they appreciated the opportunity to present their views; and they felt that what the senators were doing was important to them.

The Senate may or may not be considered in the best light in certain areas, but I suggest that leaders of agriculture in this country look to the Senate to provide a forum for their views; they look to knowledgeable and sympathetic senators, who are present in this chamber in large numbers, to present their views and to take action wherever possible on their behalf.

I believe that our report looks at the questions reasonably and sensibly. We are promoting policies that should lend themselves to sympathetic consideration by the government.

The first thing we propose—something which, I suggest, is pretty simple—is that we should have a policy, that we should not proceed without a policy, and that the policy should be a long-term one.

The second suggestion is that there be established basic quotas on imports into Canada based on long-term averages of a nation's access to our market, in such a way as to reflect their historic position and to be fair both to their producers and our own. Those quotas should be known and placed in the law so that each country involved will know exactly where it stands.

We are not suggesting that there should be rigid or fixed quotas. When these quotas are established—based on an historical average calculated over the period from 1967 to 1974, which is a period covering years when we were net exporters of beef and years when we were net importers of beef, and which, in our opinion, is a reasonable and fair base period to take—we suggest that for the future they should be adjusted upwards when beef consumption in Canada on a per capita basis increases. If we eat more beef in Canada, we can allow more imports. Also, as our population goes up, we can allow more imports in relation to our increase in population. We should not try to produce everything ourselves. We should work with and co-operate with our neighbours and friends in a fair and reasonable fashion.

However, we have also put forward a third factor, which is along these lines: when the production of beef goes up in this country, we should reverse the policy that we have tended to have, and the policy that the Americans have expressed in their beef import law, namely, that when domestic production goes up, imports go up. We think this should be reversed. We think that when our own production goes up, there should be fewer imports. That only stands to reason. When we are producing more ourselves, or when we are producing a relatively larger proportion of our own market, we should accept less from the United States, Australia and New Zealand.

I do not want to give too many quotes today, but I was most interested to hear the recommendation of the Honourable Marvin Moore, the Alberta Minister of Agriculture, that:

The Government of Canada should impose annual global quotas (with quarterly limits) on imports of live and processed beef.

Quotas for live and processed beef exports from the United States should be established to guarantee equal market share, if possible.

In other words, the Minister of Agriculture of Alberta recommended that our quotas should not apply only to Australia and New Zealand, but should apply in a fair manner to all of those nations, including the United States, our good friends, who have access to our market.

We have suggested that there should be a very modest increase in the tariff. I do not think we put that forward as such an important proposal that everything else hinges on it, but we think it is important, nevertheless. The high cost of producing beef in Canada, as compared to that in the United States, was pointed out to us so frequently that we had to be impressed. If you think of our climate only, it is certainly a fact that we have six months of winter in many parts of the country, during which the cattle have to be housed and fed, making it necessary to put up feed in the summer in order to feed the cattle in the winter. Certainly from that point of view alone we have much higher costs of production than they do in the United States, where the climate is milder, and where, in some parts of the country, there is grazing for 12 months of the year.

The statistics produced by our research people suggest that the cost of producing calves is 10.54 cents a pound higher in Canada than in the United States, and that the cost of feeding in certain parts of Canada—for example in Alberta, as compared to Nebraska, a central state—is some 6.99 cents a pound higher in Canada. It seems, therefore, that a five-cent tariff on a continuing basis would be a reasonable position for Canada to take. The tariff is now three cents a pound, so the suggestion that it be increased to five cents is scarcely a revolutionary one and, in our view, is realistic.

In recommendation 4 we suggest that provision be made for the levying of additional duties, and this is probably the crux of the whole report. The committee recommends that there be established a guide price for Canadian beef—a price that we think is reasonable and fair. If the domestic price for beef, and the return to the domestic producer, should fall below the guide price, then the amount by which it falls below the guide price should be added, by way of an additional levy, to the existing tariff. If the price of our beef is ten cents a pound below the guide price, for example, then an additional five cents a pound should be added to the tariff of five cents. It seemed to us that this was a way of fine-tuning our trade situation to reflect a reasonable return to the producers.

● (1430)

The next recommendation has to do with a maximum guide price. We said that we felt the beef producers of this country were fair-minded people. To demonstrate their fairness, if they get some protection from their returns falling below a reasonable figure, they should be prepared to tell the consumers of this country that, if the price of beef should start to rise to a point that seems particularly high or unreasonable, they will accept additional imports into Canada. Those additional imports would influence the price of beef and maintain a reasonable price in Canada—reasonable to the producer and reasonable to the consumer.

When the Canadian Association of Consumers appeared before the committee, we did not expect them to carry the ball for the beef producers. We did not expect them to make a submission that was identical to that of the beef producers. But I was impressed with the fact that they took a generally reasonable attitude. They want us to have a beef industry. As I understood their testimony they want the beef producers to be reasonably prosperous. They want the legitimate rights of the consumer protected. They want to make certain the consumer is not exploited by way of high beef prices, and the producers are not exploited by higher prices for other commodities. We think that is a reasonable position, so we inserted this recommendation, and hope it will give some assurance to the consumers.

[Senator Argue]

Whenever you make proposals with regard to the export and import of beef, you are immediately confronted with somebody saying, "Well, it would be fine to do it, but it is against GATT." The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade has two clauses to which people refer in this regard. One is clause 11. To paraphrase, it says that no country should be allowed to prevent or to control imports of beef unless there is a government program of supply management in effect. If there is no supply management program, then you are in contravention of GATT. The second provision in GATT to which I refer is that if there is temporary trouble or there appears to be a temporary emergency threatening an industry, then action can be taken on a temporary basis in order to prevent such serious injury.

In Canada we say that because of GATT we have to be careful. We do not seem to know that we can have global quotas, that we can have variable tariffs, that we can have a permanent policy in law that gives our producers some assurance.

What do the rest of the nations of the world that are in the beef business do about these provisions in GATT? One of the largest countries by way of production and by way of market is Japan. For many years, with the provisions of GATT being as they are now, Japan has had quotas on imports. The policy of the Japanese government is that 80 per cent of the beef consumed in Japan has to be produced in Japan, and their quotas reflect that policy. They have guide prices to assure reasonable returns to their producers. The Japanese have provision for the government to step into the market and buy up beef if the price starts to soften below the guide prices. If you read GATT in a technical way, then Japan honours it in the breach—and in the breach on a permanent and continuing basis.

What about the European Economic Community, that huge empire of, I believe, some nine nations who have banded themselves together? They have a beef policy which sets uniform guide prices for all of the Community. If the prices begin to fall below the guide prices, intervention is taken in the market; beef is purchased so that the price does not continue to fall. They establish what they call intervention stocks of beef, purchased by government agencies. If the price of beef falls below the guide price they bring in a tariff, an extra import duty, equal to 100 per cent of the difference. They go a little bit further. They say they will maintain additional duties until the price gets to 106 per cent of the guide price. In other words, even when the producers there are getting something better than the guide price, they still have a measure of protection.

They have also provided export subsidies so that their exporters could compete more effectively in the export market; they have had subsidies up to 25 per cent of the value of the products. To those who wish to import beef into the European Economic Community, they say, "We will give you a quota to import beef provided you buy an equivalent amount of beef from the intervention stocks." In other words, if you bring beef in from outside you have, by law, to help reduce the supply of beef in the country. That is really quite a policy.

The duties I have talked about are in addition to their other normal duties. They have ad valorem duties of 16 per cent on live cattle. Our duty is one-and-a-half cents per pound on live cattle compared with their 16 per cent ad valorem duty. On fresh chilled frozen beef their duty is 26 per cent. They have global quotas of some 34,000 tons, which, if my arithmetic is accurate, works out to 75 million pounds for perhaps 250 million people. In other words, their quotas are, in a relative sense, very meagre, very small. Today Canada's quota is 144 million pounds—that is the amount allowed into our country—of boneless beef and beef as meat for this year.

I think we have really bent over backwards in saying we are going to follow GATT to the letter of GATT. Nobody else follows GATT. By following the letter of GATT instead of the practice—and I think the practice is the more important thing—we as a nation have been sacrificing the welfare, income and livelihood of the beef producers of this country. The report of our committee suggests that that situation should come to an end.

One of the questions we face as soon as we make this kind of recommendation is: What about the Americans? What about the American market? We need the American market for live slaughter cattle at times. We need the American market for feeder cattle at times, at some times to a greater extent than at others. We need it for western feeders. The proposal put forward by the committee in no way, in our judgment, would make it more difficult for Canada to export into the United States market.

Obviously, we do not initially affect our own exports. We are saying to the United States, "We are prepared to give you an historical access to the Canadian market based on what you have been sending into our market over the years. In return, we would like you to provide us with the same kind of general historical access to your market." But let us not have 125,000 head of Canadian cattle going to the United States in 1973, for example, and 10,000 head going there in 1974. It does not make any sense. Let Canada not contribute to the troubles of the American nation by being a kind of intermediary, taking tens of millions of pounds of cheap beef—at 27 cents a pound under the United States price—from Australia and New Zealand and being a halfway house for sending it down to the United States to help destroy their market while we are destroying our own market. It is far better in our judgment to have reasonable quotas with regard to the United States based on our historical position, just as we would accept reasonable quotas from them based on our historical position. We say, "Put them in the law, make them flexible with consultation and make them changeable with consultation, but let us know where we stand."

● (1440)

This is something we are not able to quickly settle necessarily to the satisfaction of every farm organization in Canada. Some may think we have gone too far; others, those who think we require rigid supply management, will think we have not gone far enough. However, I was amazed and impressed to read a submission by the National Cattlemen's Association of the United States, by the chairman of their foreign trade committee, Mr. Peter E. Marble, to the United States International Trade Commission, a body of the American government. I have two or three brief quotes to which I would like to refer. I am quoting Mr. Marble, who is making reference to a new meat import act as it was proposed by the National Cattlemen's Association:

The act should be amended to include all beef and veal, regardless of form or origin.

In other words, live beef and live veal, no matter where it comes from.

Canadians used to think that we had a particular privilege with respect to the United States, that when they established quotas they did not affect Canada. That privileged position, or special category, has gone by the board. The United States now treats us the same as every other importer into that country, and imposes quotas against Canadian meat.

Mr. Marble continues:

If the objectives of the import law are logical—and we think that they are—then it is only logical for the law's coverage to include all forms of beef and veal. The quota—

He is talking about a quota in the proposed new beef import law for the United States:

The quota should be adjusted automatically on a counter-cyclical basis so that imports are permitted to increase when domestic supplies are limited—

The fewer domestic supplies, the more imports.

—and prices are high and are required to decrease when domestic production is cyclically excessive and market prices are depressed.

That is in line with our recommendation.

We would recommend that a representative historical average of shipments be established and that imports of live dutiable cattle not exceed an agreed per cent of that figure without consultations.

Then he goes on—and I believe we could say Amen to this—to say:

Our beef industry should have fair access to beef markets in other countries, just as this nation provides cattlemen of other nations with access to our markets.

Taking that stand of the National Cattlemen's Association in the United States, and knowing the position of the European Economic Community and of Japan, I suggest to you that by adopting the kind of policy we are proposing in this report Canada would stand in a firmer and stronger position in negotiating with the United States for access to their market, because we would be doing it on a reasonable, logical and a prior-agreed-to basis.

To get the support required in Parliament for this type of proposal we obviously must have the support of the government. Therefore, I am pleased that we are in the process of arranging informal meetings between the members of our committee and the Honourable Eugene Whelan, the Minister of Agriculture, and the Honourable Jack Horner, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, so that we can present to them for purposes of discussion the proposals that we have put forward in this report. I have been in public life in this country for a long time, and I do not expect that everything I try to do will receive general acceptance. Very often I have faced much opposition to the proposals I have made. Nonetheless, when one thinks he has something worth presenting, it should be done as well as possible, and he should stick to his guns and see what happens. This report, I am proud to say, has received support from many farm organizations in this country, and from some of the most important elements of the farm organizations. I was thrilled to have brought to my attention a press release issued by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture with regard to this report on, I believe, the very day—October 14 last—that it was tabled in the Senate. I quote from that press release:

Canadian beef producers will be greatly heartened by the recommendations of the Senate Committee on Agriculture for the beef industry of Canada, Charles Munro, President of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, said today.

The basic position of the Committee, that steps must be taken to develop a beef import policy to fairly protect the interests of the industry in reasonable security and stability of returns, is one the Federation endorses, Mr. Munro said. A definite and orderly long-term policy to give importers fair access to our markets, but to regulate the volume of those imports in such a way that producers in Canada can plan with some confidence that their returns will not be unfairly depressed by imports in excessive volume or at excessively low prices, is strongly favoured by beef producers in Canada. The Committee calls for special legislation to set up such a long-term policy.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture will be intensively studying and discussing the details and implications of the very challenging proposals of this important Senate report, Mr. Munro stated, looking to the development of a considered response and policy which will be the basis of ongoing discussion with the Government.

To conclude, I thank all those senators on the committee who took part in the hearings and in the formulation and presentation of this report. We all worked hard on it; we think it is a good report. We think, in line with the title, Recognizing the Realities: A Beef Import Policy for Canada, it states the world situation as it is. We shall continue from this time forward promoting this policy in our country in the hope that action can be taken in the interests of the beef producers and in the interests of the nation as a whole.

[Senator Argue]

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Hays: Would the honourable senator permit a question? What position did the committee take on purebred cattle and breeding stock?

Senator Argue: I thank Senator Hays for that question. We felt that it was in the interests of the beef and dairy industry throughout the world to have the largest level of improvement in production of milk, milk products and beef, and that as far as purebred and breeding animals are concerned, to improve the stock of any nation in the world, there should be no duties, no quotas. There should be free trade. Wherever necessary, negotiations should be carried on toward that objective so that herd improvement in all countries can be facilitated.

● (1450)

Senator van Roggen: I wonder if I might be permitted to put a question to the honourable senator.

In your opening remarks you said that the beef industry was the second largest industry in Canada, next only to the automobile industry.

Senator Argue: If I said it was the second largest, I was in error; I meant the third largest. As I understand it, the automobile industry is first, followed by the small appliances industry. The meat processing industry is third.

Senator van Roggen: Do you have any idea of the approximate gross figure of beef and beef cattle production in Canada?

Senator Argue: In 1976 the value of the Canadian beef herd was about $3 billion. I do not have recent figures on the value of beef production per se.

Senator van Roggen: Is it too early yet for you to give any assessment as to the effect on the beef industry of the decline of the Canadian dollar, which decline now represents approximately twice the proposed tariff of five cents per pound as recommended in the report?

Senator Argue: I could make a guess, but I do not think my guess would be any better than that of anyone else's. Obviously, a devalued dollar tends to decrease beef prices. Whether it is as automatic as it is with other commodities, such as wheat, which is basically an export commodity, I cannot say. Certainly, it tends that way.

One might now say that the proposed tariff is not needed. We thought of that. At times the Canadian dollar appreciates; at times it depreciates. There are times when it is worth more than the American dollar and times when it is worth less. We thought there may be reasons to vary the tariff. However, for the purpose of clarity and permanence, we were of the view that there was merit in having a figure that remained constant.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to begin my intervention, which will be relatively brief, by commending the members of the committee, particularly the chairman, on this interim report. I feel certain, as does Senator Argue, that the recommendations within this report are going to receive wide acceptance by producer groups all across the country.

It is clear that this interim report deals primarily—in fact, almost exclusively—with import and export trade policies respecting beef. Certainly, that is where the focus of attention has been on the part of the beef producers themselves as a result of the low prices experienced during the past few years. For that reason it was appropriate for the committee to have taken the extra effort to prepare an interim report. I think it is equally important, given the current preliminary negotiations respecting the terms and conditions of GATT, for this report to go forward at this time. I do not think the chairman, or any other member of the committee, need apologize because at this juncture some of the recommendations may be interpreted as a violation or a variation of the terms and conditions of GATT. I do not think that GATT has the same status as the tablets of stone from the mount. The terms and conditions of GATT are not written in stone. They can be changed. Indeed, many of the provisions in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade ought to be changed, if for no other reason than the fact that some countries rather meticulously live up to them while other countries have found ways of circumventing them—and the beef industry is a good example of this—to the extent that they are really meaningless. Given the various interpretations, it is hard to believe that one is a signatory to the same agreement.

So I see no problem if the Committee's recommendations are at slight variance with some of GATT's terms and conditions. Many of them should be changed anyway, and this would be a particularly appropriate time because the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade is now under scrutiny. Hopefully, this will lead to some modifications.

Honourable senators, I obviously have some reservations, given the nature of some of the recommendations, about the administrative problems. I am sure members of the committee do too; but, for the reasons I have stated, I think it is appropriate to come forward with these recommendations, notwithstanding that there could be some problems, in a general way or in a bilateral way, with some of the countries in making them administratively feasible while still attaining the desired results.

I should like now to turn to another subject matter, and that is the pricing mechanism within Canada. I consider this to be an equally important part of the task assigned to the Agriculture Committee, although it is not dealt with specifically in this report.

I was not a member of the committee during the last session. I was not summoned to the Senate until late in the session, but I did attend a number of the committee's meetings. I know that the committee endeavoured to call knowledgeable people directly involved in the brokerage and the wholesaling and retailing aspects of the Canadian beef market. Some of the witnesses did refer briefly to the pricing mechanism, but we really did not have a thorough examination of this aspect. As I said, some indications came through, and other organizations in Canada have investigated this aspect or have at least attempted to understand how the pricing mechanism works today.

It seems reasonable that if improvements to a system are going to be made, there should be an understanding of how the existing system works. You would be amazed at the number of people directly involved in the beef business who do not know how the price-setting mechanism works today. The August issue of Cattlemen, the beef industry magazine, gives a brief outline of how the pricing mechanism works today. When one looks at that article, especially in light of what some of the witnesses said in committee, one is amazed by the almost unbelievable biases that are in the system now. One of the most asinine or stupid things is that most of the beef sold in the Montreal market is shipped out of Alberta, and it is rolling towards Montreal—some of it may be in Winnipeg or in Sudbury or at other points—before the producers know what the selling price is going to be. In the beef business, as in other businesses, there is a rule that you either sell it or you smell it. If there is no purchaser of the beef by the time it gets to Montreal, the holder of the inventory—whether it be a broker, a chain store, or whatever—gets into a more distressed position hour by hour. It does not take any great understanding of the beef industry to know that that is the way the beef industry is running in Canada today. Let me read from this magazine so that you will see that my interpretation of what some of the witnesses told us is correct.

• (1500)

Killing and shipping also continue on Wednesday.

They have already been shipping on Monday and Tuesday without any sales, or at least without a price on the sales.

The Tuesday kill is generally fairly large and must be shipped on Wednesday morning to clear cooler space.

That is in western Canada.

These orders, whether standing orders or orders offered in the week's trade are shipped without a committed price—

That is something we simply have to take seriously. I do not think there is a villain, whether it is the packing houses, the broker, or anybody else, who has set up this thing. I think the system has evolved on the same basis as all other forms of commerce, and that is that you want to buy at the lowest possible price. But in this case, honourable senators, there is a built-in tendency by everyone involved in the trade to beat the price down at every stage, because they do not own the inventory. And if one or other of their competitors should be able to buy his beef the next day, or a few hours later the same day, at a lower price, then of course they are in great difficulty. So the buyers wait as long as they possibly can before they agree to a price. They even wait until Thursday or Friday, according to this article, and in the meantime the beef has been rolling since Monday from western Canada, particularly from Lethbridge and Calgary. Whether we like it or not, it is the price that is set between Lethbridge, Calgary and Montreal that determines the price of beef for the week in all other markets in Canada. That is because Montreal happens to be the largest single market.

So I suggest to you, honourable senators, that that is one reason why we need to have a good hard look at this. We certainly need to come up with some recommendations soon, and particularly in the final report.

It is also a fact—and on this point we have heard evidence—that the producer does not have any direct influence at all on the price of his product. In the long term the producers can hold back, if they are organized enough to do that, and “short” the market, but you cannot hold back very much beef once it has reached market weight because the expense of keeping cattle every day after that is prohibitive. And so the producer has no influence at all on the price of his product.

Therefore, I think it would be a very important improvement in the whole structure if we in this chamber and in the committee could find a way to ensure that some of the other people involved in the trade owned some of the inventory from the time it left the shipping plant. It seems to me it is very easy to understand that if someone has no interest in the inventory, and if he is afraid that one or other of his competitors will get a price that is a quarter of a cent or half of a cent cheaper in any given week, then he has a built-in prejudice, bias or desire—whatever you want to call it—to keep on hedging deeper and deeper, and all the while the price is being beaten down. But if he owned the inventory; if, for example, he had to buy it before it was loaded on the cars in Alberta, then from the time that invoice is made out and that beef is put on the cars he would have a vested interest in keeping the price at least that high. What is happening now is just the reverse.

Many people accuse me of being the strong advocate of hard, rigid marketing boards, and I tell you that I am not that at all. But I think the producer ought to have something to say about what his price is going to be, and if it requires some federal or provincial legislation to enable him to have an influence on what his product is going to sell for, then I think such legislation should be forthcoming. There does not need to be anything as rigid and all-encompassing as a full-fledged marketing board. All that is needed is some kind of authority that would require that the price be set when the beef is loaded and shipped so that the price is not beaten down all the way during the week. I say that, honourable senators, because this is not the first time we have run into this problem.

When I was responsible for the Department of Agriculture in this country, we had the same problem with vegetables coming in from the southern United States. They would do exactly the same thing. They would sell what they could, but if they had an extra amount of lettuce, cucumbers or tomatoes for which they did not have firm orders, they would go ahead and ship it anyway. It would start rolling toward Chicago, Detroit or Buffalo, and the closer it got to the Canadian border, if it had not already been sold, the price would start to slip. The people holding it would be willing to take a lower and lower price so that by the time it got to the Canadian border it was almost a dumping or sloughing-off operation, based on the theory of getting out from under at whatever price one could get.

[Senator Olson.]

The net result of all that was that our vegetable producers in many seasons of the year were subjected to the lowest dumped price. Do not misunderstand me; it does not quite fit the definition of “dumped”, because this produce would be offered to United States buyers at a lower price too, but a great deal of it came into Canada at a price that was much lower than the average price at which it was being sold in the United States. Canada is the next place you get to after you have passed the big markets of Chicago, Detroit and Buffalo. The unsold vegetables can be taken on to Toronto and Montreal, and by that time the owners are ready to unload them at any price they can get.

We did institute a policy—and it was not all that involved—whereby we simply said that if these cars of vegetables were going to come across the Canadian border they were going to carry a shipping bill and an invoice so that the price when they left the producer's warehouse in Texas, Arizona or California would be known. We were not going to allow those dumped cars into Canada. As I say, I use the word “dumped”, although some people will argue about it.

The same situation applies to beef, honourable senators. As I said, it would be nice if all the producers and the packing houses in Alberta and Saskatchewan got together and said, “Look, this past practice is going to end. In future if you want us to ship the beef, then you buy it. We will have an agreed price on a particular date, and we will put it on the invoice and then we will ship.” That would be nice, but I do not think it is going to happen. So, some other method will have to be introduced so that the producer can have some influence on what the price is when the beef is loaded. I am sure that everybody—Steinberg's, Loblaws, Dominion, the brokers and the packing houses—would then have a vested interest in maintaining the value of that inventory from the time it is loaded until it is sold, which is exactly the opposite of the present situation.

● (1510)

Honourable senators, I understand there will be certain witnesses appearing before the committee who have intimate knowledge of how this system works, and I raise this point because I hope it will be the major thrust of the next interim or final report of the committee. In my view, it is as important as the import-export policy. We must put some sense back into this marketing system so that the bias is at least neutral, if not in favour of the producer. It is certainly against the producer at the moment.

Honourable senators, I realize this is not the Throne Speech debate, but there is one passage from the Speech which causes me concern because it has to do with all of this marketing system and its evolution in Canada. The passage which disturbs me goes on to talk about a national food conference and other things, and then follows this one sentence:

The Government will ensure that the views of producers, processors and consumers are adequately represented on marketing boards and agencies, so that they may operate more effectively.

Well, that sounds innocent enough, but when we briefly examine what a marketing authority, agency or board is, we realize that it is supposed to be an agency set up by the producers and elected by the producers for the purpose of administering the means by which those producers will sell their services to the rest of society. There is no other purpose that I know of. If we are to have representatives of consumers and other people on such boards to decide the prices and the other terms and conditions for farmers selling their services to the rest of society, why do we not insist that there be such consumer representation on professional boards that set the schedules of fees that those professions charge for their services to the rest of society?

I know there are many lawyers in this chamber. I do not believe they have any consumers on the boards that set their schedules of fees. I do not believe dentists have consumer representation in the setting of their fee structures either.

Senator Argue: Or the banks.

Senator Olson: And what about labour unions? Do they have adequate consumer representation on their boards when they make demands for price increases in respect of their services to society? It may be a good idea, but why single out the farmer and leave everyone else alone?

If we are going to travel down this road, I suggest we change some of the acts governing professional societies, and some of the labour laws so that there can be consumer representation on the negotiating teams as well. I say that because the function and ultimate objective of a marketing agency is exactly the same as that of a negotiating team for a profession or a labour union. In our society, with its economic structure as complex as it is today, I am not sure it would not be a good idea to have some other interests represented on these negotiating teams and bodies. Philosophically and in principle, it may be a good idea. But let us not single out the farmer for this kind of treatment; let us make it universal.

Senator Argue: Hear, hear.

Senator Olson: If the occasion arises, I may refer to this matter again during the Throne Speech debate, but I felt I should raise the point now because, undoubtedly, when the committee holds further hearings, the matter of the structure, the function, the purpose and the magnitude of marketing agencies will arise from time to time, and we will obviously have to take the matter into account. It is because the reference in the Speech from the Throne is to agriculture only that I thought I should raise the matter now.

Honourable senators, I conclude by expressing appreciation and commendation to the members of the committee who have made an intensive analysis and come up with reasoned and sound recommendations regarding the import-export situation. I hope we can now get on with the job of analysing the domestic marketing structure as well, and making thorough recommendations with respect to it.

Hon. J. J. Greene: Honourable senators, may I take the liberty of returning the compliment and commending the chairman of the committee not only for the efficacy of the result but for the fact there is a result at all.

I think most of all I was struck by the fact that, unlike many more timorous souls, he did not despair of the institution of the Senate and its committees as an instrument of reform. When more timorous souls have come to the conclusion, "Well, the press and the country at large do not care much what the Senate is doing, and we will never bring about any reforms by means of the Senate," the chairman never lost faith in the concept that through the instrumentality of a Senate committee we can achieve reforms of an important nature, such as he has suggested here.

It was only Senator Argue's faith and confidence in the Senate that resulted in this report, and for that he certainly deserves our commendation. I believe other committee chairmen, and all senators, might learn a great deal from his example, and that much can be done by the Senate if we use the instrument as we have it—reformed or unreformed—and if we use the rules as we have them. It may also be that our standing in the country is much higher in certain areas than many of us have appreciated.

With respect to the substance of the report and the speech of the chairman of the committee in presenting it to us, there was one point that did concern me. He referred to the fact that, prior to issuing a final report, he would consult further with provincial governments, with producer groups and with others. I hope he will consider consumer groups, trade groups within the food industry trade, and the concept of the Throne Speech that the old way of confrontation—which has generally been the way of confrontation between producer and consumer—is not the best way in the long run for either the producers or the consumers of this country. In getting together and working out the problems, I believe we can convince Canadian consumers generally, apart from the associations, that a healthy beef industry is in their long-term interest.

● (1520)

We must remember that things being as they are, the fourth estate largely comes from the large industrial cities, the consumer areas, and there is a continuing tendency for its members to make judgments to the effect that anything that is good for producers is necessarily bad for consumers, and they report it as being something iniquitous. Whether it is a marketing board or government plan, if it is going to help producers it will necessarily hurt consumers. The fourth estate may not be a producer in the agricultural business, but it is the number one producer in Canada in the agricultural fertilizer business, so I believe it should have the interests of producers at heart.

If we can bring all those people together to the greatest possible degree at the same meetings—representatives of producers, consumers, the chain stores, packers, and so on—I believe we can really convince the people of Canada that a healthy beef industry is, in the long run, in their own best interest; that if we have to import all our beef, because we have killed our own industry, be it 10, 20, 30 or 50 years downstream, we will have done the Canadian consumer, the city dweller, no favour. The fact that he has a domestic industry that is healthy, viable and producing a reasonable rate of return for producers, labour and capital investment, is the best assurance a Canadian can have that he will have an adequate supply of beef at reasonable prices in the years ahead.

I believe we can sell that, and I hope we will not lose the opportunity. The report gives us the opportunity of bringing these people together, as the Throne Speech envisages. National food conference or not, I believe that we can do it within the ambit and the follow-up of this report.

It must be remembered, in considering the well-being of the farmer in terms of his achieving his fair share of the total economic pot—as the press and media have been little inclined to do—that, marketing boards apart, he is probably the only one who in our economic history has been at the complete mercy of the marketplace. I do not believe that General Motors or Ford produce cars just to compete pricewise in the marketplace. They decide as producers what their cars will sell for, and there is control of the marketplace through the ad agencies. I do not say that they abuse the system, or that the shareholders of those corporations which control the marketplace receive an unfair reward. But certainly the agricultural producer—and there are many producers and few buyers—has been at the complete mercy of the buyer, unlike the corporate producer who decides what the price shall be based on his cost of production. Marketing boards apart, the farmer has had no opportunity of doing this in our economy as it has evolved.

Some of Senator Olson's remarks are well worth considering. It is a fact that the western producer, in particular, is largely at the mercy of the eastern buyer vis-à-vis the price he will achieve in the market. That is a pertinent example of the fact that economically this country should probably never have existed; that perhaps it was "the impossible dream" economically. The very fine notion in the Throne Speech reinforces this issue. To the best possible degree we must help remove those roadblocks which redound to the economic detriment of those in both the eastern and western provinces because their markets are largely in central Canada.

One of the factors involved in national unity, quite apart from any linguistic or ethnic questions, is referable to that issue. We must ensure that we remove, as best we can, all roadblocks within this economically ass-backward structured country, to ensure that the western producer, eastern industrialist, agricultural producer, or whatever he may be, can receive a fair price for his goods in the central Canadian market. That, in my view, will be one of the surest sources of continuing national unity.

Therefore it is an important issue that we are discussing. It may be only a peripheral one in the great campaign of national unity, but it is nevertheless symptomatic in economic terms of some of the things that are troubling this country.

I hope that we can follow up the report and demonstrate to the western beef producer that the Parliament of Canada is doing everything it can—through the leadership of the government in the Senate, in this instance—to remedy the economic defects in the structure of this country as it was conceived, and to help the producer achieve a just return for his contribution to the total national market, even though a large part of that market may be in central Canada.

I might make one brief suggestion with respect to the level of imports. As I understood Senator Argue, he suggested that there should be some sort of automatic trigger—which certainly is the best way of doing it, if it can be done—which would not be fixed to some firm price and number, but would be flexible to take into consideration the problems of inflation and the value of our dollar, which are factors over which the producer has absolutely no control.

If the inflation index were back at 1970 prices generally, then I believe the producer, getting the price he is receiving today, would have little complaint. The fact that there is general inflation certainly has something to do with the problem, but the western beef producer, like Senator Macdonald's Cape Breton miner, has not contributed very much to inflation, because he has not been in a position to do so. However, he now has to pay the price of inflation in everything he buys, from twine to freight rates.

I respectfully suggest, therefore, that the committee, in further deliberating and refining the interim report, consider that the trigger to be affixed to the consumer price index will take into consideration inflationary levels; that the index be not affixed to 1975, 1976 and 1977 costs, which may be completely irrelevant some 10 or 20 years in the future.

● (1530)

Again, honourable senators, I commend the chairman with great sincerity for the faith in the Senate that he demonstrates when he suggests that here we can institute very real reforms in areas where our Canadian people are disadvantaged by things as they are. I urge that this interim report be followed up. If we do follow it up well, and sell the idea that it is in the interests of everybody—consumer, producer, city dweller, and country dweller—to have a sound beef policy in this country, we will ensure the continuation of a community of beef producers in this country, and can then perhaps get a body of public opinion behind us that will be persuaded of the justice of our cause, and persuaded that we are speaking the truth with regard to the concept that is contained within this report. Despite any earlier words in this regard, I have complete confidence in the honesty of our press, and in formulating our final report, and hearing these further witnesses—which will, I hope, include consumer and trade groups as well as producers and provinces—I am sure we will get across to the public a clear story of what we are doing.

Even though the Senate does not have the general popular support that the elected half of Parliament has, by the very justice of our cause and the efficacy of our solution we can create such a groundswell during our further deliberations that the government may be very pleased to follow our lead and consummate it by legislation which will put into effect the recommendations not only of this interim report but of our final report as well.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, it is with hesitation that I rise to ask a question, particularly when it relates to a subject on which three former ministers of agriculture have spoken.

Senator Argue: Two.

Senator Bosa: Senator Hays also asked a question.

Senator Argue: Oh, yes; that is correct.

Senator Bosa: And you are also an expert on this subject in your own right.

My question is directed to Senator Olson. In light of what we learned recently with regard to the dramatic increase in the cost-of-living index, attributed mainly to the increase in the cost of food—I do not know whether it is attributed directly to beef or to other items—and in light of the Speech from the Throne that we heard from Her Majesty the Queen on Tuesday, in the course of which we learned how the government proposes to fight inflation, how does Senator Olson reconcile the approach of giving more control of prices to distributors, who have a vested interest in inventory which enables them to demand more for the commodity? Would that not contribute to an increase in the cost of living and to inflation as a whole?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I think that if you were to suggest that the fantastically low prices that the beef producers have been getting for the last two and a half years or so did not contribute to the lowering of beef prices to the consumer you would be wrong. One went with the other. However, I do not believe that in the long-term interests of Canada we can expect any group, whether it is the beef producers or anybody else, to operate in a market where they have to sell below their costs of production, to the extent that they have to mortgage their capital assets simply in order to live. This is what has been happening.

My objective is that there be a higher price than the present one for the producers. No doubt that would be reflected in the cost-of-living index at the end, but I believe it is entirely justified, and it ought to be uniform. What I suggested with regard to the packers, and so on, having a vested interest in owning some of that inventory in order to keep the price from going down, would also, in the long run, be in the interests of the consumer, because it would be a more uniform and more reasonable price than the fantastically high prices we had in 1973, or the fantastically low prices that we had in about 1974. There is a balance between the two, and this is what we ought to strive to achieve. That is really what I was advocating. I do not believe any structure should be set up that would guarantee an unreasonably high price to the consumer.

On motion of Senator Petten, for Senator Molgat, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, October 25, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, October 25, 1977

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of Reports of the Anti-Inflation Board to the Governor in Council, pursuant to section 17(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, reporting its reference to the Administrator of the said Act of certain proposed changes in compensation plans, as follows:

1. Cassiar Asbestos Corporation Ltd., and the hourly rated employees at its Clinton Mines, dated September 26, 1977.

2. Câble T.V. Limitée and its employees, represented by Le Syndicat des employés de service technique de Câble T.V. Limitée.

3. Construction Labour Relations Association of British Columbia and its Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipefitting Industry, Local Union No. 170.

4. BCSTA West Kootenay Employers' Organization and its employees, represented by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Locals 1298, 1285, 1341, 748 and 343, dated August 10, 1977.

5. Union Carbide Canada Limited and its hourly employees at Chicoutimi, Quebec, represented by the United Steelworkers Union, Local 7287, dated August 10, 1977.

6. The Corporation of the City of Nelson, British Columbia and its employees, represented by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 339, dated August 10, 1977.

7. The City of Trail, British Columbia and its employees, represented by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 343, dated August 10, 1977.

8. School District No. 13 (Kettle Valley) British Columbia and its employees, represented by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 343, dated August 10, 1977.

9. The City of Rossland, British Columbia and its employees, represented by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 1276, dated August 10, 1977.

10. Villa Youville Inc., and its executive group employees, dated August 16, 1977.

11. Canadian International Paper Co., Container Division and Single Service Division, and the Canadian Paperworkers Union, Locals 949, 343, 1872 and 849, and the Canadian Chemical Workers Union, Local 29, dated August 22, 1977.

12. Whitehorse Copper Mines Limited and its supervisors group, dated August 22, 1977.

13. Bell Canada and its clerical and associated employees, dated August 22, 1977.

14. Bell Canada and its executive group, dated August 22, 1977.

15. The Dauphin-Ochre School Area No. 1, Dauphin, Manitoba and its executive group employees, dated August 22, 1977.

16. Niagara South Board of Education, Welland, Ontario and the Secondary School Teachers, represented by the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation, District 7 and L'Association des Enseignants Franco-Ontariens, District 8, dated September 9, 1977.

17. Carleton University and its employees, represented by the Graphic Arts International Union, Local 224, dated September 9, 1977.

18. Province of Nova Scotia Civil Service Commission and its employees, represented by Nova Scotia Government Employees Association, dated September 9, 1977.

19. Reed Limited and their 331 Light Equipment Operators, Toronto, Ontario, represented by the Printing Specialties and Paper Products Union, Local 466, dated September 9, 1977.

20. Laiterie Leclerc Inc., and its Sherbrooke, Québec employees, represented by Le Syndicat national des produits laitiers de Sherbrooke (CSD), dated September 12, 1977.

21. Health Labour Relations Association of British Columbia and the engineers, represented by the International Union of Operating Engineers, Local 882, dated September 12, 1977.

22. Eastern Provincial Airways (1963) Limited and its airline pilots group, dated September 12, 1977.

23. The Flin Flon School Division No. 46, Flin Flon, Manitoba and its maintenance supervisors group, dated September 12, 1977.

24. Treasury Board of Canada and the Firefighters (supervisory and non-supervisory) Group, dated September 23, 1977.

25. BCSTA East Kootenay Employers' Organization and its employees, represented by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Locals 343, 729, 1556, 979, 1333, dated September 26, 1977.

Copies of Reports of the Anti-Inflation Board to the Governor in Council, pursuant to section 17(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, reporting its reference to the Administrator of the said Act, as follows:

1. Essex International of Canada Ltd., dated August 17, 1977.

2. Dominion Dairies Ltd., dated September 19, 1977.

Copies of Interim Report of the Tariff Board's recommendations pertaining to processed fruits and vegetables, Reference No. 152, pursuant to section 6 of the Tariff Board Act, Chapter T-1, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Report entitled "Economic and Fiscal Statement" issued by the Department of Finance on October 20, 1977, which includes the following papers:

1. Notice of Ways and Means Motion to amend the Income Tax Act.

2. Notice of Ways and Means Motion to amend the Income Tax Application Rules, 1971.

3. Government of Canada Accounts: Forecasts of the government's 1977-78 fiscal position.

4. Supplementary information on the controls program.

5. Decontrol and Post-Control Arrangements: Statement by the Government of Canada to Business and Labour Leaders. Ottawa, July 29, 1977.

6. Details of tax changes.

Copies of Order in Council P.C. 1977-2229, dated August 4, 1977, amending Part I of the Schedule to the Hazardous Products Act, pursuant to section 8(3) of the said Act, Chapter H-3, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Order in Council P.C. 1972-2716, dated November 23, 1972, amending Schedule I to the Canada Grain Act, effective August 1, 1973, pursuant to section 15(6) of the said Act, Chapter 7, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

Copies of Report of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting compensation plan between Whitehorse Copper Mines Ltd., Whitehorse, Yukon Territory and the group of its supervisory employees. Order dated October 19, 1977.

Report of the International Development Research Centre, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 22 of the International Development Research Centre Act, Chapter 21 (1st Supplement), R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of contracts, pursuant to section 20(3) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, Chapter R-9, R.S.C., 1970, entered into between the Government of Canada and

1. The Municipalities of Grand Centre, Morinville, Lac La Biche and Stettler, in the Province of Alberta.

2. The Municipalities of the City of Langley, Williams Lake, Chilliwack, Township of Langley, Maple Ridge, Merritt, City of North Vancouver, District of North Vancouver, Richmond, Salmon Arm, Surrey, Terrace and White Rock, in the Province of British Columbia.

Copies of a working paper entitled "Toward a National Policy on Amateur Sport", issued by the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport).

Copies of Report of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, regarding the reference on the British Columbia Labour Relations Association, Vancouver, British Columbia, dated October 21, 1977.

SCIENCE POLICY

VOLUME 4 OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE TABLED

Senator Lamontagne: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy appointed in the last session of Parliament and authorized in that session to consider and report on Canadian government and other expenditures on scientific activities and matters related thereto. The report is entitled: "A Science Policy for Canada, Volume 4, Progress and Unfinished Business."

ALASKA HIGHWAY PIPELINE

PLANNING AND CO-ORDINATING AUTHORITY—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on October 20 the Honourable Senator Lucier asked a question with respect to the planning and co-ordinating authority of the Alaska Highway pipeline. He asked if there had been or if there would be Yukon involvement in developing the single regulatory authority.

I have received information from the Honourable Allan MacEachen, the chief ministerial negotiator with the United States authorities with respect to the pipeline, and by way of reply may I quote from a statement made by him in the other place on August 4. The minister stated:

● (2010)

I can assure the house that it would be our intention that such legislation would provide for the establishment of a single agency to co-ordinate and supervise the exercise of authority in all matters pertaining to a northern pipeline that are under the responsibility of federal authorities. This agency would be expected to co-operate closely with the provincial governments, territorial governments as well as with the National Energy Board, which possesses a great deal of experience and expertise in regulating the physical aspects of pipeline construction. In our view, a single agency of this kind would be essential to minimize duplication and confusion and to ensure that the intentions of Parliament were fulfilled expeditiously and efficiently.

With respect to Yukon involvement, the minister has issued a fuller statement entitled: "A Statement on the Northern Pipeline." That statement was issued on September 9 last, and it appears to answer most of the question posed by the honourable senator on October 20 last.

There is one difficulty, however. It is a rather long statement consisting of five typewritten pages. If honourable senators agree, I would propose that because of its length it be printed as part of today's record.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Flynn: Was it printed in Hansard of the other place?

Senator Perrault: I was provided with the statement only a short time ago and I do not know.

Senator Flynn: You mentioned a date in September, I believe.

Senator Perrault: The document states, "September 9, 1977, Notes for a Statement on the Northern Pipeline by the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen, House of Commons, Ottawa." The date suggests that this is a public statement issued from the minister's office. It may be useful, then, to have it printed as part of our record.

Senator Flynn: If it was not printed in Hansard of the other place, I have no objection; but duplication would be stupid.

(The statement is as follows:)

When the Prime Minister announced the Canadian Government's decision just over a month ago to enter into discussions with the United States on possible joint construction of a northern gas pipeline, he said that we would be embarking on tough negotiations. He said also that if they did not succeed it would be because we could not make our mutual interests compatible.

As the Minister responsible for leading these negotiations for the Canadian side, I can testify that they were, indeed, very tough—and very arduous. But as you know from the statement that President Carter and Prime Minister Trudeau made following their meeting in Washington yesterday, the outcome of the negotiations has been the successful conclusion of an agreement that both governments believe will very much serve the mutual interests of Canada and the United States.

Perhaps equally important is the fact that the decision to embark on this gigantic joint enterprise by the two countries will serve to further strengthen the bonds that historically have linked us closely together.

Construction of the overland pipeline would enable the United States to transport more gas from Alaska to markets in the western and mid-western states where it is urgently required more cheaply, more reliably, and more quickly and with less environmental damage than the alternative all-American system which had been proposed.

For our part in this country, I believe that the agreement is very much in accord with the Canadian objectives expressed by spokesmen for all parties during the course of the debate on the pipeline question in the House of Commons early last month.

The building of this pipeline system, which would be the largest anywhere in the world, would provide Canada with the only opportunity currently open to it to tap its own natural gas reserves in the Mackenzie Delta on an economically feasible basis as and when they are required to overcome the shortage that the National Energy Board forecasts would otherwise develop in the 1980s. That we should have this option open to us is very much in keeping with our national energy strategy and particularly with our goal of ensuring that Canada's reliance on imported foreign oil does not exceed one-third of our domestic needs by 1985 and thereafter.

I think it will be evident from the press release which was made available to you earlier that the agreement we have reached with the United States will enable Canada to achieve access to its gas reserves in the Delta considerably more cheaply than would have been possible under the system proposed originally by the National Energy Board, which of course was handicapped in its own deliberations by its inability to negotiate any alternative arrangements with the United States.

I believe it will also be evident that the financial provisions that we have made will ensure that sufficient revenue will be forthcoming from the pipeline company to amply meet social, economic, environmental and other costs that will be unavoidably created by the project in the Yukon.

As the government has already indicated, it will be its intention to establish a monitoring agency to ensure that the adverse social and environmental impacts of the system of the Yukon are reduced to the greatest possible extent and the potential short and long-term benefits to Northerners maximized as much as possible.

And as was stated in the government's statement of August 8, 1977, it is also our intention of pursuing "wide-ranging consultations with interested provinces, territorial governments, native organizations, community groups and other concerned interests in order to devise detailed arrangements that would best meet Canadian objectives."

I might add that interested provincial governments have been kept fully informed of developments during the course of negotiations with the United States and have provided the federal government with assurances of their willingness to adhere to the principles of non-discrimination in the pipeline treaty between Canada and the United States.

The government is very conscious that a $1.5 billion project, with an estimated peak labour force of over 2,000, will have major implications for the Yukon. The recent construction of the Alyeska oil pipeline demonstrated the socio-economic impacts—good and bad—that such a project can have. The population of the Yukon is approximately one-twentieth that of Alaska. One-quarter of the Yukon's population are native people. It is clear that firm and innovative action will be required on the part of the federal and territorial governments if the substantial opportunities for Northerners inherent in the pipeline are to be realized, and the potentially adverse effects mitigated to the fullest extent possible.

In approaching their task, the two governments will take full advantage of the substantial body of advice and data represented by the reports of the National Energy Board, Judge Berger, the Lysyk Inquiry, the Environmental Assessment Panel, and the submissions made to these bodies by Foothills.

Particular attention will be given to measures to limit in-migration to the Yukon during the construction phase. A requirement that southern hiring halls be used for all but Northern residents could be particularly effective for this purpose.

The government is particularly sensitive to the concerns expressed about the pipeline by native people in the Yukon. Regular consultations have been held with them by the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs, and last month the Prime Minister personally met Yukon Indian leaders to discuss the situation with them.

Substantial progress has been made on Indian claims in the Yukon during the current year, and there continues to be a good prospect that an agreement in principle could be achieved in the next few months. Reasonable time will be provided before laying of pipe begins in the Yukon to allow agreement on native claims to be reached and a beginning to be made on implementation of its provisions. The government will also be examining the recommendation of the Lysyk Inquiry that an advance against settlement be made in order to enable Yukon Indians to obtain maximum economic benefits from the pipeline.

The proposal by Foothills to offer representation on the Board of Directors to Yukon Indians is most welcome. Foothills has also made it clear in discussion with government representatives that it is prepared to cooperate fully in offering opportunities to native people.

The government intends to consult the Yukon Territorial Government and Indian leaders concerning steps that might be taken to provide enhanced protection to the culture and identity of Indian people in the Yukon, and to promote Indian participation in the political life of the Yukon at all levels. In addition, the government is prepared to implement special measures to protect lands of particular interest to Indians pending the completion of the land-selection process under the claims settlement.

PROVINCE OF SASKATCHEWAN

VACANCIES IN COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH—QUESTION

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, I would like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government. The Court of Queen's Bench, Saskatchewan, has two vacancies. As a result there is a serious backlog of cases that cannot be heard. Indeed, from what I am told, some most important cases cannot be heard because of this shortage.

Would the Leader of the Government be able to determine from the Minister of Justice whether, because of the urgency of the situation, such appointments are to be made soon?

Senator Perrault: I shall take that question as notice.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, October 19, consideration of her Majesty the Queen's Speech at the opening of the Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament, and the motion of Senator Frith, seconded by Senator Marchand, for an Address in reply thereto.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, the most novel and pleasant feature of the Throne Speech, as compared to those we have been hearing under the leadership of Mr. Trudeau, is that it was read by Her Majesty.

The Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Canadian Constitution pointed to a division of the Canadian public opinion on the monarchy issue five years ago. But there is no doubt in my mind that the Canadian public is unanimous in its respect and admiration for and loyalty to Her Majesty.

That is why I was most happy to second Senator Langlois' motion expressing such feelings to Her Majesty as well as our pleasure at welcoming her in Canada with Prince Philip on the occasion of her Silver Jubilee.

Towards the end of last summer, there were persistent rumors of a fall election.

This would have deprived us of this Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament and the pleasure, Madam Speaker, of seeing you perform your duties with the competence, tact and charm for which you are recognized and for which you are admired and respected by every one of us.

I wholeheartedly congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

[English]

Senator Frith, the philosopher-prince from Perth, treated us to an interesting exercise in post-industrial navel-gazing. It was obvious from what he had to say that it is difficult for a government supporter to find much to crow about these days. To his credit, the good senator showed appropriate restraint when he spoke of this government's ability to clean up the economic and social mess it has created.

[Translation]

Senator Marchand, in seconding Senator Frith's motion, gratified us with one of his typical off-the-cuff speeches, dealing this time with the issue of national unity in the context of the Parti Québécois' rise to power and preparations for its long-promised referendum. I will have an opportunity later to express some views on the subject. I would like however to suggest now to Senator Marchand that I am generally in agreement with his approach, if not with his conclusion.

[English]

Before dealing with the substance of the Speech from the Throne or, if you wish, the many problems confronting our country, I should like to say a word about the Senate. I do not intend to repeat what I have said before on the question of Senate reform. I have no objection to Senator Frith's proposal that we establish a committee to study such reform, but I point out that the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitution of Canada had a good deal to say on that matter—and nothing much was ever done, just as nothing much has been done about filling any of the present vacancies with people who might occupy opposition seats in this chamber. The official opposition's manpower problem, recognized by everyone as presenting a well-nigh impossible situation, remains the same.

Government supporters who are sincerely interested in significant parliamentary reform might start by trying to convince the Prime Minister to announce and implement a new policy on Senate appointments—one that would ensure a better numerical balance between the government side and the opposition.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: The Speech from the Throne clearly admits that at no time in our history has the stability of our society been so seriously threatened by a stagnant economy and decaying national unity. That is the Prime Minister's own assessment of the situation.

● (2020)

The first Throne Speech prepared by the Trudeau government in 1968 said practically the same thing; yet, compared to the present situation, that picture was much less frightening. I venture to say that under the present Prime Minister there has been no improvement in any of those areas of responsibility which are properly those of the federal government.

Any astute observer of the Prime Minister's philosophical meanderings over the years would have to conclude that the Prime Minister's frequent changes in orientation may have been one of the major causes of our present difficulties. You will recall, I am sure, the "Just Society," a mixture of government interference and abstention. This was followed by the "New Society," interpreted by all as a move to the left, scrapping our traditional economic system. Now, the Speech from the Throne, without using the term, suggests a return to the "Old Society." In fact, the government recognizes now that the creation of jobs depends on the private sector and that tax incentives have to be provided to increase investments. I would hope that these will not prove to be empty words. I would hope also that the private sector has enough faith left to believe that the government is sincere in using them despite the fact that, previously, the Prime Minister appeared rather cool, sometimes even hostile, towards the private sector.

[Senator Flynn.]

I will come back later to the ills of our economy. But I want first to say a few words about national unity.

[Translation]

If I want to say but a few words on the issue of national unity, it is not because I have nothing much to say. Indeed, I could dwell for hours on the matter. During the debate on the motion introduced last session by the government Leader on this issue, I had the notion of stating my views, but I soon gave up the idea, because I felt that the debate was becoming too rambling. Senator Perrault's motion seemed to me too vague and general.

If Canadian unity is such an acute problem today, it is due to a single reason, a single major fact, that is the coming into power in Quebec of a party advocating the independence of that province.

During the debate held last session, reference was made to the alienation of the west, to regional economic problems, especially in the Atlantic area, and other matters of the sort. I do not underestimate their importance, but I suggest that they cannot compare with the issue of Quebec separatism.

Surely, if some way is found to solve or check the problem, Canadian unity will no longer be endangered. Along with Senator Marchand, I would say that we must neither underestimate nor overestimate the significance of the Parti Québécois' victory.

We must not underestimate it, because Mr. Lévesque and his government are surely dedicated to the cause of Quebec independence. Since their coming into power, he and his ministers speak as if the process started through Bill 101 and other bills and statements were already irrevocable. It must be recognized that a dialogue between federalists and the Lévesque government is only possible and useful in the search for a modus vivendi until a referendum is held. Every move of the Lévesque government is made with its ultimate goal in mind.

On the other hand, we should not overestimate either the coming into power of René Lévesque. His party got only 40 per cent of all votes cast, only 10 per cent more in fact than in 1973, although it holds a strong majority in the National Assembly. With 30 per cent of the votes in 1973, seven members of his party were elected; with 40 per cent, 70 out of 110 members were elected. May I remind the honourable senators, as the honourable Senator Marchand did, that the PQ camouflaged its prime objective, which was and remains Quebec independence, and asked for a mandate for good government.

The Parti Québécois owes its victory to a large extent to the ineptitude, or to say the least, to the lack of popularity of the Bourassa Liberal government. It also owes it to the fact that, with the crumbling of the Union Nationale in 1973, for all practical purposes it seemed to be the only alternative to a government the majority of voters wanted to get rid of at any cost.

Mr. Robert Bourassa, in the first of a series of talks over the radio, said Sunday, with regard to November 15, that he was beaten not by Mr. Lévesque but by the economy. He also alluded to another factor which, for my part, I consider of prime importance: the intransigence of Mr. Trudeau with regard to the constitutional stand of Quebec, and his haughty contempt for Mr. Bourassa, whom he ridiculed more than once. So, by fighting against Mr. Bourassa, Mr. Trudeau in fact helped the Parti Québécois victory. He has his share of direct responsibility for the result of the November 15 election.

All polls held since indicate that no more than 30 per cent of Quebecers would vote "yes" in a referendum putting the question clearly, but there again, naturally, the Parti Québécois is already getting all set to camouflage the question.

My initial reaction to Mr. Trudeau's proposal that a bill be passed on the holding of referendums was one of curiosity. I am anxious to see exactly what mechanism is envisaged. In particular, I wonder how the same question can be put to all. I agree with those who say that all Canadians have an interest in the matter, but I remain convinced that the main decision is Quebec's. In any event, Mr. Trudeau's suggestion opens fascinating perspectives and hypotheses which the press, politicians, political scientists and many other groups have already started to put before the public eye.

Senator Marchand concluded his remarks by expressing the hope that Mr. Lévesque would hold his referendum as soon as possible and put the question clearly. It would seem that he had not been informed of what the Prime Minister was saying practically at the same time in the House of Commons. This might lead us to believe that Senator Marchand is no longer in the know.

In any case, he was expressing a pious hope when he wished that Mr. Lévesque will not pick his own time and question for the referendum, just like the federal government will probably want to pick its own time and question for its own referendum.

Now that the evil is done, that we have in Quebec a government which is dedicated to independence, it is important to prepare well for these referendums.

Above all, let us avoid confusion especially since the debate between federalists, on the one hand, and independentists, on the other, could easily bring people to think that there is an alarming diversity of views among federalists while independentists would display a common front.

The various groups that are committed to Canadian unity express opinions ranging from preservation of the status quo to an extreme decentralization.

Could the Robarts-Pépin group eventually derive a consensus, or at least a common denominator, from the federalists? I doubt it. Yet, it is vital to derive that consensus or common denominator prior to the referendum or the referenda. Otherwise, independents would have a great time criticizing federalist approaches as expressed by individuals, groups, or even by the provincial or federal governments.

The consensus or common denominator cannot be the prerogative of one party or one political leader. I am afraid of the prospect that Mr. Trudeau might become the main spokesman for the federalist option and that this issue could be settled in a duel between him and Mr. Lévesque. I am not about to forget that Mr. Trudeau, before becoming Prime Minister, supported the constitutional status quo and, in the eyes of many people, he is still today a reluctant reformist.

To arrive at that consensus or common denominator and express it in a non-partisan context, would it not be advisable that the government call a genuine constitutional conference? Representatives of all political parties, federal and provincial, as well as spokesmen for intermediary bodies, could be invited to participate in such a conference. Such a conference would be asked to formulate, based on the participants' attitudes, what type of new constitution would seem acceptable to the greater majority, or at least what type of changes as suggested by the current situation should be brought to our constitutional law. This is not absolutely novel, because I for one expressed this view on a few occasions.

On June 6, 1967, speaking before the Senate, I had this to say:

The present government—

Mr. Pearson was then Prime Minister and Mr. Trudeau Minister of Justice

—is dismissing the idea of a constitutional conference. I do not believe, particularly since the Speech from the Throne mentions the report now being drawn up by experts—

Most probably they are still at it.

—that this refusal is truly final and a matter of principle. It seems to me that it is tactical and that its object is to postpone the conference until a more favourable and less troubled period rather than to give up the idea.

I feel personally that it is dangerous to delay much longer the convening of that conference which has been contemplated since 1962. In fact, it was suggested by Mr. Diefenbaker and, at that time, the idea was favourably received. Since then, the idleness of the present government has enabled a lot of people to indulge in monologues to state or strengthen their views and to take some almost irrevocable positions. I say that it is wrong. And when I speak of monologues, I think as well of the debates held in certain legislative assemblies and by certain groups which are, to my mind, far too homogeneous to express balanced opinions. I am not saying the problem must be tackled tomorrow, but I say it should be very soon.

That was in June 1967.

The idea behind the conference is that the responsibility for and capability of formulating revision proposals should not be left only to the federal and provincial governments. I believe their views on these questions reflect their immediate, short-term problems and nothing else. On the other hand, opposition parties in the legislatures too often abstain from taking a position, but they could not do so at this kind of conference.

It is quite obvious that giving that task to governments alone would be preposterous as far as Quebec is concerned, and we also realize that the role of opposition parties in Quebec City would be of the highest importance in such a conference. Whatever mechanism is used, I am confident that the federalist option can be defined in realistic and practical terms. I do not believe that it is necessary to turn everything upside down.

The objective must be to adjust our institutions to the present conditions so that Quebecers, as well as all other Canadians, feel more at home everywhere in Canada and that this country, which inherited British and French as well as ethnic cultures, still be different from the United Kingdom and France, just as we want it to be different from the United States.

[English]

Now, honourable senators, I should like to address myself more specifically to the problem of our self-destructing economy. I should like to quote a few of those global statistics which the mover and seconder of the Address in reply were so eager and willing to ignore.

I want senators who support this administration to see that these statistics do not exist in a vacuum. I want them to understand that they reflect conditions which have a real impact on real people. I want them to appreciate that, cold and unfeeling as they may appear, statistics are still the best way we have of quantifying the alienation and frustration, the misery and hardship caused by this government.

Do senators realize, for example, that several countries of the OECD are doing better than Canada in inflation control; that we rank close to last among OECD nations in general trade and payments; that our trade deficit in manufactured goods last year was $10 billion; that Canada has the highest unemployment rate of all OECD countries, 8.4 per cent compared to 6.5 per cent last year; that in 1976 Canadian productivity in manufacturing increased at a rate slower than that of any other major industrial western nation?

And do senators realize also that the average Canadian family's income taxes are the biggest expense it has in one year; that the average Canadian family spends 20 per cent of its income on personal income taxes, because Canadian governments spend nearly 50 cents out of every dollar; that this year's budgetary deficit of $9.2 billion is larger than the total federal spending in the fiscal year 1963-64, the first year the Liberal government took over; that Canada is running the largest foreign debt in the Western World; that our average wages in manufacturing are some of the highest in the world, almost twice as high as those in the U.S.; that in spite of a disastrous plunge in the value of the dollar, our exports are still not what they should be; that last year we held the world's record for hours lost in work due to labour disputes and strikes; that, since 1972, our labour cost per unit of output has increased more than 50 per cent compared to only 20 per cent in the U.S.; and that our bankruptcy rate is one of the highest since the depression? These are the statistics this government hates to be reminded of. These are the statistics which reflect a very clear crisis of confidence.

[Senator Flynn.]

● (2040)

How penitent and self-accusatory this government was feeling in the Throne Speech. And rightfully so! Listen as they beat their breasts. I quote from the Throne Speech:

High rates of unemployment and inflation are clear signals of the inadequacy of economic strategies appropriate to simpler times. They are also signals of the urgent need for important structural adjustments in the economies of Canada and other industrialized countries. More than that, they are the symptoms of an illness which can be cured only by a readjustment of our values, and by a rediscovery of the merits of self-discipline and fair sharing.

In these three sentences there are at least four admissions of guilt. All these astute observations would not be so hard to take if they were not being authored by the same economic chameleons and political opportunists who created this quagmire in which we now find ourselves wallowing. We have had no serious attempts in recent months at significantly reducing taxes, genuinely cutting back on government spending or bureaucracy-building. There has been no appreciable attempt to deal realistically with mounting public debt and interest charges, and no real effort to come to grips with unemployment. And all the government had for us in the Throne Speech was tongue-clucking rhetoric that suggests that it is our own fault if all this has come about. We are going to have to "readjust our values," and "rediscover the merits of self-discipline," they said.

How detestably cynical when you consider that these are the power-thirsty merchants of something-for-nothing who came to office promising to redistribute wealth by soaking the rich. And, now that they have practically destroyed us economically and socially, they recommend that we go back to the good old-fashioned virtues of self-discipline and self-reliance. It was they who ridiculed the past. It was they who preached the virtues of the welfare state. It was they who seduced honest, proud, self-supporting citizens into becoming wards of the state. And, now that the bankruptcy of their vision and insight has been uncovered, they turn around and scold those whom they have led astray, offering to lead them in yet another direction.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: Now, wouldn't the people of Canada be foolish to follow? When a country such as ours, with incredible wealth and potential, is faced with one million unemployed, who can have faith in the government? When a country such as ours, with 8.4 per cent inflation, faces a growth this year of only 2 per cent, who can have faith in the government? When a country such as ours allows federal-government spending to quadruple in 10 years, and the cost of living to rise close to 100 per cent in the same period, who can have faith in the government?

● (2050)

And what does this government offer us as a solution to the many problems that beset us? A five-point plan, an exercise in improvisation, if ever I saw one.

1. They are going to phase out controls starting in April. Why didn't they do that a long time ago when the OECD and other economic authorities told them their controls weren't working, that they weren't holding prices down and were actually contributing to inflation. Inflation is running 40 per cent higher than it was anticipated it would run with the benefit of price and wage controls. Controls may have served a purpose at the outset, but they long ago outlived their usefulness. They are now, and have been for some time, counterproductive. They have resulted in the creation of an economic climate of doubt, mistrust, and fear.

2. A tax cut of $100 for low and middle-income earners. That is less than $2 a week. The average family probably spends more than that on stamps and cheques to pay its bills. The cuts will be concentrated in January and February which means they're likely to be used to finance some extra Christmas purchases of imported goods. Not much help there.

3. Further job-creation programs. Thirty thousand temporary jobs. An expensive drop in the bucket. More government busy work and interference. More government-created non-productive jobs. Let the people think they are working, and they won't feel so bad about being on the dole.

4. An employment credit for job creation. This is likely to give an unanticipated windfall to firms planning expansions, but marginal corporations are not likely to be found expanding in the face of the uncertainty of rising inventories and costs. Besides, experiences with such employment tax credits in other countries have, for the most part, produced poor results.

5. The maintenance of strict restraint on government spending. "Maintenance" no less! As if this were something that had been going on for some time.

Uncontrolled government spending. There's the principal cause of all our economic problems. This government is forever making acts of contrition, apologizing for its profligacy, and solemnly intoning its firm intention of amending its errant ways.

Remember the federal government restraint program Mr. Chrétien launched when he was in Treasury Board? A neat bit of double-talk that was. The government had no intention of cutting its expenses. As a matter of fact, they have raised them by 30 per cent since then. And operating costs have risen by 40 per cent. For this very fiscal year, 1977-1978, expenditures will rise by 10 per cent.

And now, what of this most recent addition to our national litany of despair? What about our rapidly devaluating dollar? Our 89.8-cent dollar, the lowest it has been since 1939, is the market's way of telling us that, as an economic manager, this government is a disaster.

And we should be warned that there is no consolation to be taken in the thought that this devaluation is having a beneficial effect on our export industry. That won't last. Wage and import costs will soon drive export prices back up.

A dropping dollar is simply bad news. It is inflationary because it raises the costs of imported goods. And that's a serious matter in our country where we import at least 35 per cent of what we consume. And price increases of this nature aren't influenced by mandatory controls.

Further, the weak dollar militates against efforts to keep down or lower interest rates. As a matter of fact, we may have to raise them soon, if we want to restore the interest in Canada of foreign lenders.

● (2100)

In order to bolster our falling dollar, we may borrow further, thus covering up the symptoms but, in fact, worsening the illness.

Our economic condition is bleak; our problems are acute, and this government has proven itself incapable of dealing with them effectively. Belt-tightening is what is called for now. We must place emphasis on production. To remain competitive we must be willing to hold the line on production costs, the main component of which is wages. We must not ask more of government in the way of services. Already we can't afford all that is being provided.

What we need are real tax cuts, and the short term increase in the federal budgetary deficit brought on by such tax cuts should be financed through the savings of Canadians. This would have no inflationary effect. It is conceivable that citizens would be willing to lend their money to the government if the government shows itself willing to reduce taxes and seriously curtail its foolish spending. One effective way of proceeding to lower taxes would be to reduce federal sales taxes. The idea would be to restore effective consumer demand in order to take up the slack in the economy.

I could continue at length, honourable senators, with sound advice on what this government might do to alleviate our difficulties. But I see no point in it. We have been doing that for years, and look at what has happened! Almost invariably, when this government has borrowed new and refreshing ideas from us, it has managed, in its own incomparably inept way, to misapply them completely.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I could add further shadows to the gloomy picture I have just drawn of our economy and of the issue of national unity. I shall not do so to avoid moving away from the essentials. In any case, I could not reproduce the ray of light the new Minister of Finance, Mr. Chrétien, sees at the end of the tunnel.

I do not see either where I could brush in the Prime Minister's optimism. In a few months Mr. Trudeau will have been Prime Minister for ten years, and in a few months also the Liberal party will have been in power in Ottawa for fifteen years. Neither Mr. Trudeau nor the Liberal Party can shift onto others the responsibility for the present economic and political chaos. The government has the worst record in history and should not have the trust of the people much longer.

I mentioned we had to get ready for the referendums. A prerequisite I think is a change in government.

The national unity crisis undoubtedly heightens the economic crisis but, even more certain, the economic crisis heightens the national unity crisis. If it is crucial to define the federalist option before the referendum it will be even more important to get the economy going again, particularly to find jobs for young people so they with all other Canadians, including and particularly Quebecers, may on that occasion renew their faith in the future of an uninterrupted Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

To prepare for it, it is absolutely necessary to replace a tired, used-up team groping about in the dark, going in all directions at the same time, spreading confusion in the minds, by a new, fresh, imaginative and courageous team.

That, once again, is in my opinion the prerequisite. If Pierre Elliott Trudeau and the Liberal Party are the only ones capable of saving Canada, I say: Lord, have mercy!

[English]

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, first, on behalf of government members, I want to join with the Leader of the Loyal Opposition in this chamber in expressing gratitude to Her Gracious Majesty the Queen for marking her Jubilee Year with a visit to Canada. In every way, the visit of Her Majesty and His Royal Highness, the Duke of Edinburgh, was a very memorable one.

The warm reception afforded the Queen and Prince Philip is a reflection of the admiration and affection felt by Canadians for their 25 years of selfless, dedicated and exemplary service. Indeed, even the reception accorded Prince Charles in the United States demonstrates that the affection for the royal family is not confined to member nations of the Commonwealth.

Before proceeding further, I join with my distinguished colleague in opposition in stating that Madam Speaker deserves the thanks of all honourable senators for her outstanding service, both within this chamber and in her public duties. She is a great credit to this house.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: Finally, I should like to congratulate the mover and seconder of the motion for an Address in Reply for their thoughtful and constructive speeches. The mover, Senator Frith, who has been here only a few brief months, advanced a number of interesting, challenging and valuable proposals worthy of study by all of us, while Senator Marchand, in his usual forthright and outspoken manner, gave us a powerful and incisive analysis of the challenges facing Canadian unity—challenges confronting all of us, wherever we live in this country.

Indeed, both honourable senators are to be commended for their contributions to the work of this chamber since joining us here. As well, I think we all acknowledge the excellent work being done by all other new senators who joined our ranks during the last session of this Parliament.

Speaking of members of the Senate brings me to my friend, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition. He is not entirely new to this chamber, and the speech he delivered this evening—as usual, an excellent speech; however, a speech with which some of us find points of disagreement—was hardly a maiden speech. The chronicles of Parliament indicate that he made his maiden speech, his first significant speech in Parliament, on May 26, 1958, while a member of the other place. I should like now to quote his words on an occasion when he chose to defend the actions and policies of a government burdened down with some of the same kind of problems which afflict the nation now. However, this was a time when Senator Flynn was on the other side of the house. He said:

—the good effects of all the measures taken by this government to restore economic activity cannot show at once. But already, everything seems to suggest that we can confidently look forward to some improvement soon, thanks to the bold initiatives of the government.

Then there is this sentiment, a paragraph I now commend to him because it surely represents the spirit we require in Canada in this October of 1977:

I, for one, prefer to be on the side of optimism, which is an essential factor of prosperity, than on the side of pessimism, which stifles private enterprise.

● (2110)

I commend those words to him, yet I heard no words from him tonight that would inspire any Canadian to invest a one-dollar bill in the future of this country, not one word which would provide encouragement for our great Canadians living in the Atlantic provinces, the north, Quebec, Ontario, the prairies or British Columbia. The honourable and distinguished Senator Greene said that Senator Flynn may be getting old—most assuredly he has become old in spirit at least. Surely people who are so pessimistic about the future of this country cannot seriously aspire to be entrusted with the responsibility of providing the next government of Canada. Surely that is an impossibility.

Honourable senators, again the words of Senator Flynn in 1958, in the first, buoyant flush of his entry into public life, when he said, "I prefer to be on the side of optimism; this government prefers to be on the side of optimism as well." Tonight I appeal to the honourable senator to attempt to recapture the enthusiasm of his youth.

Senator Grosart: With one million unemployed you expect us to be optimistic? Don't be ridiculous.

Senator Perrault: Normally the opposition leader is an optimistic, resilient and cheerful individual, but every October he dons the mask of melancholy. It is almost like Greek drama where the actor dons a comic mask which smiles, or a tragic mask which looks sad. Every October the Leader of the Opposition puts on the Grecian mask of tragedy. It is little but pessimism and gloom when he delivers himself of his annual doomsday address. Did we not know that essentially he is a cheerful soul we would leave this edifice, and go to the nearest hill and wait for the sky to fall down. Unfailingly his message to the Senate, and to all who will listen, is a mournful one, a picture of a nation despondent and in despair. I think this is a distortion of the facts as they exist, and of the spirit which is motivating Canadians these days.

Thanks to the new cable coverage of the Commons some of us had the opportunity to witness at least part of the speech made by the Leader of the Opposition in the other place, and there was a remarkable similarity of tone to the honourable senator's speech this evening. There is not always this harmony which exists among the statements made by various leaders and spokesmen for the opposition party in Parliament, but on this occasion there was a concurrence of views about the nature of Canada's alleged problems. The speech was full of throw-away lines and disposable ideas. We heard some of those tonight. But sound policy development at this time in Canada's history surely must go beyond one-liners and agile phrase-making. This is a time of challenge for all parties to help contribute to solutions and not to engage in political gamesmanship. If there is any crisis in this country—and there is no alleged crisis that is beyond the ability of Canadians to meet—it is a crisis of confidence inspired by the kind of gloom-laden speech we heard this evening from the Leader of the Opposition. All of us in the political system should be working to create an improved climate of confidence in this country at the present time.

Honourable senators, it is time we stopped selling Canada short; it is time we began to emphasize the many positive aspects of our nation; it is time that we captured the spirit of the optimistic and hopeful Jacques Flynn in 1958. I commend to you an editorial in the first issue of the Toronto Sunday Star—some of you may have read it—a paper which, if its size is anything to go by, should do a great deal for the newsprint industry during the next few months. That editorial stated just a week or so ago:

About 150 of the world's 155 nations would just love to have our problems, if our assets were included in the deal.

Those assets are all intact: A spacious land, abundant natural resources, a well-educated, well-trained people, a priceless tradition of liberty under law.

And so on. It went on to say:

We are among the luckiest of humans. Although the headlines say this or that statistic is "the worst since the Depression," there's no comparison with the Canada of 40 years ago. Although some social inequities persist, we live in prosperity and comfort unimaginable to most Canadians then.

Yes, a better life in a great country. That is why millions of people have come to Canada in the past 25 years, during Her Majesty's reign, because they saw in Canada a land of great promise and opportunity. It is still that land of great promise and opportunity for all of us.

Senator Grosart: But a million people cannot find jobs.

Senator Perrault: Indeed, it is difficult to understand how certain members of the media could regard as headline news the ritual response of the opposition to the Throne Speech. Unfailingly, Throne Speeches are attacked, criticized and condemned as they have been since 1867 by opposition spokesmen. And unfailingly the media hail this "phenomenon" as major headline news. One suspects that the opposition attacks are constructed well in advance of the Throne Speech, and it is too often a case of "Don't confuse us with the facts; we have made up our minds."

I believe that the Leader of the Opposition, who strives to be objective and fair-minded—and we all know that—will agree that part of the lack of confidence in the Canadian dollar is because of the climate of uncertainty over Canadian unity. This evening he made a very conscientious and thoughtful contribution to the dialogue on this subject. This issue is a substantial cause of the unwillingness on the part of foreign and other investors to invest money in this country. That is not an excuse, honourable senators; that is the fact. Since November 15 there has been a disturbing rise in the number of the unemployed in the province of Quebec, particularly in Montreal, and it is above the national average. Investment is slowing up and we have to recognize that this is apparently one price we have to pay for a climate of uncertainty. We have to see what we can do about the situation.

But I say, honourable senators, the strength of Canada and its people, paradoxically perhaps, has been underlined by the events which have occurred since November 15 when the election of a new government in Quebec aroused many Canadians out of their apathy. Let us look back, as Senator Jean Marchand said the other day. The only well-organized political party won the votes of the electorate, and it was led by a man with a great popular appeal, a person with the ability to communicate. What an opportunity for a party which before the election date had tacitly wanted separation, but after the election pronounced it as the principal plank of its being. The new government appeared to be on the crest of a wave following that November 15 election in the province of Quebec. If in the past 11 months there has been any tidal surge toward secession within Quebec, the opinion polls have failed to register it, but that is not an argument for complacency. I think it is to the credit of those who live in Quebec as well as Canadians in other provinces, and those who serve in Parliament and the legislatures across this country, and many private individuals, that the situation has come about whereby Canadians, by and large have not descended to a spiteful dialogue on racial lines. Canada has essentially "kept its cool." The nation has responded to what it perceives to be the challenge, and not the crisis, of national unity.

Certain members of the opposition parties keep hammering at the government to challenge Bill 101 in court. I have yet to hear whether the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, whom all of us regard as a credit to both the legal profession and public life, and who is a resident of Quebec, concurs in this view. Certainly, the leader of his party has suggested that course of action.

● (2120)

Senator Flynn: Why not?

Senator Perrault: What we have seen in this challenge to national unity is Canada at its best. There is a light of optimism in the entire situation. Since November 15 there has been a marked change in attitudes in many provinces across the country. Millions of Canadians are, in effect, rediscovering their own country, and studying the reasons for its current state of development and the reasons for its greatness. There is a growing belief that Confederation can and will be strengthened, and certainly no thinking Canadian should rule out a change in the distribution of powers and responsibilities between provincial and federal governments, a new look at the Constitution or any other device to make Canada more united and to assist the provinces to realize their regional aspirations.

Those who framed the Constitution in 1867 performed a monumental task, a task which many felt would be impossible. They were mortal people, however, and developments which have taken place in the past 110 years may well require a new look at the way we govern ourselves in this country. And no one should be disturbed by suggestions that there should be a re-thinking of Confederation.

Western Canada and the Atlantic provinces—indeed, all regions—in the past few months have engaged in a vigorous dialogue on the future of the country. Other regions of Canada have problems which parallel, in different ways, those of Quebec. All of Canada may come out of this dialogue with a better understanding of regional problems and, from coast to coast, an even stronger commitment to Canada the nation may emerge.

Predictably, the Leader of the Opposition has had much to say about the economy and the fall of the dollar. This criticism is to be expected. The Canadian economy is not performing as well as any of us would like. International investors want the best return for their money for the least risk, and for one reason or another they feel that there are certain risks involved in investing extensively in our country at the present time. They have a right to draw their own conclusions, but it is unreasonable to overlook the fact that the dollar and our economy will inevitably suffer until the referendum once and for all convinces the rest of the world that Canada is here to stay, united and strong.

For months now certain vocal spokesmen in opposition have trumpeted the theme that controls should be ended. Again this evening Senator Flynn made frequent reference to the fact that controls were wrong and should be dismantled. I noted with interest that he quoted rather frequently, or at least fairly extensively, from the OECD and some of their economic surveys. Let me just read a paragraph from the OECD economics survey for July 1977 about controls and the future in our country:

—maintenance of a relatively strict policy stance in these conditions seems necessary [in Canada]. In addition to this general stance, continuation in some modified and less binding form of the price and incomes program, also beyond the October 1977 date at which its status may be reviewed, would deserve consideration. The available evidence suggests that the operations of the Anti-Inflation Board [of Canada] have contributed to the deceleration, particularly of wages and possibly of prices, both directly and indirectly, inter alia, through effects on expectations.

So the OECD states that the controls program has been working. Yet we hear cries from the official opposition, both here and in the other place, that we should dismantle these controls immediately. But I suggest that to do so might well be risking another round of disastrous inflation which would make it even more difficult for Canadian produce and merchandise to compete abroad—and that is the essential nature of our problems: we must become more competitive.

The Honourable Senator Flynn in one of his statements, which I wrote down, made reference to the fact that we must become more competitive; that we need more belt-tightening. How can we become more competitive in the world unless we make a concerted attack on the number one problem—inflation and a high-cost economy, an economy which is 20 per cent less productive than that of the United States but has 7 per cent higher indemnities for Canadians?

Senator Grosart: Very easy—by cutting government expenditures.

Senator Perrault: Well, senator, may I quote again from the OECD survey, a document which I know you respect? The OECD economic survey said this about government spending:

Expenditure trends at the [Canadian] federal level appear to have been well within the limits implied by the longer-term policy announced in October 1975 that the total spending of all levels of government should not increase faster than the trend in gross national product. On a calendar year basis, the growth of outlays has come down from some 23 to 9½ per cent.

This is commendation from the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development for the concerted Canadian attempt to attack inflation, and that does not coincide with—

Senator Grosart: It is nothing of the kind. You are quoting it completely out of context.

Senator Perrault: There is no OECD agreement here with the attack by the opposition that an effort has not been made to control government spending.

Again we find this in the report:

In contrast to the buoyant developments in private consumption, the growth rate of government consumption in real terms was cut back very sharply to only 1 per cent last year, with a seasonally adjusted annual rate decline of 5 per cent in the final half of the year.

Is this the kind of policy which the opposition contends has not been dedicated to a reduction in government expenditure? For in fact it is a policy hailed by the OECD as one which has achieved a good deal of progress.

Senator Grosart: The trouble is you don't know what you are talking about. "Consumption" is the word there, not "expenditure".

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the result may not have been as satisfactory as any of us would have hoped, but there is no doubt whatsoever that we have been making progress, both in fighting inflation and in exercising a considerable degree of government restraint.

Honourable senators are aware of the fact that because of shared-cost programs with the provinces, and because of payments which are made to individuals across this country in the way of senior citizens' benefits, family allowances and so on, there is only a limited area where these massive cutbacks which the opposition demands can be made. It is a very difficult process. It is the same kind of difficult process which at times faced the opposition party when it had the responsibility for government in this nation.

Senator Flynn: That is a long time ago.

Senator Croll: Who can remember?

Senator Perrault: Try to remember! Try to remember!

The language of the critics suggests that wage and price controls have been a disaster and the Anti-Inflation Board has been a failure. We hear it every night on television. The financial spokesmen in the other place on the national network say, "Dismantle controls immediately. The program has failed."

Senator Flynn: But have you decided to or not to do it?

Senator Perrault: And yet the introduction of controls, far from bringing disaster, has been responsible for reducing the greed-and-grasp attitude which gripped Canada two years ago. The AIB has been a success. No one has ever claimed that that program has been a perfect instrument.

● (2130)

I recall the words of the Prime Minister, who said:

It may be rough justice, but it is far better than the rough injustice visited upon the poor and those on limited incomes in this country if we allow inflation to go unrestrained.

And well I remember the cabinet meeting which was held on Thanksgiving Day two years ago following special calls summoning ministers to that important gathering. At that meeting we were presented with the economic evidence on the table that inflation was running at 11 per cent to 12 per cent, wage settlements were coming in for 40 per cent over one year with no increase in productivity and no increase in the GNP. The government made the tough unpopular political decision at that time to go into a restraints program.

Senator Flynn: After the election.

Senator Perrault: I find that despite the fact that many spokesmen for labour and management criticize AIB, when we talk to the man or woman on the job they say, "We have appreciated what has been done under the AIB." And that is a fact.

Senator Flynn: Have you decided to dismantle it or not?

Senator Perrault: Ask the man on the job, and not some of his leaders, if he thinks controls have worked. Ask the pensioner and those on fixed incomes whose security was being chopped away by huge wage increases and "pass it on to business" and "pass it on to the consumer" if they think the AIB has worked. The answer will be a resounding yes.

Look at the facts. Even the Leader of the Opposition, who at times I fear engages in the art of selective recall, can remember double digit inflation. Inflation has been brought down in the past two years and no partisan wearing blinkers can deny that fact.

In the first year of controls we did better than expected. We were below our target. What was the cry then? The opposition said, "Well, you can't claim credit for that. Food prices were down and you had no control over that. You should not be taking credit for it."

This year we are over target—not much, but over target. We do not hear the opposition invoking their food price slogans of last year. It is a different argument now. There is no acknowledgement at all that food prices, over which we have very limited control, are responsible for our worse than anticipated rise in inflation. No, somehow in the past 12 months the government has become responsible for the woes of food producers in British Columbia, Alberta, all of the prairie provinces, the Atlantic provinces, Quebec and Ontario, as well as responsible for the rise in coffee prices from Brazil.

Now it is a different ball game. In our battle to bring down inflation over the two-year period we are rather well on target. As the annual report of the Anti-Inflation Board stated, in its second year's report:

The stage is set for the achievement of further deceleration in the rate of inflation.

The report notes that during the last two years price movements for food, energy and imports have obscured the success that has been obtained in reducing the rate of inflation. In 1976 consumer food prices fell and import prices rose very little, cutting the rate of rise in the consumer price index. In 1977 the CPI rose more rapidly with substantial increases in food and import prices. During both years large increases in energy prices added almost three-quarters of one percentage point to the growth rate of inflation. If food and energy prices are eliminated from the CPI, the index left is more clearly related to underlying cost developments in the Canadian economy.

Using this measure, the report said that during the first half of 1977 consumer prices excluding food and energy were increasing at an annual rate of 6.5 per cent, well down from the rates of 8.8 per cent and 8.9 per cent that prevailed during the previous 18 months.

That is progress. That is a good record. Surely the opposition, in its most partisan mood, cannot attack and criticize this government for being responsible for the rise in the cost of energy from less than $3 a barrel in 1972 to where it stands now. The report says:

This . . . indicates clearly that there has been a marked deceleration taking place in the underlying rate of price increases.

Looking ahead, the board said that real output growth in the Canadian economy in 1978 is likely to be higher than this year. But this growth is not likely to create demand pressures that would accelerate the rate of inflation. Commodity prices should remain relatively stable, reflecting the general softness of the economic recovery in other industrial countries.

In view of these 1978 prospects, says the report, for the most favourable impact of international development on Canadian prices, and for an overall lack of demand pressures, the stage is set for the achievement of further deceleration in the rate of inflation.

This evening the Leader of the Opposition compared—I thought rather unfairly to Canada—our economic situation with the economic situation of other members of the OECD. But only today in the Globe and Mail there was this headline:

Continued weak growth and higher jobless is predicted for West Germany during 1978.

That is one of the strongest economies in the world. That is the situation in West Germany today. The article says:

West Germany's five leading economic research institutes have forecast continued weak growth and higher unemployment for next year.

Real economic growth in 1978 will be 3 per cent, the same as this year, the institutes predicted in their autumn report.

The West German Government has said it is aiming for real growth (after taking inflation into account) of around 4.5 per cent next year, pointing out that this is the level required if a start is to be made on bringing down the jobless rate significantly.

So we are not alone in our problems; in fact, we happen to have relatively lesser problems than most countries in the world.

I was in Argentina a few months ago, where the rate of inflation last year was 650 per cent, and there was no pessimism on the part of the government there. One of the minister said, "Well, we think we are getting inflation under control. We have reduced inflation 100 per cent this year. It is down to 325 per cent, and it is still dropping."

Senator Flynn: Are you preparing us for something worse?

Senator Perrault: The Leader of the Opposition is again engaging in looking at the gloomy side of the picture, anticipating the worst, when Canada should be hoping for the best.

Senator Flynn: That is what I say: we should hope for the best.

Senator Perrault: That pessimism is a critical weakness in the opposition party. I regret to have to say that. There is no question that the AIB has had a dampening effect on excessive expectations by big labour and business. Wage settlements in the first half of 1975, before the AIB was introduced, averaged 22 per cent. Those settlements were reduced to 14 per cent in 1976, and to 8.5 per cent in 1977.

Even more important, 70 per cent of all negotiated settlements in the second year of controls were below the AIB guidelines. That is why the government is prepared to end controls, and on April 14 to begin the phase-out transition period. It is because we believe there has been a change, that both management and labour accept the fact that no economy can thrive when huge wage increases are awarded, and merely passed on to the consumer, without any increase in productivity. That truth is getting through to all sectors of the economy.

The way things were in 1975 was a recipe for ruin, and the AIB should be commended, not condemned, for giving Canadians a breathing space of two years during which there has been a significant change in attitude, which, as the Prime Minister pointed out in his speech in the other place a week ago, has resulted in a very considerably improved strike record this year. Remember the stories a few months ago that Canada's strike record was second only to that of Italy, Great Britain and other countries? There has been a 63 per cent reduction in strikes in 1977 from the number in 1976.

Senator Grosart: It is still the worst in the western countries.

Senator Perrault: I turn now to unemployment. The Deputy Leader of the Opposition has been talking about unemployment a good deal tonight. He has been writhing in his seat, eager to comment on it. He will have his opportunity to speak in the debate, and we all look forward to hearing him.

● (2140)

Nobody will deny that the present unemployment rate of over 8 per cent is unacceptable. This government is going to continue its efforts to create new jobs in both the public and private sectors, for the job aspirations of the fastest growing labour force in the industrialized world should be met if at all possible. We have spent $350 million in creating jobs for Canadians already this year. The Minister of Finance announced on Thursday that an additional $150 million would be used for further job creation prospects. In all we will be spending $1 billion over the next two years to get more Canadians working; but we share a belief—and I think we share it with the opposition—that in the ultimate most of the new jobs must come from the private sector.

Senator Flynn: It is about time.

Senator Perrault: Merely spending taxpayers' money, merely to reduce unemployment, will not measurably reduce unemployment.

Senator Grosart: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: I can only say that the honourable senator has not been reading the speeches of government spokesmen for a very long period of time, or he would not hail this as a new discovery.

Senator Grosart: I am not doing that. I am just hailing you as a new convert.

Senator Perrault: Spending $500 million on direct job creation, according to some economists, would reduce unemployment by less than 1 per cent, so obviously the private sector must be triggered, and we must make the private sector as efficient and competitive as possible. There is no disagreement on that. It is simply a question of choosing the best method.

When we talk about unemployment in Canada, let us also acknowledge that we have more Canadians working at present than ever before. Since the last budget 250,000 more jobs have been created in this country. That is a tribute to both the private sector and governments from coast to coast. In September, when the unemployment figure rose to 8.3 per cent, the number of Canadians working reached a record level, and this record of providing new employment opportunities is no flash-in-the-pan achievement. During the 1970s we have answered the challenge in Canada of the fastest growing labour force in the industrialized world by increasing the number of jobs by an average of 3.2 per cent each year of the decade, and no other country can match that in the industrialized world.

Do honourable senators know the country with the next best job creation record? The answer is, the United States. And what is the figure? It is 1.8 per cent. Canada has exceeded by far the job creation record of the next nation on the list, so Canada has created new jobs at almost twice the rate of the next best nation. This is not to say we should relax, and say, "We're No. 1." There is a tough problem facing all of us. That is admitted. This record has not been sufficient to handle all of the new Canadians coming into the labour force. But it is an encouraging record. Certainly, we could do better by pumping additional hundreds of millions of dollars into job creation, but this would set off another inflationary surge which would be self-defeating.

It is to be hoped that the incentives provided in the last budget and by the Minister of Finance's proposals last Thursday will stimulate the private sector to create more jobs for the many young Canadians who want to work.

The personal income tax cut of up to $100 for low and middle income taxpayers dismissed so lightly, and in such a cavalier fashion by spokesmen for the opposition this evening, will place, in the aggregate, millions and millions of dollars in the spending stream. People will go out and spend the money made available to them in this way, and this will be very helpful as a stimulus to the economy. These personal income tax reductions, with all of them coming in in January and February, should certainly encourage a good deal of spending.

A $100 million job credit plan will be introduced, and this is going to encourage the hiring of new employees by small businesses from coast to coast in this country. We are optimistic about the ultimate effect of this program. The priorities have been recognized, but there is a budgetary limit. The government has recognized this.

The Leader of the Opposition has made much of government spending, but in this area the government has acted firmly. This year the percentage increase in total spending by the federal government was budgeted at 7 per cent. As the Minister of Finance stated, we are holding firm to our expenditure ceilings. In fact, in the first five months of 1977-78, despite inflation, federal budgetary expenditures were only 5.2 per cent higher than the year before.

We have slashed growth in the public service. Treasury Board President Robert Andras this year authorized a man-year increase representing six-tenths of 1 per cent.

We have controlled the nation's money with good effect. The opposition will scoff at this and say it is not good enough; but my authority for this is a gentleman the opposition quotes each year with greater frequency than anyone since Sir John A. Macdonald. I refer, of course, to the Auditor General. Perhaps my friends on the other side have overlooked the press conference given by the Auditor General in Halifax about two months ago. He said at that time that the government is showing a promising new attitude in its handling of the public purse. He said that his 1977 report, expected in late November, would be one of the most positive in years. In other words, the government has "got its own act under control."

I now want to turn to the economy in general and take a look at what the future outlook may be. No nation can expect a continual, unending rise in prosperity. As in the case of companies and individuals, there will be flat periods, and there are flat periods. That is the history of economics since the dawn of man. Canada has enjoyed remarkable growth over the last two decades. We are one of the world's most favoured nations. However, we are in a flat period at present, just as the rest of the world is, except that in our case it is considerably less flat than is the case with almost any other country. We are in a period when our manufacturing sector has an 80 per cent proficiency factor as compared with the United States, while in the same sector the wages are higher. I made reference to that earlier. That is an untenable situation, and our dollar and our economy are reflecting this damaging fact of life.

We are also paying the price of prosperity. Even though we have a trade surplus of over $2 billion this year, thanks to increased exports, Canada has a worrisome balance-of-payments problem. Part of this is due to the fact that we have a disturbing tourist deficit. This is what I mean by the price of prosperity. Ten or 15 years ago it was not the usual thing for the people of the prairies to take a winter holiday down south, nor did British Columbians go in droves to Hawaii. Now, for many people, an escape from the Canadian winter is a routine thing. We live in a country where people can afford to seek the sun.

But there is a bright side to the tourist picture. For years the British and Europeans could not afford to take a holiday in North America. Now, travel in Europe is no bargain. It is becoming more expensive each year, and our travel industry is making a concerted effort to introduce Canada to Europe. We in this country have seen the old world. Now is the ideal time to introduce a vast new market to the old world.

The Minister of Finance anticipates that the economy will grow in real terms by 5 per cent next year, which compares very favourably with the figure I gave you for the Federal Republic of Germany, anticipating 4.5 per cent. Beyond this medium-term period there is a great deal of reason for hope. There will be, for example, the building of the pipeline, a venture which will be of supreme importance to the west and north in particular, and to Canada in general. As a result of the good-willed negotiations between Canada and the United States, and between the federal government and the provinces, about $4 billion will be spent on Canadian goods and services, and nearly 100,000 man-years of employment will flow from the pipeline.

Honourable senators, now is not the time to sell Canada short. This is the time for a realistic appraisal of the challenges which face us and the kind of action that we have shown in the past we are capable of, as a nation. The government will continue to clamp down on its expenditures, because it believes that a combination of private initiative, hard work and more efficiency will be a more sustaining and rewarding route to our recovery.

● (2150)

Canada has never been short of initiative and hard work. Canadians can and will answer the challenge of national unity; they can and will get the economy moving ahead, for, as Her Majesty the Queen said at the end of the Speech from the Throne:

Given the new economic realities to which Canada must adjust, and the urgency of promoting linguistic and cultural harmony, it is readily apparent that Canada is now entering a new era.

It can be an era of increasing confrontation, tension and division, or an era of enhanced freedom, co-operation and unity of purpose. Fundamentally, the choice must be made by every citizen every day.

It is apparent to thoughtful Canadians everywhere that this is a time of great decisions for Canada, a time for re-discovering the strength and potential of a marvellously free and caring society.

Her Majesty's message last week was a message of hope and inspiration for all of us, and surely it is entirely appropriate that we should thank Her Majesty for her great and encouraging words. I urge support of the motion which we have before us.

Senator Flynn: Why do we worry?

On motion of Senator Flynn, for Senator Fournier (Mada-waska-Restigouche), debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, October 26, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

STANDING COMMITTEES

FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF SELECTION PRESENTED

Senator Petten presented the first report of the Committee of Selection:

Tuesday, October 25, 1977

The Committee of Selection, appointed to nominate senators to serve on the several select committees during the present session, makes its first report, as follows:—

Your committee has the honour to submit herewith the list of senators nominated by it to serve on each of the following select committees, namely:

JOINT COMMITTEE ON LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

The Honourable Senators Bélisle, Bell, Cameron, Choquette, Côté, Davey, Forsey, Fournier (de Lanaudière), Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Hicks, Phillips, Quart, Riel, Rowe, Sullivan and Walker. (16)

JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

The Honourable Senators Bell, Bonnell, Choquette, Duggan, Eudes, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Fournier (Restigouche-Gloucester), Greene, Haig, McGrand, Michaud, Neiman, Riley, Rizzuto, Smith (Colchester), Walker and Williams. (17)

JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE RESTAURANT OF PARLIAMENT

The Honourable the Speaker, the Honourable Senators Bélisle, Godfrey, Inman, Norrie, Quart and Rizzuto. (6)

JOINT COMMITTEE ON REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

The Honourable Senators Asselin, Ewasew, Forsey, Godfrey, Lafond, Riley and Yuzyk. (7)

COMMITTEE ON STANDING RULES AND ORDERS

The Honourable Senators Beaubien, Bourget, Choquette, Connolly (Ottawa West) Cook, Desruisseaux, Everett, Flynn*, Forsey, Fournier (de Lanaudière), Grosart, Lang, Langlois, Macdonald, McElman, McIlraith, Molgat, Molson, Perrault*, Smith (Queens-Shelburne), and Stanbury. (19)

* Ex officio members.

COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

The Honourable Senators Argue, Beaubien, Bélisle, Benidickson, Bourget, Buckwold, Cook, Davey, Flynn*, Grosart, Laird, Langlois, Lapointe (Speaker), McDonald, McElman, McIlraith, Molson, Perrault*, Petten, Quart and Smith (Queens-Shelburne). (19)

* Ex officio members.

SENATE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

The Honourable Senators Asselin, Barrow, Bélisle, Cameron, Connolly (Ottawa West), Croll, Flynn*, Grosart, Hastings, Lafond, Laird, Lang, Macnaughton, McElman, McNamara, Petten, Perrault*, Riel, Rowe, Sparrow, van Roggen and Yuzyk. (20)

* Ex officio members.

SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE

The Honourable Senators Barrow, Benidickson, Côté, Croll, Desruisseaux, Everett, Flynn*, Giguère, Godfrey, Graham, Grosart, Hicks, Langlois, Manning, Molgat, Neiman, Perrault*, Robichaud, Smith (Colchester), Sparrow, Steuart and Yuzyk. (20)

* Ex officio members.

SENATE COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

The Honourable Senators Austin, Bonnell, Bourget, Cottreau, Denis, Eudes, Flynn*, Forsey, Graham, Haig, Langlois, Lucier, Macdonald, Marchand, McElman, Molgat, Perrault*, Petten, Riley, Smith (Colchester), Smith (Queens-Shelburne) and Sparrow. (20)

* Ex officio members.

SENATE COMMITTEE ON LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

The Honourable Senators Buckwold, Choquette, Croll, Eudes, Flynn*, Frith, Godfrey, Goldenberg, Hastings, Hayden, Laird, Lang, Langlois, Macdonald, McIlraith, Neiman, Perrault*, Riel, Robichaud, Smith (Colchester), Stanbury and Walker. (20)

* Ex officio members.

SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

The Honourable Senators Austin, Barrow, Beaubien, Buckwold, Connolly (Ottawa West), Cook, Desruisseaux, Flynn*, Haig, Hayden, Hays, Lafond, Laird, Lang, Macnaughton, McIlraith, Manning, Molson, Perrault*, Smith (Colchester), Sullivan and Walker. (20)

* Ex officio members.

SENATE COMMITTEE ON HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE

The Honourable Senators Adams, Bonnell, Bosa, Bourget, Cottreau, Croll, Denis, Flynn*, Fournier (de Lanaudière), Hastings, Inman, Langlois, Lucier, Macdonald, McElman, McGrand, Norrie, Perrault*, Phillips, Quart, Smith (Queens-Shelburne), and Sullivan. (20)

* Ex officio members.

SENATE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

The Honourable Senators Argue, Flynn*, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Fournier (Restigouche-Gloucester), Greene, Haig, Hays, Inman, Lafond, Macdonald, McDonald, McGrand, McNamara, Michaud, Molgat, Norrie, Olson, Perrault*, Riel, Sparrow, Williams and Yuzyk. (20)

* Ex officio members.

Your Committee recommends that the Senate consider incorporating into the Rules of the Senate a provision for facilitating changes in the membership of select committees during the course of a Session.

Respectfully submitted.

William J. Petten,
Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Petten moved that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

ALASKA HIGHWAY PIPELINE

PLANNING AND CO-ORDINATING AUTHORITY—FURTHER ANSWER

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, yesterday I provided a partial reply to a question asked by the Honourable Senator Lucier on the subject of the regulatory authority to be responsible for the pipeline along the Alaska Highway. I have further information this afternoon which supplements the information given previously.

Work is now in progress on the planning for this single agency. Direct preliminary discussions have been held with the Yukon Territorial Government, and this process of consultation will continue as development of the agency proceeds.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of Her Majesty the Queen's Speech at the opening of the Third

[Senator Petten.]

Session of the Thirtieth Parliament, and the motion of Senator Frith, seconded by Senator Marchand, for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. Edgar Fournier: Honourable senators, in rising to say a few words on the Speech from the Throne may I first ask for your indulgence and patience. I should like to follow the pattern of Senator Marchand by fully endorsing the complimentary remarks expressed by the mover, Senator Frith, and by Senator Flynn and all other senators on behalf of all of us.

I remember that on October 3, 1962, in the days when I had the complete use of all my faculties and the freedom of my tongue, a few hours after I was sworn in as a member of the Senate I had the honour of seconding the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, which was moved by my colleague and seatmate Senator Haig.

In those days it was a pleasure to perform these duties, because the Speech from the Throne contained something to talk about, something to look forward to, something constructive. Nevertheless, I congratulate both Senators Frith and Marchand for their great ability in mastering a difficult and embarrassing situation. They both expressed their views eloquently, and deserve praise.

● (1410)

I confess that I agree 90 per cent, perhaps 95 per cent, with what Senator Marchand had to say. However, I am of the opinion that the whole separatist movement started when the Quebec government of the day flattered too much the so-called "quiet revolution".

I have always believed that a quiet revolution does not exist, that there is no such thing as a quiet revolution. Revolutions may start quietly, but they do not remain so for very long. Revolutions mean trouble, bloodshed and war, and I ask myself whether the murder of the Honourable Pierre Laporte and the kidnapping of Mr. Cross were part of that "quiet revolution". For over 15 years we have heard about the quiet revolution as being something pleasant, friendly, peaceful and productive. Perhaps some day we may have to pay the price, and that day may not be too far away.

Last year, only one year ago, the federal administration spent more than was spent in the first 77 years of Confederation—that is, from 1867 to 1944—and furthermore the federal government's expenditure today is twice as much as it was five years ago.

If my memory serves me correctly, I recall reading a newspaper article in 1943, at the height of the Second World War, to the effect that it was costing the federal administration approximately $35 million a day. At the time I thought it was an enormous figure. However, based on the 1975-76 budget of $46 billion, we are today spending $126 million a day, $5.2 million every hour, $81,800 every minute, and an incredible $1,363 every second. I call that the road toward self-destruction, and those figures are likely to be increased in this year's budget.

There are several reasons for believing that we are proceeding in the wrong direction. Our democracy is based on freedom—freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom of the press, and free enterprise. Freedom of speech is gradually being challenged.

[Translation]

Freedom of speech, which is sometimes too free, is often placed in the hands of an unscrupulous press which lets itself go to slander or calumny for personal, political or lucrative reasons, and these slanders or lies are then broadcast throughout the world, which has a destructive effect on our democracy.

The freedom of private enterprise, which is the basis of our society, is being destroyed and must face many problems: the difficulty of producing at competitive prices on world markets, often because of the demands of a somewhat pampered nation with no consideration for the consequences which often follow; union demands; slow-downs in production; mechanization; push-buttons; the abuse of social services and unemployment insurance; education; medical and public services; electrical energy; fuel; and the taxes which in many areas have reached levels about which we should all be concerned.

We seem to forget that all the empires of the past, starting with the Roman Empire, were destroyed by revolutions caused by over-taxation.

In my opinion, the monetary system can no longer meet the needs and the demands of the people unless we make an appropriate reform. Otherwise, we shall have the same type of situation as in 1929-30.

[English]

Honourable senators, I worry about the future of Canada, the future of America and the future of the capitalist monetary system, which will be in serious jeopardy unless we clean it up by bringing about the necessary reforms based on justice, honesty, sincerity and willingness to work for reasonable returns. This is very urgent, and it will not be an easy task to undertake. I foresee a short life for any government attempting to make these changes in a peaceful way. Some of the four basic principles of our system will have to be temporarily shelved for some time. If we do not do this the communists will do it for us, with our help.

With regard to the unity of Canada, some reforms are urgent. The Constitution as it is has outlived its time. The structure is now close to 110 years old, and, although the framework is still good, much of the furniture needs modification in order to meet the requirements and demands of the Canadian people. For the last 20 years or so many requests for reform have fallen on deaf ears. Piecemeal patching up no longer meets the requirements of this country. However, we should not look for overnight reform. Reform should be carried out with wisdom and good judgment, giving the welfare of the nation first priority, superseding all political ambitions, with the objective of building a Canada where we all can live together regardless of nationality, race or religion.

I am inclined to believe that exaggerated news media distortion of the facts is detrimental to Canadian unity and is doing a great deal of harm.

The Constitution as it was first created provided for a two-party system. Today we have four parties, and honourable senators all know the consequences of this situation. In many cases, unless there is unanimous consent, one member can hold up the progress of the house for days, thus costing the federal government thousands of dollars a day by forcing it into endless and useless debate. The majority of the house is no longer the authority.

In addition to all of this, there are too many crown corporations without control. In 1970 I was able to obtain a list of all crown corporations, which are to be found at page 847 of Hansard of that year. At that time there were 47 such corporations, but many more have been added. These are divided into three sections, B, C and D. Honourable senators, with your consent I should like the list of these crown corporations, and the departments to which they are responsible, printed as an appendix to today's Hansard.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For list of crown corporations, see appendix, p. 52)

Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): This list is an eye-opener. Most of these crown corporations merely submit an annual report to the responsible minister, to be accepted as is, and the government picks up the tab, whether the results represent a deficit or a surplus. In my opinion this needs readjustment. I hope that some of our new senators will be interested in this, and will shortly provide the Senate with a revised list of crown corporations.

Unemployment seems to be a prime concern today. We might as well face the fact that high unemployment is here to stay and that it will get worse as time goes on. Who wants to work today when the unemployed, and those who receive welfare, are treated as they have never been treated before? Quite often the rest of us are told by the recipients, "You are a darned fool to work." This is the state the country finds itself in. Anybody thinking of providing jobs becomes an adversary of the unemployed. To be unemployed today is an honour. It requires a certain skill to remain on the unemployment rolls, and too many people have that skill.

● (1420)

Many factors contribute to unemployment, such as exorbitant salaries for inadequate qualifications, little regard for the employer's ability to pay, and lack of interest in the welfare of the employer and his ability to maintain a profitable market. In order to survive, the employer is forced to introduce sophisticated push-button machines, controlled by a few hands but producing the work of hundreds of men and women. At one time more than half the people in the work force were skilled labourers, but these people have practically disappeared except for workers employed in the building industry as carpenters or in affiliated trades. As a result, tens of thousands of common labourers are on the idle list. These factors, to mention only a few, produce unemployment.

In my opinion, the idea of spending from $30,000 to $50,000 to create one job is a costly and inefficient method of fighting unemployment.

We often read or hear about Senate reform. On several occasions I have been contacted by people, mostly students, who have not the least knowledge of what the Senate is all about. I have always taken pleasure in inviting these students, along with their professors, to visit the Senate and spend a few days exploring all avenues of the Senate's various functions. They soon find that it is the House of Commons that should be reformed, not the Senate.

The main role of the Senate is to study legislation, to pass it, amend it or reject it. It has often been said of the Senate that it is a house of sober, second thought. But how can the Senate give any thought at all to bills if they are not sent here from the House of Commons or introduced in this chamber in the first instance? Let us look at the record of the last session, the session of 1976-77, and see how many bills received royal assent: October, one; November, none; December, two; February, three; March, four; April, none; May, three; June 16 to 30, eighteen; July 1 to 15, twenty-two, including twelve electoral boundaries bills. One look at the months of June and July will indicate where the trouble is.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, in closing I would like to come back to the subject of national unity.

It seems to me that there is too much publicity on this subject, which irritates the population, and that we are creating an incurable resentment among the various races and nationalities which make up Canada.

We should reflect instead on what Quebec will lose if it separates. In my opinion, it will not do so. The Parti Québécois is already having serious internal troubles. Its prolonged existence is already doubtful. It is already past its best.

The referendum in Quebec will contribute to its defeat. What will a national referendum achieve? The nine other provinces do not want separation. Everyone agrees about this. In that case, why do it if not to add a pail of mud to already polluted bogs.

[English]

Hon. Frederick William Rowe: Honourable senators, I wish to speak very briefly in this debate.

Before getting into the substance of my argument, I should like to extend my congratulations to you, Madam Speaker, not only on the continuation of your role as the Speaker of this house, but also on the very gracious and efficient manner in which you have discharged your duties in recent weeks, when you had to take the onerous burden—and I use the word advisedly—connected with the royal visit and the matters pertaining to it.

I extend to Your Honour our very best wishes for a continuation of what I believe has been to you a gratifying term of office, and certainly a most satisfactory term of office as far as the Senate is concerned.

[Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche).]

I would like also to express my congratulations to the mover and seconder of this motion and to the senators who have spoken so far, including my honourable and esteemed colleague who has just sat down. I regret that, through no fault of mine, I was unable to be present last night to hear what the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the Government had to say. I have read the Hansard account of their contributions, and I congratulate them. Perhaps I should explain that my absence last night was due to the fact that the plane, which ordinarily gets into Ottawa around 6 o'clock or shortly thereafter, through some mechanical trouble did not arrive until 10.30 in the evening, and consequently I missed the sitting.

I congratulate those who have spoken. While we do not always agree with one another, we do, in one way or another, feel proud that the Senate, through these speakers, has been able to make a contribution to Canadian thinking on these very important matters that are concerning us today.

Today I propose to deal with only one aspect of one problem concerning Canada. There are, of course, a great many items one could select from the Speech from the Throne, and if I were to deal only with one aspect of Canadian need at this time, it might be better for all concerned. I want to speak about power and energy needs. In particular, I want to speak about those needs as they concern the province of Newfoundland and the province of Quebec and, of course, by extension, all of Canada.

I think a little historical background is in order here. Some honourable senators will recall very vividly the beginning of our great industrial scheme back in the early 1950s. That originated when the Premier of Newfoundland went to England and succeeded in interesting the then Prime Minister of England, the revered Winston Churchill, in the possibility of developing some of the resources of Newfoundland, including that great undeveloped part of the province we know as Labrador.

It is an indication of the importance of that concept that Churchill, beset with many problems, as he was, was willing to not only spend many hours discussing this with the Newfoundland representatives, but was able to interest other distinguished Britons in this possibility and also, I might say, citizens of other countries as well. In particular, he enlisted the aid of his close friend and former colleague in two world wars, the Canadian-born Lord Beaverbrook. Between them they were able to interest the House of Rothschild and, through the Rothschilds, other leading industrialists and financiers of England, and later of other countries as well, including the United States. As a result, a great consortium of industrial and financial interests was brought together, twenty-one in all, including some of the world's largest and most prestigious financial and industrial organizations.

● (1430)

In England alone—and I only recalled these names from memory as I was making these notes this morning, although there are many others I could name—in addition to Churchill and Beaverbrook there were people like Lord Leathers, a very famous Englishman in the fifties, Sir Val Duncan and Sir Eric Bowater, and many others heading up the great financial houses of England, and some of the great mining and other development companies of England and the world.

As a result, in 1952 basic negotiations started, which culminated in 1953—I am mentioning these dates deliberately, because I want honourable senators to follow the chronology of this—in an agreement being signed for what came to be known as the Brinco agreement—the British Newfoundland Corporation Limited agreement. Perhaps at this point I should interject that the basic purpose of the formation of this great corporation was the development of the undeveloped resources of the island of Newfoundland and the territory of Labrador, and in particular the development of mining, forestry and water power.

I can speak with some knowledge of this, because I was one of the three Newfoundland signatories to the agreement in 1953, when I was then Minister of Mines and Resources in the Government of Newfoundland. The corporation immediately and energetically started to get together a group of men who were outstanding in their various fields, with the object of getting development going at the earliest possible date.

One of the great concerns of that group and that corporation was the development of the water power of Labrador, because from the plateau of Labrador there flowed into the Atlantic Ocean the single largest undeveloped potential source of power on the face of the earth. There was approximately ten million horse-power—we do not use horse-power nowadays; today I think the megawatt is used as the unit of measurement—on one river alone, the Churchill River. Many people have expressed surprise that so much power could be concentrated there. Power greater than that at Niagara was there, although the geographical area of the watershed of the river is much smaller than the watershed comprising the Great Lakes and the Niagara River. However, what many forget is that the water is deposited in the form of rain and snow on a plateau which is from 1,000 to 2,000 feet above sea level, and all of it must fall those 1,000 to 2,000 feet before reaching the Atlantic Ocean.

Well, that company started to work to try to get development going and, in particular, this water-power development. I believe it is advisable at this point to recall the names of some of the great Canadians who were associated with it—some of the greatest names politically, financially and industrially in the history of Canada. We must start, of course, with that of Premier Smallwood, whose name will be forever associated with that development because the original concept was his. It was his idea to go to Churchill and develop in this way the resources of the province. There was also the first chairman of Brinco, a man we in Newfoundland knew, because he spent his early professional life there, as Bertie Gardner, the president, and later chairman of the board, of the Bank of Montreal and one of the leading financial names in modern Canadian history. Also associated with the project were men of the order of Robert Winters, who for many years was president of Brinco and whose name is a household word to many present in this chamber—Bob Winters, as we knew him. Then we had Henry Borden—I do not need to labour this—who was associated with Brinco, and later with the Churchill power development, for many years. There was Donald Gordon, one-time head, I believe, of the Bank of Canada and certainly head of the CNR for many years and one of the great names in Canadian industrial history. We had men such as R. D. Mulholland, another president of the Bank of Montreal, and later William Mulholland—no relation—who I believe at this moment is the chief executive officer of the Bank of Montreal. There were men such as Don McParland, a young and brilliant financier and developer, who tragically lost his life a year or two before the culmination of the great Churchill development.

In spite of all the efforts made by these men, and by many others whose names I could list, it was not until July 1967, 15 years after the formation of Brinco, that the sod-turning ceremony took place. Then for the next five years the construction and development went on at the fastest possible pace. This, I would remind honourable senators, was the greatest single undertaking of its kind in the history of mankind, the greatest single project ever undertaken in Canada up to that point in time, necessitating an outlay of $1 billion. It was the first $1 billion project, I am told, in Canadian history, and I am speaking now of ten to twelve years ago when $1 billion meant a great deal more than it does today.

The first power came on stream in December 1971, and, in fact, the official opening was in June 1972. The point I would ask you to keep in mind is that with all the energy, ability and expertise, and with all the almost unlimited credit at its disposal, this development, from the formation of Brinco until the time we got power out of Churchill Falls, took a total of 20 years. One is tempted to ask why did it take so long? Certainly the power was needed; the market was there in the United States and in central Canada, and certainly Newfoundland needed both the revenue that would be derived from this undertaking and, above all, the jobs.

• (1440)

This great enterprise, the construction of which lasted over five years, employed, at its peak, 6,000 workers at the then highest wages for construction work being paid in Canada. And yet, I have to say—and this is my personal opinion—that if Newfoundland knew then what it knows today it would not have approved the agreement, and the waters of the Churchill River would still be flowing unutilized into the Atlantic Ocean.

An agreement was made between the Churchill Falls Corporation, an affiliate of Brinco, and the Province of Quebec after many, many years of hard and difficult negotiations. In the 20-odd year period during which I was associated with the Government of Newfoundland, those were the hardest and most difficult negotiations I ever saw it undertake.

I do not want to be guilty of recriminations on this point, but Newfoundland found it very, very difficult to get what it considered to be a reasonable agreement from Quebec over that period of time. I am not referring to any particular government, because there were, I believe, five administrations in the province of Quebec over that period. I am not attaching blame to any one political party or any one administration.

For several years the project was stymied by the position taken, not so much publicly, by the Government of Quebec, which was that before it would go along with any development it wanted to have the Labrador boundary renegotiated. Newfoundland made it clear then, as I am sure it will do in the foreseeable future, that it will never negotiate a decision made in a court which had the indirect participation of the then Government of Quebec, a decision made by the Privy Council in 1927, which established that that part of the Labrador Peninsula was part of the territory of Newfoundland and that it would be Newfoundland's for all time.

That position is not negotiable, and any Government of Quebec will be simply wasting its time, as it wasted its time over a period of years, to Newfoundland's detriment, and to the detriment of the rest of Canada.

The other decision on the part of the Government of Quebec which held up the development was the attitude that this power, when developed, would go as far as the Quebec border and no farther as the property of Newfoundland. At that point it would become the property of Quebec.

An appropriate analogy would be the Province of Saskatchewan taking the position that Alberta oil or gas moving to, say, the province of Ontario would be the property of Alberta until it reaches the border of Saskatchewan, at which point it would become the property of Saskatchewan. In other words, Saskatchewan would purchase those resources at rates to be agreed upon, and the Province of Manitoba, in turn, would do the same thing, and so on, through the remaining seven or eight provinces, if necessary.

Without attacking any single administration, it is my feeling now that the governments in power in Canada in the 1950s and early sixties fell down on the job. This transmission of power from the Labrador Peninsula, to be utilized in Ontario, or New England, or New York, should have been under the aegis of the Government of Canada and not of the Government of Newfoundland or the Government of Quebec, or that of any other province. The net result of all of this was that, in order to get the money which Newfoundland needed—so much per horsepower development, a share of the profits of Brinco—in order to get that money and, above all, to get the 6,000 jobs that were involved and which were so desperately needed in Newfoundland, the Province of Newfoundland had to enter into an agreement with Quebec which it should not have had to enter into.

At the time it seemed to be a fairly good agreement. The price of energy throughout the world had remained virtually stable for 50 years. No one could visualize—Donald Gordon did not realize it; Bob Winters did not realize it—no one could foresee that 10 years thereafter there would be a worldwide shortage of energy and that the cost of power would be 10 to 20 times as high as it then was. That is what has happened. The beneficiary of all that, of course, is not the Province of Newfoundland. We are saddled with a 44-year agreement. The beneficiary is the Province of Quebec, to whom Newfoundland, through Brinco and the Churchill Falls Corporation, is selling power at a cost of from 3.3 to 3.6 mills per kilowatt hour, and I understand that some of that power is being resold by the Province of Quebec for as much as 20 mills per kilowatt hour, or at least many, many times more than what Quebec is paying.

[Senator Rowe.]

It is very easy to be a little ruthless about this matter. It would be easy for the ordinary bystander to be a little cynical, saying, "You made your bed, lie in it." But I say now that no one in Canada, no one associated with Brinco—and this included some of the best financial brains of the world as well as some of the greatest industrialists—no one foresaw what was going to happen. As a result, Newfoundland came out on the short end and the Province of Quebec has the advantage. We do not begrudge these windfall profits to the Province of Quebec. We do feel, however, that we should have some share in them. More important than that is the fact that Canada has only developed the power on the Upper Churchill. That is the single greatest development in the world. It develops 5,200 megawatts. In terms of horsepower, that would probably be something in the order of six million horsepower. I do not know offhand what the conversion formula would be. Perhaps it will make it more realistic if I tell you that the existing development at Churchill Falls which takes power to the border between Newfoundland and Quebec, and at which point it is purchased by the Province of Quebec, is sufficient to supply all the power, all the energy needs of every kind, for three cities of the size of Montreal. But, in addition, that one single source of power now on the Lower Churchill has a potential which could be developed, figuratively speaking, tomorrow. In fact, honourable senators, the development did get under way, and then was stymied at a cost to Newfoundland, I believe, speaking offhand, of something approaching $200 million. On the Lower Churchill there are another 1,800, and perhaps 2,000, kilowatts; in other words, roughly two-fifths of the development of the Upper Churchill.

● (1450)

And that is not all, honourable senators, because we have many other great rivers. So far I have spoken only of the Churchill, but we have other great rivers flowing from this plateau into the Atlantic Ocean, and entirely within the boundaries of the Province of Newfoundland, like the Eagle River and the Paradise River. The Eagle River alone—and here I am speaking from memory—has a watershed of 13,000 square miles, and again the water is all up there, 1,000 to 1,500 feet above sea level, and it has to come down to sea level. In addition to the Eagle River and the Paradise River you have a dozen of these great rivers flowing down to the ocean, and they have—and these are the latest figures which I got this morning from the Ministry of Energy in Newfoundland—a capability of 4,400 megawatts.

But that is not all, honourable senators. In addition, there are a number of large rivers, like the Romaine River, which have their headwaters in the Province of Newfoundland, but which flow into and through Quebec territory into the Gulf of St. Lawrence. There are five or six such rivers which come from that plateau, and there we have 3,300 megawatts.

So we are now talking about a total of 8,000 megawatts, and here let us remember that the Churchill development, the biggest of its kind in the world, generates only 5,000 megawatts. We still have 8,000 megawatts which could be developed, from an engineering standpoint and from a financial standpoint, quite feasibly over the next four or five years. But such development as there has been has ceased; nothing has been completed at all, and the water which gives rise to that potential of 8,000 megawatts is flowing, as it has done ever since the ice age, into the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Atlantic Ocean and is, for all practical purposes, of no use to anybody. Again let me remind you, honourable senators, as an illustration, that here I am talking of sufficient power—not yet developed but which could very readily be developed—to supply the energy needs of every type of nine cities the size of Toronto or Montreal. And I say, honourable senators, that for all that power, all that potential, to be flowing away at this particular time with nothing being done about it is a national disgrace.

Here, honourable senators, I want to go on record and say that in my view if the Governments of Canada in the 1950s—and here I am speaking of the administrations in Ottawa—had done what I believe they were entitled to do under the British North America Act—I was looking just now for the particular clause and while I did not locate it I know it is there, the clause which permits the Government of Canada to declare a project to be in the national interest—if the government had done what it could legally have done in the 1950s, and which it morally should have done—and which I suggest might be a little bit more difficult today, for reasons that I do not need to go into—if that had been done in the 1950s then that power and that potential on the Labrador peninsula would be, if not completely developed today, at least in the process of being developed, and would be available to us within the next three or four years. Instead of that we find ourselves in a very different situation. Is there anybody here who thinks that we are not going to have a crisis of the first order in the next five or six years, and certainly in the next eight or ten years, so far as the supply of energy is concerned? We would have to have our heads dug into the sand pretty deeply if we did not realize that possibility—and it is not just a possibility, but a certainty. We are going to have crisis after crisis, and meanwhile all that power will be flowing away with nothing being done about it.

In what I am about to say now, let me make it quite clear that I am expressing my own personal opinion. I am not expressing the views of any other person in public life in Newfoundland, but I believe that there is almost complete unanimity amongst all the political parties in Newfoundland, and complete unanimity so far as the people of Newfoundland are concerned, on this particular point that I am going to enunciate now. I do not believe that any Government of Newfoundland will agree to any joint plans for the development of the undeveloped resources, water and hydro resources, of Labrador without a renegotiation of the existing Churchill Falls agreement. Finally, I want to say that I do not believe that any Government of Canada can afford to pussyfoot or fence-straddle on this issue. I realize that these are delicate times, and I realize that we have certain fundamental problems confronting us, and, as we say in Newfoundland, we have to be careful not to rock the boat any more than is absolutely necessary, but I do say that Ottawa has the right under the British North America Act to take action. It has the legal right and, I repeat, it has the moral right, indeed the moral responsibility, to see to it that action is taken in the national interest so that the vagaries of political fortunes in Newfoundland or Quebec or any other province will not be allowed to hamstring or prevent the development of this tremendous resource which Newfoundland needs, which Quebec needs, and which certainly the rest of Canada needs—that is, the development of the energy resources of Labrador.

Senator Godfrey: Will the honourable senator permit a question? If this power had been developed in the 1950s in the manner that he suggested could have been done, wouldn't that power have been sold to the United States at the time through long-term contracts at a low price?

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, this will sound rather like a cliché, but I am glad that my honourable colleague has raised that question because it reminds me of something I intended mentioning earlier, which is that the Government of Newfoundland had two choices. Theoretically, we did not have to sell the power to the Province of Quebec. We could have brought the power—and we had this possibility examined by one of the world's leading engineering firms—from Churchill Falls down to the southern part of Labrador, across the 10-mile Strait of Belle Isle by means of a tunnel—which could, incidentally, have subsequently been turned into a traffic tunnel as well, which would have relieved Newfoundland once and for all of its insularity—and then approximately 320 miles down the entire west coast of Newfoundland, and then across the 70-mile or 80-mile, depending on what route you use, Cabot Strait.

Senator Flynn: A tunnel again?

● (1500)

Senator Rowe: No, not a tunnel. I would remind my honourable friend that the Strait of Belle Isle presents an entirely different engineering problem from the Cabot Strait. The Strait of Belle Isle has, as I am sure the Deputy Leader of the Government knows because he is a well-known sailor, some of the heaviest tides of the world. It also has, of course, icebergs which travel up and down at, for icebergs, fantastic rates. Therefore, anything done on the Strait of Belle Isle would have to be either above those icebergs, which would not be too easy, or below them under the sea bed, and that would not be too difficult a proposition.

On the other hand, in the Cabot Strait there are no icebergs to be concerned with. The power could be brought across the floor of the Cabot Strait into Cape Breton, and then across Nova Scotia to New Brunswick and on into Maine. From an engineering point of view that is quite feasible, and I had that opinion confirmed again only this morning by some of the leading engineers in Canada.

Senator Flynn: How much did they charge to give you that opinion?

Senator Rowe: The only problem there is the cost. Obviously, that is pretty serious because it would drive the cost of the power up to an uneconomical rate. But I would remind my honourable friend that it might not be an uneconomical rate ten years from now, or even in less time than that.

The answer to the question, however, is that at the time we were talking about, say even in 1960, Ontario had a great need for power. As you know, some of that power was supplied in other ways to Ontario. For that matter, it was supplied in other ways to Quebec and to other parts of Canada through thermal generation, and in some cases through nuclear generation, especially in the United States.

But with respect to having to make long-term deals with the United States, I doubt that that would have been any serious problem because a good deal of that energy could have been consumed in Canada, and cheap energy of that kind would certainly have encouraged expansion of the manufacturing industries in Canada.

We discussed the possibility at that time of making agreements with the United States, and I know that the objection my honourable friend has raised could have been eliminated or avoided completely.

Senator Greene: Would the honourable senator permit a question? Do I gather from his speech that even though Newfoundland is a young son of Confederation, there is a disposition in Newfoundland to keep the family together? Is there a spirit in Newfoundland that is determined to keep Canada together?

Senator Walker: Yes or no?

Senator Rowe: As my honourable friend knows, I played a small role in helping make Newfoundland a part of the Canadian nation, so I think I can say with some assurance that at that time there was a strong minority feeling that, instead of joining Canada, Newfoundland should consider some form of affiliation with the United States. There were some pretty solid reasons for that. More of our people were living in the United States than in mainland Canada; there were sentimental ties and other close ties because of the American bases in Newfoundland at that time. My guess now is that the great majority of the people of Newfoundland would not want to see Newfoundland dissociate from Canada and they would certainly not want to see Canada break up. They would not want to see Quebec break away, in other words.

Having said that, I think I should say in fairness to Newfoundland that that does not mean Newfoundland is at all satisfied with its role as part of the Canadian nation. The people of Newfoundland sometimes have the feeling that many Canadians believe that all that Newfoundland is doing is drawing welfare benefits, unemployment insurance or something of that kind.

I am sure I need not remind honourable senators that when Newfoundland became part of Canada it brought to the Canadian nation some great sources of wealth—the great iron mines and other mineral resources of Labrador, the great water power, the great paper manufacturing industries, and so on—which have tremendously improved Canada's position vis-à-vis other countries of the world.

[Senator Rowe.]

The answer very simply is that no part of Canada is more anxious to see Canada stay together, but we do have 600,000 people; we do have the biggest unemployment problem in Canada; and in terms of the general standards of living we do still have some of the lowest in Canada. That is not the fault of the Newfoundland people. Indeed, it may not be the fault of anybody. Whatever the cause, it is certainly a problem in Newfoundland, just as it is in other parts of Canada which have somewhat similar needs—New Brunswick, parts of Quebec and parts of Nova Scotia, particularly Cape Breton Island, and so on—and, as a nation, we have to be more concerned about these deficiencies than we have been in the past.

Senator Bourget: Honourable senators, I just want to say that I shall have to read in Hansard what the Honourable Senator Rowe has been saying, because I was a director of Brinco for a time. I am no longer a director, and I gather from what Senator Rowe has been saying that there may be certain things that should be looked into.

On motion of Senator Flynn, for Senator Smith (Colchester), debate adjourned.

AGRICULTURE

"RECOGNIZING THE REALITIES: A BEEF IMPORT POLICY FOR CANADA"—INTERIM REPORT ON CANADIAN BEEF INDUSTRY—
DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, October 20, the debate on the inquiry of Senator Argue calling the attention of the Senate to the interim report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, appointed in the last session of Parliament and authorized in that session to examine from time to time any aspect of the agricultural industry in Canada, on its inquiry into the desirability of long-term stabilization in the Canadian beef industry, entitled: "Recognizing the Realities: A Beef Import Policy for Canada," tabled in the Senate on Friday, October 14, 1977.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, before I make any comments on the report itself, I wish to associate myself with the remarks by the chairman of the committee, the Honourable Senator Argue, when he thanked all those who shared in the work involved in producing this report. There was, in fact, a great deal of work.

I also wish to associate myself with what was said by my colleagues, the Honourable Senator Olson and the Honourable Senator Greene, in respect of the chairman, because if it had not been for his continued effort and determination the report would not have been possible. And those honourable senators who have worked with Senator Argue know, when I say he was determined, that that is an adjective which is fully applicable.

Senator Flynn: Stubborn!

Senator Molgat: Without his determined work in the last year we could not have accomplished what we, in fact, did accomplish, namely, a really good report. Perhaps, being a member of the committee, I have a prejudiced view, but I do think it is a good report. I believe that there has been a good reaction to the report, certainly by Canadian producers. So I express, with my colleagues, our thanks to Senator Argue.

● (1510)

I believe also, as Senator Greene pointed out, that in the process of the work of the committee not only were we doing a great service to the beef industry in Canada, but we were doing also a good job for the Senate. We were showing the kind of work that the Senate can do and has done. I am not suggesting that it is the first time, but it is the type of inquiry that the Senate can undertake most effectively. It is my view that the travels of the subcommittee to other parts of Canada were an important element in achieving a better report.

Turning now to the report itself, I want to emphasize the seriousness of the situation in the beef industry. It is extremely important that this message gets across to all Canadians. There is a tendency, I suppose, for all of us to look at our own problems, the ones with which we are more familiar, and not always to understand those of other regions.

The beef industry in Canada has been in a very serious position for at least the past three years. Some might say, "Well, it's a cyclical business. It's up and down. Some years you make money, some years you lose money." The fact is that over the past three years, and probably the last four years, not only beef producers in Canada lost money—that is to say, not made a normal income—but they have actually experienced a substantial decrease in their assets. They have been eating into their assets.

I suppose that one way of describing it would be to quote the words of one of the young ranchers who appeared before the committee. His words appear in our report, and it might be well to have them on record, because I believe he expressed, as one actually involved in the industry, his frustrations and problems. I am quoting Mr. Evann Thordarson from Saskatchewan, who said:

No industry can exist for long if it has to borrow one or two hundred dollars against its capital assets for every unit of production it markets. We (the beef producers) have in fact, during the past three years, been subsidizing the Canadian consumer by borrowing money against the equity that our fathers, our grandfathers and in some cases our great-grandfathers, built up in the form of land and brood cows, to cover deficits in our income.

So it is not simply a case of not making money, of having an income that is frozen. It is a definite, straight case of really eating into assets built up in past years, the result being that many have simply given up and have left the industry. Unfortunately, many were young farmers who had been encouraged to enter this specific industry.

More recently we had the report on farming, a very recent study, issued from Winnipeg on October 19. Although the Canadian Cattlemen's Association made the statement, the report was prepared by the independent consulting firm of Broadwith-Hughes Co., of Guelph, Ontario. It says that poor prices have cost beef producers $100 million a year in lost equity over the past three years—that is, $100 million by producers in the beef industry in actual losses; money that they had previously made and invested in the cattle industry, and which has now been frittered away. Producers have had, in fact, to subsidize consumer prices.

So we have a situation which, in the interests of producers and of consumers, cannot be allowed to continue, because quite obviously an industry in that condition will—depending, I suppose, on the financial strength of those who are involved—within a certain period of time, be it five or ten years, eventually disappear.

In the meantime we are faced with a different world situation and a complete change in trading patterns in the beef industry. The committee's report deals strictly with the questions of imports, import policy, and exports. I am not pretending—and the committee does not say this, by any means—that those are the only problems existing in the beef industry. There are others. But at this moment we are focusing on this particular item because of the importance of timing.

Canada is faced at this time with negotiations of the GATT in Geneva, and we believe it is important that the committee's findings be published now so that Parliament, the Canadian government, and Canadian negotiators are aware of what we have found and can conduct their negotiations on the basis of what we believe to be sound information. That is the reason why we are focusing on the import question.

In looking at the import situation we found that the beef industry in Canada had changed drastically over the past 10 years; that we have moved from being a net exporter of beef, if we take in all aspects of it—fresh, frozen, slaughter animals, and so on. We have since moved drastically into being not only a net importer, but a very substantial importer. In this past year, the last year for which we have specific figures, we imported some 13.3 per cent of our total consumption. Compared with what we produced, 13.3 per cent of our total consumption was represented by imports. In a period of 10 years we have moved to this position from a position of being a net exporter. Obviously the industry is eroding very substantially. During that time Canadian producers proceeded to adjust in response to the very low prices. As has been mentioned, a number of them were getting out of the industry, and the number of cattle on Canadian farms started to drop.

If honourable senators refer to Table IX on page 33 of our report, which is headed "Beef Cows on Farms at December 1st," they will find that in 1976 the number dropped by 4.4 per cent, and, in 1977, by a further 4.8 per cent. Obviously, if one's cow herd is going down, one's production for slaughter purposes will automatically go down.

While that has been happening here, the same development has not necessarily occurred in other countries. When we are dealing with beef in Canada, apart from our own production in terms of Canadian consumption, we are really concerned with three other countries, namely, the United States, Australia and New Zealand. Our imports from other sources are so small as to be negligible, so those are the three countries that matter. I am not suggesting that production in other countries does not have an effect on what happens to our prices and on the world situation—quite obviously it does—but from a direct import standpoint, as far as we are concerned, the United States, Australia and New Zealand are the three countries we have to consider particularly.

● (1520)

If you look at the total number of cattle on farms, as shown in the table on pages 16 and 17—and this, while it reflects more than just the beef situation, is nevertheless a function of beef production—you will note that starting in 1974, as I indicated earlier, the number of Canadian cattle started to drop from 14 million to 13.7 million in 1975, and to 13.6 million in 1976. In the United States the same pattern developed, but not quite as soon. It started one year later. There again, however, the drop has started to be evident. Nevertheless, when you look at the other two main Canadian suppliers, New Zealand and Australia, you see that that is not happening. In both of those countries cattle numbers have continued to increase, at least until 1976, the last year for which we have figures. Where we started to drop, after a peak in 1974, both of those countries have continued to increase their numbers of cattle.

Senator Bélisle: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Molgat: Certainly.

Senator Bélisle: The honourable senator is quoting all these figures, but is it not a fact that we were told on our western travels that the drop in the number of cattle was due to our sales of wheat, barley and so on. The price was so good that it was a paying proposition for the farmers to sell these grains rather than feed them to the cattle. Indirectly, therefore, if the number of cattle has decreased, it is due to the fact that wheat, barley and so on was bringing a high price. Could it not work in the opposite way if wheat becomes a commodity like nickel?

Senator Molgat: There is no question, Senator Bélisle, but that the feed situation is a very important factor in the beef industry. As I indicated earlier, my comments deal specifically with the import and export question, but, to answer your question, certainly the substantial increase in the numbers of feeders on Canadian farms was, in part, the result of difficulty in selling grain some years ago. Then, when grain started to move much more readily, and there was no need to convert it to meat, there was a tendency to reduce the numbers of cattle. That is true, but I still believe that the main reason for the decrease in numbers of cattle on Canadian farms was the very low price of beef. A farmer simply could not make money at it. However, feed was unquestionably a factor.

In any case, during the course of our meetings both here in Ottawa and across the country, we were met by consistent requests by producers, by provincial government representatives and by, I would say, anyone who came before us, for some kind of beef import law. Very frequently the suggestion was that it should be patterned on the American law, but that there should be some way of regulating imports on a long-term basis. During that period of time—that is, over the past year—the government established temporary quotas which, by and large, have been monitored and adhered to, and there are no problems in that regard, but the virtually unanimous statement that was made to us was that there ought to be a regular structure, one on which people involved in the beef industry could depend on a long-term basis so as to be able to do some planning. Short-term quota arrangements simply did not permit them to carry out this kind of long-term planning and have the kind of confidence in the industry that is required in order to maintain a viable Canadian beef industry. These requests are to be found in the report, and they came from all sources, including virtually all the producer groups. Some went as far as the supply management proposal, although they were by no means a majority, and even those who suggested supply management still recognized that there had to be an import control structure of some kind.

[Senator Molgat.]

From our own findings and these requests we have produced the specific proposals in this report, and I believe they are sound when the whole picture is considered. In order to achieve this, I think we will have to have a substantial change in the approach of the government towards the agricultural industry. It seems to me that in the past the industry has been considered to be one that should not be a factor in our negotiations with other countries when it comes to trade questions, and, in fact, if it is a factor at all, it is not one we should bargain with. If there are to be any protective measures, they ought to be for the industrial sector, it was thought, since the agricultural sector is one that can stand by itself. The attitude, I think, of many Canadians, is that, after all, we have very large expanses of land, that this land is highly productive, and agriculture can take care of itself without any kind of government assistance, although at times it may need some special programs. However, the long-term policy has not been in any way directed towards the kind of proposals we are making now.

As a westerner I have traditionally shared the view that free trade, or freer trade, is in the long-range interests of our nation, but I confess that when I look at the problems faced by this particular industry I have to agree that measures must be taken. At the moment, the Canadian government, as you have no doubt seen from the newspapers, is proceeding to seek new clothing import quotas. The minister responsible is quoted as saying that he will try to negotiate import quotas with the seven countries that provide 80 per cent of Canada's clothing imports. If he is successful, he will start negotiations on similar agreements with 14 other clothing exporters. I am quoting this from the Globe and Mail of Friday, October 21.

I think we have to have a look now at the agricultural industry, and certainly at the beef industry, in the same light as we are prepared to look at the textile industry. Unless we do so, I fear that we will eventually end up with no beef industry, and I do not think that a nation can afford to have one of its major sources of food dependent completely on imports. It is essential, as a matter of national security, that there be a basic food production industry in this country. The need here, as I see it, is for a long-term policy that will permit the ranchers to engage in planning.

I think we have to look at other agricultural industries. For example, let us look at the sheep industry. Many years ago, we had a sheep industry in this country, and we do not have one now. People will say, "Well, the cattle industry will not disappear." There are still a few people raising sheep in Canada, but we do not come anywhere close to producing our needs. The same thing can happen in the beef industry.

Obviously there will be concern from the consumer side, and I can understand it. No one wants to pay more than he has to for any product. On the other hand, unless we have some stability in the beef industry the consumer side will suffer as well in the long run. If a sector of Canadian production as important as the beef industry were, in fact, to be eliminated, consumers in this country would be affected by the consequent loss of jobs and markets. Our balance of trade would be in serious difficulties, and the consumers would stand to lose in the long run. In the short run as well the consumers have to recognize that they really have been getting a great bargain in beef.

Let us look at the figures of Canadian food purchasing, and the amount Canadians spend on food in comparison with what citizens of other countries spend. I have here figures produced by the OECD of the expenditure on food as a proportion of national disposable income in 1970 and 1976 in a number of selected countries. These countries are not selected to show Canada in any particularly favourable position. They are the main industrialized countries of the world—Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, West Germany, Italy, Japan, The Netherlands, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States. Of all those countries, Canada and Canadians spent the smallest proportion of disposable income on food. In fact, the percentage dropped from 1970 to 1976. In 1970 we were spending 14.9 per cent of our disposable income on food; in 1976 that amount dropped to 13.8 per cent. As a percentage of disposable income, we were spending less in 1976 on food than we were in 1970.

If you make a comparison with the other nations which I have listed, you find that Canadians spend the least amount as a percentage of disposable income on food. The next one to us is the United States at 15 per cent, and then next in order are Sweden, The Netherlands, Australia and France all at 16.7 per cent. Canadians, therefore, are spending less on food today as a percentage of disposable income than they were six years ago. They are spending less than the citizens of any of the other industrialized nations.

Therefore, I think we have to be realistic as consumers. We cannot have an industry like the beef industry in which the producers are not simply making less money but are actually losing money made in the past—they are cutting into their equity—while the consumers of this country, because of low prices, are spending less on food than consumers in other countries. Nevertheless, our committee recognizes that we should not go the other way and stop all beef imports. We should not say that we ought to put the producers in a position where, if the circumstances changed drastically, they could gouge the consumers. So we built into the proposals a mechanism whereby if the prices were to rise unduly, then the import restrictions would be immediately altered, and further imports would be allowed as a balance. We do have the consumer's interests in mind, as well, in our proposals.

• (1530)

As I indicated, I support these proposals, but there is the question of implementation. I want to make it very clear that as far as I am concerned, and I am sure that it applies to the other members of the committee, there is no intention whatever that these ought to be unilateral decisions by Canada. We recognize our obligations in the world and our position in world trade. It is certainly my view that nothing should be done without sitting down with our major trading partners in this particular field—the United States, New Zealand and Australia—putting our cards on the table and explaining our problems exactly as they exist, in order to see what we can work out with them.

We did this some years ago with the United States in regard to our major industry, the auto industry, where there was a particular problem. That problem was solved by sitting down with the Americans and establishing the Auto Pact. In my opinion, it turned out well in the long run for Canada, and we were able to negotiate with them a satisfactory arrangement. I believe that we can accomplish the same thing in this field, and that we ought to be sitting down with them at the earliest possible time to see what arrangements we can make to fit their interests in with ours.

With regard to the beef industry, we have tended in the past to look at the Canadian and American market as a continental market. At times we have looked upon the American market as a sort of safety valve, particularly for Canadian live cattle moving across the border in the west. When you look at the figures it seems that it may be a safeguard at times, but on many other occasions it means importing particular problems into our situation, and at other times exporting our problems to the United States in an unfair way. We would be much better off to sit down with them to decide on a reasonable and understandable long-term plan.

I believe that we have the basis of a sound approach to restore the beef industry to a profitable level, where it can be a continuing and viable industry. I do not believe our proposals are unduly restrictive. They do not close off the Canadian market by any means. They are based on historical figures, over a period going back to 1967—a period in which there were some years of export from Canada and some years of import. If we went over a longer period, the amounts of imports would be lower and would actually reflect more accurately what had gone on in the past. We recognize, however, that other nations have built up a market here, and they have a basis for expecting a continuing market. We are not suggesting closing off. The proposal in this report would still allow them access to our market, would provide them with long-term stability, and would restore the beef industry as a long-term profitable industry in Canada.

Senator Greene: In light of the fact that the honourable senator mentioned the GATT—and in my humble experience I have found there are those, particularly in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who believe that the GATT is some great mountain from which a Mahomet comes down periodically and gives us definitive and absolute answers—would he like to comment on whether or not this policy, which I think is a rational one and a compromise, as he stated, protects our beef industry to the extent that the European Economic Community protects its beef industry, working through, with and under the aegis of the GATT?

Senator Molgat: No, it does not come anywhere near giving the same kind of protection. As I stated in my comments, I am basically a free trader. I believe that in the long term, all things considered, it is by freer trade that we will best succeed. In this particular case, and in many cases, we have been the free traders, but unfortunately the other players in the game did not follow the same rules. Certainly in the European Economic Community it has been exactly the reverse. They have been highly restrictive. In 1974, when there was a substantial increase in world production of beef, the European Community put on some very restrictive measures, first of all, by establishing very severe quotas, then by actually prohibiting imports, then by proceeding to subsidize exports from what they call—and I forget the exact term, but when there is a problem of over-supply they buy from the market and put it in storage. They started to subsidize this storage beef to the tune of 25 per cent if it was shipped outside of the country, and there were a whole series of measures to really protect their producers. We are not in any way faced with equal access. I think it is fair to say that in Canada the market has been most accessible to foreign producers, and part of the result has been the problems of the beef industry.

Senator Deschatelets: Honourable senators, I was most interested in the presentation on the problems of the beef industry, but I was a bit surprised by the comment about the Auto Pact being beneficial to Canada. I am not sure, but I think that published figures show that the losses amounted to hundreds of millions of dollars.

Senator Bélisle: Nine billion.

Senator Grosart: It is a disaster.

Senator Desruisseaux: We have to be fair in deciding what is good and what is bad for Canada. I do not think the arrangements made in this case were beneficial to Canada. Possibly they were intended to be, but they were not. I think it should be noted that they were not.

In the matter of free trade, Senator Molgat knows my views well. For a while I was happy to think he was swinging the other way, and now saw advantage in having some protection somewhere. I think whatever protection is needed should be given, and I was happy to hear what he said about it.

[Senator Molgat.]

I find now that I am not putting a question, so I will have to sit down.

● (1540)

Senator Molgat: Perhaps I might treat that as a question on the Auto Pact. It is true that recently there have been some shifts in the benefits, but certainly in the earlier periods there were substantial benefits to Canada. In fact, I suppose one of the objections of Western Canadians at the time it was negotiated was that the Auto Pact really did nothing for western Canada; it did not reduce the price of autos or trucks, and it did not produce any jobs in western Canada. However, we accepted it because we thought it was of substantial benefit at that stage to the province of Ontario in particular, and secondly to the province of Quebec. I think it meant the establishment in both those provinces of substantial auto manufacturing, or parts and accessory manufacturing, facilities. In the early stages it was of very substantial benefit. I presume that it is now due for renegotiation.

Senator Buckwold: Would the honourable senator permit some questions?

I gather from the very commendable remarks of my colleague from the west that our major competitors are New Zealand and Australia, although not necessarily in that order, because of the low-priced beef that occasionally floods the market. Are the producers of beef in Australia and New Zealand operating profitably or do their beef industries have the same kind of trouble that we have, so that they are really dumping? Secondly, if they are operating reasonably profitably, how can they produce and sell their product at the low price at which they are offering it? I am well aware of the economy of grazing cattle in those countries, yet on the other hand I am also aware of the very high costs of transportation. I wonder if those points could be clarified.

Senator Molgat: I do not think I can give a definitive answer on whether or not producers in New Zealand and Australia are making money. I know from the figures that their cattle numbers are increasing, and, that being so, I assume that it must still be a business that at least carries itself; otherwise the producers would be reducing their numbers of cattle. I say that by deduction and not from facts or figures, which I do not have.

However, in New Zealand and Australia they have a tremendous advantage over us climatically. It will be seen from the report, in our analysis of production costs in Canada and neighbouring northern states, that when you go from the province of Alberta only two or three hundred miles to the south there is a very substantial difference in that in the areas to the south they can graze almost year-round, whereas in Canada we simply cannot; we have to feed.

My understanding is that in Australia—no doubt Senator Hays could give you more detail on this—they graze year-round, which means they do not have to set land aside for hay or feed production, and they do not need all the equipment required to produce winter feed. They do not have all these inputs, including the provision of shelter, so their whole cost picture is completely different from ours and they are thus able to sell at a much lower price than we can.

Senator Buckwold: I am still wondering about the transportation cost. I am well aware of the economies of grazing cattle in those countries, but when the cost of processing and shipping, which I would presume are relatively costly procedures, is added I wonder whether in fact that beef is being dumped at prices below the cost of production. I have not had a reply to that yet.

Senator Molgat: I am sorry, but again I cannot give a specific answer. However, I do not believe that their beef is being sold on the Canadian market for less than what it is sold for in Australia, which is the legal definition of dumping. There was a period of time when it was sold on the Canadian market for less than it was sold on the United States market. The reason was that at that point the Australian system was based on a diversification plan. Entitlements to ship to the United States were based on their sales elsewhere. Australian shippers, anxious to build up their sales in other markets so as to increase their share of the American market, actually sold to us for less than to the Americans. That obviously added a further complication in the Canadian market at that time. I do not believe they are dumping in the legal sense that they are selling for less than on the Australian market, but I will endeavour to find out for sure about that.

Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): May I ask the honourable senator a question? If I heard him correctly, the honourable senator said that we spend less on food in Canada than any other country in the world. Is that right?

Senator Molgat: I was quoting from a table in the Manitoba Co-operator of October 13, 1977. The table is taken from a survey by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, and it lists expenditures on food as a percentage of national disposable income.

Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): That is what I understood. If that is so, what do we eat? How is it that we spend less money on food?

Senator Grosart: It is based on a percentage of income.

Senator Molgat: That is a percentage of our income. For one thing, our income in absolute dollars, I suppose, is higher than the income in certain other countries. The other element is that in many cases our food costs are actually lower than those of other countries. One of the elements in this expenditure on food is beef.

Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): I am still not convinced, because I cannot see how we spend less money on food than any other country.

Senator Perrault: It is a percentage of income.

Senator Grosart: In a very poor country they spend 80 per cent of their income on food.

Senator Bélisle: The Honourable Senator Molgat did so ably in trying to convince us and I hope he can convince me, although he has not done so up to the moment. Perhaps I am one of those who can be converted.

He said that we pay less for our food, and he quoted figures from European countries. He must understand that in doing so he is comparing apples with watermelons, because when he quotes figures from Holland, Belgium, Germany and Spain he must appreciate that geographically those countries can be swallowed by Canada. Wherever the committee went—at least at the meetings I attended—I was far from convinced that beef farmers wanted this. Correct me if I am wrong, but my observation, rightly or wrongly, was that anywhere up to 40 per cent of the farmers said, "Leave us alone. We do not want controls. If you do impose controls the price of beef, which is $2 a pound now, will be $4 a pound."

• (1550)

My question is this: Would it not be wise to put this question at election time, in view of the fact that 99½ per cent of the electorate will be affected? I am told that only one-half of one per cent are really vegetarian, and the remaining 99½ per cent eat meat. Therefore, it would be an appropriate question to ask at that time, and would prove to be less costly to Canada.

Senator Molgat: In so far as the actual figures are concerned, I can only refer honourable senators again to the table. These are percentages of disposable income, and not absolute dollars. It seems to me that they are valid figures in that regard, because they are related to what an individual actually has available to him for his total purposes. It is a figure which surprises me, I must confess, because we Canadians have to import during certain periods of the year a great deal of our vegetables and fruit, and during all periods of the year a certain number of food items which we simply cannot produce. In any event, those are the figures.

While it would be a good question to put from platforms at election time, I really cannot agree it is a question for a referendum. With respect to the request of those who appeared before us, I agree with Senator Bélisle that the position taken by them was that they do not want government control in the sense of a marketing board. That was my understanding of their feelings. A few wanted marketing boards, but the majority were opposed. That is the type of control they do not desire.

There was a referendum held in Manitoba during the course of our study, which came out opposed to a marketing board for beef, even after substantial pressure from the provincial government and a very clear position from their side. We are not in any way proposing marketing boards. However, the request for import control was fairly unanimous from those who appeared before us. Instead of reading you the names I refer you to Chapter III of the report, which outlines those who made the comments and their specific requests.

On motion of Senator Langlois, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See page 41)

LIST OF CANADIAN CROWN CORPORATIONS—1970

SCHEDULE B

DEPARTMENTAL CORPORATIONS

Corporation	Appropriate Minister
Agricultural Stabilization Board	Agriculture
Atomic Energy Control Board	Energy, Mines and Resources
Director of Soldier Settlement	Veterans Affairs
The Director, The Veterans' Land Act	Veterans Affairs
Dominion Coal Board	Energy, Mines and Resources
Economic Council of Canada	Prime Minister
Fisheries Prices Support Board	Fisheries and Forestry
Medical Research Council	National Health and Welfare
Municipal Development and Loan Board	Minister of Finance
National Museums of Canada	Secretary of State
National Research Council	Chairman of the Committee of the Privy Council on Scientific and Industrial Research
Science Council of Canada	Prime Minister
Unemployment Insurance Commission	Labour

SCHEDULE C

AGENCY CORPORATIONS

Corporation	Appropriate Minister
Atomic Energy of Canada Limited	Energy, Mines and Resources
Canadian Arsenals Limited	Supply and Services
Canadian Commercial Corporation	Supply and Services
Canadian Dairy Commission	Agriculture
Canadian Film Development Corporation	Secretary of State
Canadian Livestock Feed Board	Agriculture
Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited	Transport
Canadian Patents and Development Limited	Chairman of the Committee of the Privy Council on Scientific and Industrial Research
Centennial Commission	Secretary of State
Crown Assets Disposal Corporation	Supply and Services
Defence Construction (1951) Limited	National Defence
National Battlefields Commission	Indian Affairs and Northern Development
National Capital Commission	Honourable Jean Marchand
National Harbours Board	Transport
Northern Canada Power Commission	Indian Affairs and Northern Development
Park Steamship Company Limited	Transport
Royal Canadian Mint

SCHEDULE D
PROPRIETARY CORPORATIONS

Corporation	Appropriate Minister
Air Canada	Transport
Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation	Secretary of State
Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corp.	Communications
Cape Breton Development Corporation
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation
Eldorado Aviation Limited	Energy, Mines and Resources
Eldorado Nuclear Limited	Energy, Mines and Resources
Export Development Corporation	Industry, Trade and Commerce
Farm Credit Corporation	Agriculture
Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation
National Railways as defined in the Canadian National Railways Act	Transport
Northern Transportation Company Limited	Indian Affairs and Northern Development
Polymer Corporation Limited	Supply and Services
Seaway International Bridge Corporation Ltd.	Transport
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority	Transport

THE SENATE

Thursday, October 27, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, November 1, 1977, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Honourable senators, before the motion is put I should like to give you a brief outline of our work schedule for next week.

We shall continue with the debate on the Throne Speech and, if the report of the Selection Committee is adopted today, the various standing committees of the Senate will hold organization meetings to elect their respective chairmen, thus enabling the committees to proceed immediately with any matters that may be referred to them.

It is likely that in addition to that we shall have two government bills for introduction in the Senate in the first instance.

Senator Flynn: There is no more indication than that?

Senator Langlois: No.

Senator Flynn: It will be interesting to know what bills might come before us.

Senator Langlois: Unfortunately, I cannot provide that information at this time. I was informed of the possibility just before I entered the house.

Senator Perrault: There is a great cornucopia of pending legislation.

Senator Flynn: I know that. But it is unlikely I gather, that we shall be able to start dealing with it next week. I suppose the intention is to complete the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Senator Langlois: Yes.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON CONCENTRATION OF CORPORATE POWER

PRESENT STATUS—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on October 14 a question was asked by the honourable Senator Benidickson regarding a Royal Commission on Corporate Affairs. He requested, in effect, a status report.

The situation at present is that the work of the commissioners is finished, but the report is in the preparation stage. It is not expected that the two remaining commissioners, Nadeau and Dickerson, will have the report finished before the end of the year.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DOCUMENTARY PROGRAM QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Senator Norrie: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege to make a statement which I feel has a bearing on the economic prosperity and unity of our country.

The documentary on atomic energy, which was the subject of the CBC program The Fifth Estate a few days ago, captured my attention.

The title in itself was arresting. I wondered whether the program would come across with utterances that were actual facts, in their proper context, or whether the program would be vague slurs, innuendos, quotations taken out of context, giving the public an erroneous impression of the truth.

● (1410)

I am not knowledgeable about atomic energy, and all the dangers and uses pertaining thereto; therefore I will make no statement other than to say that the whole program seemed very negative and damaging, as is typical of Fifth Estate.

I realize that anything pertaining to atomic energy is hazardous and difficult to handle, but their program bothered me. I wanted an expert opinion and an assessment of the whole documentary. I therefore called the Atomic Energy Control Board, public relations, and talked with a gentleman there. I gave no opinion of my own at this point and he immediately stated that the whole program, as given on Fifth Estate, gave the wrong impression to the public about different factors involved. The items themselves were factual, but the context in which they were presented made them completely misleading and therefore erroneous. We talked a long time and I received a lot of worthwhile information about atomic energy which was not exposed by Fifth Estate.

As I said before, it is a favourite method of Fifth Estate to condemn some worthwhile beneficial industry by destructive innuendoes and, almost but not quite, failing to make any positive statement about various aspects of a creditable industry. If this is freedom of the press, I object to our government's sponsoring a corporation that undermines our economic prosperity when that corporation spends nearly $600 million yearly. The CBC, in turn, refuses to answer any questions presented by members of the Senate or of the House of Commons or the public.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, yesterday when I was participating in the debate on the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, I referred to the section of the British North America Act which authorizes the Government of Canada to declare a project in any province, or a number of provinces, to be in the national interest. I did not remember the section number at the time, but with the help of the Clerk I have now identified it. If anyone is interested, it is section 92(10)(c) which authorizes the Government of Canada to declare any project to be "for the general advantage of Canada", even though it may be situated in a particular province or a number of provinces.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of Her Majesty the Queen's Speech at the opening of the Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament, and the motion of Senator Frith, seconded by Senator Marchand, for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. George I. Smith: Honourable senators, we are now engaged in debating the Address which Her Majesty the Queen was graciously pleased to make in this chamber on October 18. I wish to join in the expressions of loyalty which we have heard from previous speakers, of the appreciation of her gracious presence and of the hope that she may frequently return.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I wish to join also, Madam Speaker, in those very warm tributes to you, and to the way in which you preside over this chamber, which have been so eloquently expressed already in this debate. Your charming and delightful presence and the courteous yet firm way in which you discharge your duties are indeed a credit to the office which you fill so well.

Honourable senators, I wish to draw attention to a recent very sad event, the death of Mary Stanfield. Mary Stanfield was a devoted wife, a great lady, a gracious, loyal and vivacious friend and a warm Canadian. I am sure that honourable senators will wish to join me in expressing our deepest sympathy to the Honourable Robert L. Stanfield in this grievous loss.

Honourable senators, I offer my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the motion for the Address in reply to Her Majesty's Speech.

It seems to me, if I may say so, that they both acquitted themselves extremely well, though, of course, neither of them is a newcomer to public speaking. The mover certainly devoted a great deal of time to the preparation of his speech and, as one would expect, he delivered it well. He will forgive me, however, if I express the thought that I could not help but note, as I listened, and again as I read his words in Hansard, that he did not find very much in the Speech to take up his time.

As to his comments about the Senate and the proposal for Senate reform, it seems to me that there is one highly desirable reform which lies immediately within the power of the Prime Minister, and that is to make appointments to the Senate which will allow it better to represent the different kinds of political beliefs in this country.

I have had the privilege of listening to the seconder on a substantial number of occasions and in different forums. As usual, he was eloquent and expressive. I suppose he would think it presumptuous of me to say whether I agree or disagree with his analysis of the situation with relation to national unity. However, I will take that risk because I am sure that he would agree with me that this is a question which does not alone concern the people who live in the great province of Quebec. It concerns all Canadians. I therefore presume to say that on a great portion of his argument I agree with him, or, at least, do not dissent from what he said.

I do not find it so easy, however, to feel that he is correct in so readily dismissing general economic conditions as having nothing to do with the matter of separatism. Of course, I recognize that he lives in Quebec, and that he sees and hears first hand the things which persuade the people of Quebec to think one way or another. Although I readily agree that the honourable senator has a more intimate knowledge of that situation than I have, I am not prepared to join him in sweeping aside unemployment and general economic conditions as being irrelevant.

I make this point not simply to differ from the honourable senator, but because I think one of the fundamental requirements in dealing with any problem is to make sure that all material and relevant considerations are kept in mind.

I believe that jobs and general economic conditions are certainly both relevant and material to this problem.

Honourable senators, on Tuesday night, as I am sure most of you did, I listened with great interest to the excellent speech of the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, Senator Flynn, and wish to offer him my very warm congratulations.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Smith (Colchester): The eloquent, incisive and devastating way in which he demonstrated the gross mismanagement of this government and its utter failure to give leadership to the country must have shaken the faith of many of its supporters in this chamber.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Among other things, he spoke of the Constitution, the necessity for changing it and the problems involved in doing so. He said that we have reached the stage where we should seriously consider some sort of general meeting which could truly be said to represent all our people. He referred to such a meeting as a constitutional conference, and I want to commend this idea for very careful consideration.

● (1420)

Honourable senators, as you all know, we have been making various unsuccessful efforts to change the Constitution for a period of at least ten years. Some honourable senators here will remember those efforts well, for they took part in them. On at least two occasions it seemed that agreement by the federal government and all provincial governments had been reached. One was the occasion on which the draft was called the Fulton-Favreau formula. The other is commonly referred to as the Victoria Charter.

Both those attempts failed at the last moment. I believe the reason they failed was because after the draft seemed settled one or more provincial governments began to get the feeling that it might not be politically desirable to give formal acceptance to the proposed changes. On reflection, it seems to me that proposed changes which are discussed only by the federal and by the provincial governments are subject to the inherent weakness that they do not necessarily represent the views of Canadians as a whole.

I hardly need say that in these days of multiple parties it is not very often that any government succeeds in being elected by a majority of the popular vote. Certainly the present government of Canada was not elected by a majority of the people who voted. Indeed, no government since 1958 has been elected by a majority of the people who voted, much less by a majority of the people entitled to vote.

I have some figures here on the last three federal elections, which I will not inflict upon you, but I will only say that in 1974 there were 13.6 million people entitled to vote. There were 9.6 million who voted. The government received 4.1 million of those 9.6 million votes, which is approximately or just a little less than one-third of the total of the people entitled to vote, and something like 45 per cent of those who voted.

I have not made a careful research of the popular vote in all the provincial elections during that period, but I would venture an estimate, based purely on recollection and some modest research, that in more than half the total of such elections the party which was regarded as winning got less than half the votes cast, and much less than half the total of eligible voters.

On Tuesday night the Leader of the Opposition made reference to the fact that the present government of Quebec was put in office by about 40 per cent of the people who voted. I believe that there have been more cases than one when the winning party during that period has had less than 40 per cent of the votes cast.

This creates a number of problems in this constitutional matter. One problem is that a government elected on a minority of votes has to keep looking over its shoulder—even more than otherwise would be the case—to avoid arousing the disapproval of a substantial part of the electorate. Thus it is understandably very reluctant to make concessions in order to reach agreement on any given point, especially a concession which it has some reason to believe the people in its own constituency might consider to be controversial. Moreover, as a matter of fact, no matter how hard they try, it is not likely they can successfully claim to be representing the views of the majority of their people.

In a democracy there always is—and it is certainly a good thing—a lively watch kept by the opposition on what the government does. Not being part of the decision-making process themselves, it is natural that the opposition is likely to see in such decisions elements which they consider objectionable.

So long as this situation remains—and the situation I have described will likely remain in Canada for a long time; certainly I hope the present methods of election of governments last for a long time, although there are one or two I would like to see changed—I believe very strongly, as I suppose most people in public life in Canada today believe, that when a person is elected to the responsibilities of office he ought to accept those responsibilities. But, in the matter of constitutional change, this reliance on the person elected to office making decisions does not seem to have carried us very far, and I have mentioned my reasons for holding that view. It seems to me, therefore, that in this matter some new method of reaching consensus ought to be tried, and certainly the possibility of finding some new method ought to be very carefully examined and considered.

One possibility, which at least would preserve some element of responsibility of the elected persons, would be simply to involve the leaders or other representatives of all parties in the legislatures and in the Parliament of Canada in taking part as full-fledged participants in the discussion. This would be in line with what was done by at least some of the founding provinces in the conferences leading up to Confederation.

A second possibility would be to take the group composed as I have just mentioned, and add to it as full participants a number of people from all parts of the country, representing a variety of linguistic and cultural origins, recognized as knowledgeable in the field of constitutional matters and as responsible leading citizens. Perhaps some of them should represent various recognized non-political organizations of national or provincial status.

There are other possibilities, of course, but I believe the second one I have just mentioned is not only in line with what the Leader of the Opposition suggested on Tuesday night, but is the best course open to us.

The means of convening and carrying out such a constitutional conference would have to be established, but to give it the best possible chance of success the concurrence of the provinces should be sought, although I would be inclined to think about going on with it even if some provinces did not concur. The conference, of course, would have to be supplied with staff, space and equipment, but that is a matter of mechanics. Care would have to be taken to ensure that the staff was not predominantly from the federal service, and that the conference was not dominated by federal views. I think the chairman should not be chosen by the federal government. The total number of full participants would have to be kept to a size such that decisions could be taken without unreasonable delay.

It might be argued that such a conference would be ineffective because its conclusions would not be binding. I do not accept such a contention. I think its findings would be likely to have such prestige and persuasiveness that they would find wide and solid support that it would be difficult to resist.

Before dealing with some other aspects of the Speech from the Throne, I should like to draw the attention of honourable senators to a very brief paragraph in it. This interesting paragraph appears in the text on page 9 of the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate for Tuesday, October 18, and reads as follows:

After consultation with the provinces, the Government will amend the criminal code to guarantee the right of accused persons to be tried in the official language of their choice.

I draw particular attention to the phrase, "the Government will amend the criminal code".

● (1430)

I must say, honourable senators, that this has raised a real question as to whether this phrase is simply a slip of the tongue which disclosed the true state of the government's mind and its attitude toward Parliament, for they must know that it is not the government that amends the Criminal Code, but Parliament. No one can say, surely, that the text of this speech was not read over and over again, yet there appears this phrase "the Government will amend the criminal code". I again ask the question: How could it get in there unless it was symptomatic of the attitude of the authors of the speech and their view of Parliament?

Now I come to an interesting subject, the speech of the Leader of the Government. It certainly was an interesting speech, delivered in an excellent way, and he did his best to defend an indefensible position. I congratulate him very warmly upon his eloquence, his vigour and his vociferous ingenuity in trying to avoid any reference to the damning facts which so overwhelmingly show the incompetence of this government, and the statements confirming those facts appearing in the Speech from the Throne. However, I regret to have to tell him, honourable senators, that his agile ingenuity fell far short of creating the massive smoke screen which is necessary to hide the record of the government's multitude of failures.

Senator Perrault: Keep it non-partisan.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Yes, as did the honourable gentleman, so will I. Gently, very gently and in all kindness, I must say to him that it would have been more in keeping with his frank and open spirit, and more suited to the circumstances, if he had come before us in sorrow and in penitence.

Senator Perrault: Sackcloth and ashes.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I was going to save the sackcloth and ashes for a later period in the year when things, apparently, are going to be worse, according to the Minister of Finance.

I noticed that quite early in his speech, as reported at page 32 of Tuesday's Hansard, he made some reference to comments made 20 years ago by the present Leader of the Opposition in the Senate and, of course, I am compelled to ask myself the question: Is that as near the present circumstances as the honourable gentleman can get? Among other things, he quoted a comment made by Senator Flynn 20 years ago, to the effect that Senator Flynn preferred then to be on the side of optimism, and with great vigour he exhorted Senator Flynn to be optimistic today. I point out to him that when Senator Flynn made that speech he had something to be optimistic about; a very different state of affairs exists today. Perhaps the honourable leader might find some help in the contemplation of a few lines from the great Book of Books, in the Third Chapter of Ecclesiastes:

To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven:

A time to be born, and a time to die . . . A time to weep, and a time to laugh; a time to mourn, and a time to dance.

It is, indeed, a time to weep and a time to mourn. Optimism, optimism. The chief thing Canadians can be optimistic about today is that they may soon have the chance to get rid of this government.

The honourable leader spoke with considerable emphasis about the great resources of Canada—

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear.

Senator Smith (Colchester):—and what a wonderful country it is. In that respect I share his views fully and without reserve. Indeed, I would say to him that we are probably the most fortunate country in the world, richly endowed with natural resources, as secure as any nation can be in these troublous times from external attack, with a population alert, energetic, anxious to work, having a high rate of literacy and a high degree of scientific and technological training and ability. We are thankful for all the wonderful things that this country has, but the enumeration of these great assets only serves to emphasize how incompetent this government must be when, in spite of those assets, it gets us into this present mess.

The Leader of the Government made some comment regarding the fall of the dollar. He also mentioned, interestingly, the high rate of inflation in Argentina, which he said recently dropped from 650 per cent to 325 per cent. I suppose he was holding out to us that our rate of inflation is not too bad since it is below 325 per cent. I am sure he will be interested to know that the Argentine peso is one of the few significant currencies against which the Canadian dollar has not fallen. The peso of Chile is another.

The Leader of the Government mentioned the fall of the dollar which, for the first time in many years, has dropped below 90 cents in relation to the United States dollar. Indeed, in relation to that dollar, it has fallen 13 cents during the last 13 months. That certainly is an indicator to us of how the world regards Canada as compared to the United States.

But take a look at the Canadian dollar as against some of the other typical well-known currencies. This is how the Canadian dollar fared, from October 1976 to October 1977, as against foreign currencies in percentage terms, in spite of all these great assets which the Leader of the Government told us about last night, and which I agree we have. As against the United States dollar, it has fallen by 13.9 per cent; the Japanese yen, 32.3 per cent; the West German deutschemark, 22.2 per cent; the Swiss franc, 23.4 per cent; the United Kingdom pound, 22.2 per cent; the Italian lira, 12.1 per cent; the Iran rial, 8.4 per cent; the U.S.S.R. rouble, 13.4 per cent; the Chinese RMPY, 14.3 per cent; the Indian rupee, 15.4 per cent; the Bangladesh taka, 8.4 per cent.

Now, the Leader of the Government may derive some comfort from the fact that, as against the Chilean peso the value of our dollar rose in that period by 31 per cent and, as against the Argentinian peso, it rose by approximately 45 per cent. But that comfort does not last very long when one considers that in the same period, as against the Special Drawing Rights of the International Monetary Fund, which is a weighted average currency for international settlements, the value of our dollar fell by 10.8 per cent.

What a message this gives us about what the world thinks of our economic management; of the falling confidence it has in our government's financial and economic ability. With all these great assets we readily acknowledge having, and which most of these other countries cannot even approach having, the policies of this government have still managed to bring about this lack of confidence in the management of this country throughout the world.

The Leader of the Government referred to the cabinet meeting on Thanksgiving Day 1975. Consider for a moment, honourable senators, the pitiful picture he painted of those harried politicians huddled around the cabinet table on that joyous holiday, huddled in shock and in fear, faced with the tardy realization that the truth had caught up with them at last.

● (1440)

They are all politicians of conscience, and surely they must then have been shaken with repentance—if not repentance for their sins, then sorrow that their sins had found them out. How the sad realization must have sunk home that a year before they had not only rejected the truth which was placed before them on that Thanksgiving Day but, in order to hang on to power, had deliberately scared the public into believing that controls were a bad and terrible thing. But on that fateful day they could no longer resist the truth. They realized they had to act. I am sure the only good thing they could think of which resulted from their fight against controls the year before was that by means thereof they had managed to keep themselves in the seats of power.

I do not wonder that the honourable Leader of the Government remembers that day—and so will Canadians for a long time to come. Indeed, those who met that day will have cause to remember the truth of Mark Antony's words at Caesar's funeral, "The evil that men do lives after them."

[Senator Smith (Colchester).]

The Leader of the Government would have us believe that things are pretty good after all, in spite of all the difficulties we see around us. But, honourable senators, there is no need to take the word of the opposition, or of statisticians, or independent economists, about how things are. We need only turn to the Speech from the Throne—and I recommend it for careful perusal by the honourable gentlemen opposite, especially the Leader of the Government, as he must have had a hand in writing it. How different his contribution to its content must have been, if we are to go by the speech he made on Tuesday; or, if his contribution to its content was of the same tenor as his speech yesterday, how quickly it must have been rejected by those who had the ultimate say as to what went into the Speech from the Throne.

If the Leader of the Government is not satisfied with looking to the Speech from the Throne alone, he could look to the speech of the Prime Minister, or that of the new Minister of Finance, both of which were made last week. All three speeches confirm what the opposition has been saying. Look at some of the things in the Speech itself, which can be found in the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of Tuesday, October 18, as well as in Hansard of that date. Take a look at the last paragraph on page 4, carrying over to page 5, of the Minutes of October 18. Read it, and let it sink in. Perhaps it will help dissipate that fog which seems to obscure the vision of the Leader of the Government. This is the Speech from the Throne, composed in the Prime Minister's office. Let me quote:

The human hardship imposed by the current level of unemployment in Canada is deeply disturbing. It is neither just nor tolerable that in this country there should be so many men and women deprived of the dignity of self-supporting work, unable to meet their financial commitments and plan confidently for the future. It is intolerable that so many are deprived of their right to secure and productive lives, and that their families bear an unfair burden of worry, uncertainty, and deprivation. On a national scale, unemployment now constitutes a very serious obstacle to economic growth.

That is how the Speech from the Throne describes our condition today. Does the honourable gentleman feel like being optimistic about that? And we all know who has been in power while these things have come about.

Let us see what is the government's own judgment of the policies that allowed such a state of affairs to come about. The Leader of the Opposition made reference to this paragraph on Tuesday night, and I think it is well worth repeating. It is found on page 4 of the document I have mentioned, and here are the very words of the Speech:

High rates of unemployment and inflation are clear signals of the inadequacy of economic strategies appropriate to simpler times.

Listen to the same words again, and let them sink in that we may the better remember them:

High rates of unemployment and inflation are clear signals of the inadequacy of economic strategies appropriate to simpler times.

Whose strategies? These are the strategies that this government, which has been in power for nearly 15 years, has been following. And who has been in office for the last nine of these years? A government led by the present Prime Minister has been directing the economic strategies followed during that time and they, no doubt, formulated them as well. And what is their judgment on those strategies? It is:

High rates of unemployment and inflation are clear signals of the inadequacy of economic strategies—

Does the Leader of the Government want any more proof that things are not as they ought to be? Where has there ever been found a statement made by a Prime Minister in a debate on the Speech from the Throne so clearly an indictment of what the government has been doing, so clearly a statement that mismanagement has brought us into dire straits indeed? Let us turn to the Prime Minister's speech made on October 19, just seven days ago, and let us look at page 31 of the House of Commons Hansard of that date. In the last part of the last paragraph of the left-hand column on that page we find the words:

There is high unemployment in Canada, there is high inflation, and a very serious devaluation of the dollar.

Or look at another sentence, and I direct the attention of the Leader of the Government particularly to this one:

At no time in our history has there been so serious a threat to our society, both from the economic and national unity standpoints.

Do these statements I have just read justify the Leader of the Opposition or anybody else in this chamber in being optimistic? Is it a time to weep, or a time to laugh? Is it a time to mourn, or a time to dance? Honourable senators can draw their own conclusions.

It cannot give any Canadian pleasure to recite the long list of economic indicators which so vividly mark the trail left by the gross mismanagement of this government. To do so only emphasizes our own misfortunes, and yet to ignore these indicators would indeed invite more of the same. They have already been discussed at length here and in the other place, so I will confine myself simply to listing some of them, but not all. They are: a dollar that is worth less than 90 cents; an inflation rate of 8.4 per cent; an unemployment rate of 8.3 per cent; a trade deficit in manufactured goods last year of $10 billion; 20 per cent of our manufacturing capacity idle; this year's budgetary deficit of $9.2 billion, which is more than the total federal spending when this government came into office; total output this year only 2 per cent higher than last year, and to achieve that will require an improvement in the last quarter of the year; and total output next year estimated at 4 per cent to 5 per cent, which is, to use the words of the Minister of Finance, "not enough to bring down the rate of unemployment." Our balance of payments situation is unsatisfactory. There is a large increase in our tourist deficit. The revenues of the federal government are growing more slowly than expected. The budgetary deficit for next year is expected to be substantially greater than this year's. All of this in spite of the wonderful assets of this country, which obviously are being wasted instead of being the base for the progress we all hoped for and which we all should have had.

• (1450)

On Tuesday night the honourable gentleman pleaded with us to forget the sorry facts I have just enumerated, and to think of Canada, her great resources and her wonderful people. Incidentally, I could not help wondering whether he thought our people were as wonderful as he sometimes says, because he referred to them as having a "greed and grasp" attitude—"the greed and grasp attitude which has gripped Canada." It struck me that that was a strange way for a member of the government to refer to the fine people whom he has had the opportunity, for a short time, of helping to govern.

He asks us to believe that somehow, sometime, by the grace of God, we will overcome this economic mess into which the policies of the present government—described as they were by the Prime Minister—have led us. Finally, he besought us to have faith in this discredited government.

He then mentioned something that explained a matter which had puzzled me somewhat. I had wondered why the decision of the government to carry on with the Arctic pipeline was reached so quickly in the face of all of the difficulties and objections raised and all of the problems involved. Now it becomes clear. Apparently they hope that the pipeline will save them. It is a fervent hope, I am sure, but it is one which will never bear sufficient fruit to bring about the great miracle which will be needed to save this government when it comes time for its next test at the polls. I am sorry Senator Davey is not here, because I would commiserate with him on his disappointment in not being able to persuade the government to go to the people when things were not quite so bad. Now I suppose his efforts will be devoted toward delaying that fateful day as long as possible.

I say again, honourable senators, that these things have happened while the present government has been in office. Nine years ago, when the government led by the present Prime Minister came to office, it inherited a Canada in which things were pretty good. The employment rate was good; inflation was not a threat; the dollar was strong; the country was not divided; the economy was healthy; Canadians were confident in their country and its potential, confident in themselves, and confident in the future. But now the opposite is true. I repeat, these things have all occurred and grown while the present government was supposed to be leading the country. A government is supposed to lead, to govern; not just to drift along with the tide of events.

It is obvious that the government has lost the ability and the will to govern; they have been in office far too long; they are tired; they are overcome by their failures, overwhelmed by their problems, empty of ideas, a burden to Canada. It is time for a change! It is time for them to go!

Senator Greene: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Smith (Colchester): I am always delighted to answer a question by the honourable gentleman.

Senator Greene: The honourable senator deprecated the fact that all organized political opinion was not represented in this Senate, as I understood his words. To the best of my knowledge—and here he can possibly help me—the only organized political parties on a national basis that are not represented here are the New Democratic Party, the Ralliement des Crédistes, the Marxist-Leninists and the Trotskyists. So I take it he is preaching a call for those parties, and I don't know what others. On the other hand, if he is advocating that only organized political parties should be represented in the Senate, I think I can speak for all of us over here when I say it will be with a heavy heart that we will watch our Conservative friends depart.

Senator Smith (Colchester): The honourable gentleman is always astute in making a speech when he is permitted to ask a question. But I will tell him exactly what I said, and he can read it tomorrow and be sure. I said that there is one highly desirable reform of the Senate which lies immediately within the power of the Prime Minister, and that is to make appointments to it which will allow it better to represent the different kinds of political beliefs in our country. Please note those words, "allow it better to represent the different kinds of political beliefs in our country."

Senator Buckwold: Would the honourable senator allow another question?

Senator Grosart: No, let him finish his speech.

Senator Buckwold: Do I hear from the deputy leader that I am not allowed to ask a question?

Senator Smith (Colchester): I did not hear the deputy leader say anything of that kind.

Senator Buckwold: The question I should like to ask follows the assault on the government and government policy in respect to the drop in value of the Canadian dollar in relation to the American dollar. I read within the last day or two a comment by the Treasurer of Ontario, the Honourable Darcy McKeough—

Senator Grosart: That is not a question; it is a statement.

Senator Buckwold: I wonder if the deputy leader would let me finish my question.

Senator Choquette: If it is a question. Senator Grosart says it is not a question.

Senator Grosart: It is a statement.

Senator Buckwold: I am saying that I have recently read in the newspapers—

Senator Choquette: That is a statement.

[Senator Smith (Colchester).]

Senator Grosart: It is a statement.

Senator Buckwold: It is leading up to a question. I have read that the Treasurer of Ontario regarded the drop in value of the Canadian dollar vis-à-vis the American dollar as commendable as far as his province was concerned, and the same statement was made just recently by the president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. I ask the honourable senator if there is any consistency in the fact that a member of his party, the Treasurer of Ontario, sees in the drop of the Canadian dollar some major benefits to the industry and to the people of Canada?

Senator Smith (Colchester): The honourable gentleman again seeks opportunity to make a speech instead of asking a question, but I have no trouble with that problem at all. In the first place, the distinguished Treasurer of Ontario was obviously trying to take what small advantage there is out of the drop in value of the dollar. It certainly does encourage exports. We are in this terrific mess, and we want to salvage what we can. If the decreased value of the dollar will help us to salvage something out of the mess by increasing our exports, then certainly that is what he should say. Incidentally, I read the same article and I am well aware of it.

● (1500)

The same thing is true of what was said by the president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. All manufacturers want to salvage what they can, and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association would encourage its members to take advantage of what small opportunity there is.

We have only to read the speeches of the new Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister to realize that they deprecate the fall in the value of the dollar, and one of them—I have forgotten which; it may have been both—said that unfortunately the growth in exports was not making up for the fall in the value of our dollar.

Senator Choquette: Honourable senators will recall that in 1963 the Conservative government was defeated on the devaluation of the dollar to 92.5 cents.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I am pleased that Senator Choquette has afforded me the opportunity to add something. I am sure that the honourable senator who asked the earlier question will recall vividly the assault made on the government and the fun made of our currency by the "Diefendollar", that fraudulent, worse than fraudulent, effort to convince the people of Canada that the devaluation of the currency at that time was such a catastrophe that the government should be defeated because of it—and it partly succeeded.

Senator Perrault: It was a completely different situation.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I shall let the previous speaker do the weeping and the mourning, but I do not propose to laugh and dance. The message conveyed in the Speech from the Throne is that it is time to work, it is time to put our shoulders to the wheel. Therefore, let us not weep, let us not mourn, but let us work to put this country on its feet. As the Speech from the Throne indicated, we are living in different times. The economic conditions of the past do not exist today. The situation has changed since November 15, 1976, and if we are going to adopt a gloomy attitude and refer to "Diefendollars," and so on, we shall not help the economy of this country.

Therefore, honourable senators, in my opinion it is neither the time to weep nor the time to laugh; it is neither the time to mourn nor the time to dance. It is time to work for the unity of this country, and to keep it together as one great country.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Grosart: It is time the government started doing that too.

Senator Bonnell: In participating in this debate, I should like first to join with the previous speakers in welcoming you, Madam Speaker, back to your useful and important seat in this chamber. I agree with them that you have excelled yourself not only here in the Senate but also in your many duties outside this chamber, where you have represented the office of Speaker, the Senate and this country with honour and distinction.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Bonnell: I should like also to join with the previous speakers in congratulating the mover and seconder of the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. The mover gave us much food for thought, and the seconder gave us a very lively and up-to-date report on how he sees the issue of national unity.

I must congratulate also the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and the Leader of the Government in the Senate on their interesting and excellent speeches. The Leader of the Government launched a devastating attack on the speech of the Leader of the Opposition. Although they did not agree on the outcome of the Canadian economy, they both presented strong arguments concerning the state of the nation. I am not too sure that either believed 100 per cent in what he was saying, but each did an excellent job in his presentation.

While I am on the subject of congratulating individuals, I should include our colleague Senator Fred Rowe, who this month had another book released by the publisher McGraw-Hill. The title of Senator Rowe's book is Extinction, which tells the story of the extinction of the Beothucks, the aboriginal Indians of Newfoundland, in the 1820s. For those who are interested in the early story of Canada, I recommend Senator Rowe's book as a "must," and I congratulate him on his achievement.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Bonnell: In referring to Senator Fred Rowe, I should like to take the opportunity of congratulating, through him, his son Bill on being chosen the new leader of the Liberal Party in Newfoundland. I am sure that if the son has some of the drive and ability of his father it will not be too many years before we shall have the father of one of our ten provincial premiers as a member of the Senate.

May I say how pleased I was to be a member of the Senate when Her Majesty the Queen and Prince Philip were able to be with us in the Canadian Parliament on the occasion of Her Majesty's Silver Jubilee Year. I wish that she could have taken the time to visit all the provinces and territories, as I know that all Canadians have a very high regard for the Royal Family, who tend to stir up in our hearts and emotions the desire to build a strong, united country, with one Queen and one God.

I noted in the Speech from the Throne that the Government of Canada has recently made new funding proposals to the provinces which will improve the efficiency and flexibility of social services such as the rehabilitation of disabled persons, and day care and community development centres. The delivery of those services will thereby better reflect varying conditions and priorities across the country. It is hoped that the response of provincial governments will lead to the introduction of a revised social services act during this session.

I also noted in the Speech from the Throne a paragraph stating:

The human hardship imposed by the current level of unemployment in Canada is deeply disturbing. It is neither just nor tolerable that in this country there should be so many men and women deprived of the dignity of self-supporting work, unable to meet their financial commitments and plan confidently for the future.

As I read those two sentences, the thought occurred to me that perhaps the time had come when we should all take another look at the report of the special committee chaired by Senator Croll, Poverty in Canada. Personally, six years ago I was not in favour of a guaranteed annual income, but as time passes it brings about changes in many things, and I am disturbed to see so much unemployment, so much need for social assistance and job creation. It further disturbs me that many of our programs, whether they be unemployment insurance, guaranteed income supplements, social assistance or general welfare assistance, tend under the present legislation to discourage people from either accepting or looking for work.

● (1510)

For example, I can think of many well trained, smart, alert, experienced senior citizens, still in good health at the age of 65, who are interested in working, want to work, and enjoy working, but who find that if they do take a job they lose their guaranteed income supplement. They not only lose their own but that of their wives, whose guaranteed income supplement will be discontinued as well. If they take a part time job and earn only a small amount of income, it becomes a major problem to have the guaranteed income supplement reinstated for both themselves and their wives. It seems much easier not to work, not to put their experience to the benefit of younger Canadians, not to keep their minds and bodies active, but rather just to sit and be non-productive so that the guaranteed income supplement will not be disturbed for either themselves or their wives.

I further find that in some areas where work is available and people are now drawing unemployment insurance, they do not wish to accept the work, unless it is full-time employment, because they will lose their unemployment benefits for a short period of time and will face a long waiting period in order to have the benefits restored. In many instances, unless the employment is for five days a week and continuous, it is to the advantage of the unemployed not to accept this work because it will interfere with their unemployment insurance benefits.

I also find that many people who are receiving general welfare assistance would rather not accept work because they would lose that assistance. Whatever they would earn by working would be deducted from their benefits, and a long drawn-out procedure would follow to try to have it reinstated if the employment did not last or if for some other reason they could not continue.

It is my belief that many of the programs which we have set up to assist Canadians do not give enough incentive to work. I further believe that most Canadians want to work, that they get great satisfaction from supporting themselves and in planning their financial needs and commitments for the future, when they know that they are assured of an income and a decent standard of living.

I am starting to believe that the time has come when we should take another look at the Senate's report, Poverty in Canada, or the Croll report, and see if it is not time for us to introduce into this country a guaranteed annual income, an income which will allow for the essential components of a minimum standard for satisfactory living; not a subsistence standard, but one which will allow for dignity and decency.

The report of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty in Canada recommended that the Government of Canada implement a guaranteed annual income on a uniform national basis; that the guaranteed annual income program be financed and administered by the Government of Canada; that the guaranteed annual income be designed to cover all Canadians who need it; that the basic allowance rate under the guaranteed annual income be set initially at 70 per cent of the poverty line for each family size; that the guaranteed annual income incorporate a work incentive mechanism to ensure that those who work receive and keep more income than those who do not; that the guaranteed annual income replace all existing federal income maintenance legislation, which would progressively be repealed; and that income tax exemptions be raised so that no Canadian whose income is below the poverty line would be subject to income tax.

The more I read these recommendations, and the more I see the incentive to work being removed from social legislation, the more I think that Senator Croll and his committee should be commended, and that the Senate and the government of Canada should now, in 1977, take another look at these recommendations and update them so that they fit the economy and the needs of Canadians at this time. They should amend them, if necessary, always keeping in mind that man gets great satisfaction out of working and earning his own living, planning his own life and future and trying to better himself. Whatever program we initiate, it should encourage people to work, because this country cannot be prosperous unless every man and woman who is fit and able to work is willing to put his or her shoulder to the wheel in order to make the economy of this country, the growth of this country, the development of this country, successful. I therefore recommend to all senators, and to the Government of Canada, that they take another look at the report of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty, keeping in mind the work ethic as well as the needs and desires of Canadians in 1977.

[Senator Bonnell.]

I was also pleased to note in the Speech from the Throne that the government will introduce measures in this session to enhance Canada's exports, and that further support will be provided to the private sector in undertaking large capital projects in other countries. I am not too sure what all this means, but it sounds good, and I look forward to hearing the minister explain the details of this program in the other place and show how it might give an incentive to private enterprise to expand its operations, as well as to increase our export trade.

I also noted this paragraph in the Speech from the Throne:

Several measures will be placed before you to improve the national transportation system. For example, new ports legislation will be introduced which will enhance local autonomy while maintaining the overall national interest.

This small section in the Speech from the Throne reminds me of the major problems which we have in Atlantic Canada, particularly in Prince Edward Island, because of transportation policies which I contend are not fair to our island provinces. Prince Edward Island, which was guaranteed continuous transportation to and from the mainland, with the federal government defraying all costs, finds itself being priced out of the Canadian market because of high transportation costs. It pays a major penalty to export to other provinces, as well as a major price to import from those other provinces. Because of the huge increases in transportation and ferry rates, the tourist industry in Prince Edward Island, which was our third major industry, is gradually falling behind, with no growth.

Our private enterprise tourist operators are finding that while their operating costs are increasing, the number of tourists is not increasing because of the high transportation charges involved in visiting Prince Edward Island. Not only has the fare been raised substantially but it has now reached the point where, because of federal government transportation policies, certain parts of the province are being hurt worse than others. For example, on the Borden-Cape Tormentine ferries, which are operated by the Canadian National Railways to the western end of the Island, from September 3 to June 25 the fare for a 5 year-old child is 25 cents. From June 27 to September 3, during the tourist season, the fare is 50 cents. The fare for that child to the eastern end of Prince Edward Island is 50 cents in the off-season and $1.00 during the tourist season—a 100 per cent increase over what is charged to travel to the western part of the Island.

● (1520)

On the eastern end, the ferries which run between Wood Islands and Cariboo are operated by Northumberland Ferries Limited. On the western end, the ferries which run between Borden and Cape Tormentine are operated by the Canadian National Railways.

If you happen to be travelling in a trailer or a camper, you would pay 20 cents a foot in the off-season at Borden and 40 cents a foot during the tourist season. If you visit the eastern end of the Island you will pay 30 cents a foot in the off-season and 60 cents a foot in the tourist season—a 50 per cent increase.

The passenger rates for adults at the western end of the Island are 65 cents in the off-season and $1.00 during the tourist season; whereas at the eastern end of the Island the rates are $1.00 in the off-season and $2.00 during the tourist season—a 100 per cent increase during the tourist season between June 25 and September 5.

Honourable senators, I hope that among the measures that will be placed before us to improve the national transportation system will be one to keep the ferry rates of Canada's island provinces at least at the level they are now in the off-season, and the rates at each end of Prince Edward Island the same, before the economy of these provinces is destroyed, and the tourist industry, which earns lots of dollars, is hurt to the point where private enterprise is no longer able to supply up-to-date accommodation for visitors.

I would like to spend the afternoon talking about transportation, but there are so many other interesting and forward-looking paragraphs in the Speech from the Throne that I will leave this item to be discussed more fully when measures to improve the national transportation system are placed before us.

Senator Rowe: Would the honourable senator permit a question before he leaves this matter of transportation? He has pointed out—quite correctly, I am sure—that the increasing rates for transportation of vehicles and travellers by water to Prince Edward Island have affected the tourist trade there. Is the same thing true, I wonder, in respect of tourist traffic by airplane. It is my impression that the tourist industry in Newfoundland has suffered considerably as a result of the increased air fares of recent years. I wonder if he can tell us what the effect has been in Prince Edward Island.

Senator Bonnell: In answer to my friend's question, I would say that Prince Edward Island used to reap great benefits from tourists visiting from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The greatest number of tourists in our province were from New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. As a result of the increased rates, the people from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick cannot afford the trip. They go back and forth, but do not visit on the Island. Air fares are increasing everywhere, and we are losing no more tourists than any other province because of them.

As far as ferries are concerned, we are losing, and losing badly, not only in tourists but also in exports and imports. Our whole economy is based on those ferries, and we must have continuous transportation at a reasonable cost provided by the Government of Canada, according to the BNA Act.

I also notice in the Speech from the Throne:

In the field of energy it will continue to be the determined policy of the government to work with the provinces toward the goal of self-reliance, particularly by encouraging exploration and conservation to reduce our dependence on imported oil. Further encouragement will be given to the development of energy-saving technology, of renewable energy sources, and of the application of solar energy.

Honourable senators, I am pleased to see this paragraph in the Speech from the Throne because it is my belief that the cost of energy will be one of the major problems affecting Canada in the not too distant future.

In this context I wish to congratulate the Government of Prince Edward Island and Premier Alexander Campbell for their foresight in trying to devise alternative sources of energy such as solar energy and wind power. Premier Campbell and his government seem to be leading the country in the development of energy-saving technology.

● (1530)

I believe that the time has come for the Government of Canada to construct a national or trans-Canada power grid for the transportation of energy to all provinces, in the same way as it constructed the trans-Canada pipeline for the transportation of oil and gas. There are tremendous amounts of energy to be developed in the Churchill Falls and Lower Churchill Falls areas, in the Fundy tidal power area, the James Bay area, and many other areas of this country, which could be fed into a national grid to provide cheaper energy to Canadians.

Although I see no mention in the Speech from the Throne of the relocation of federal departments throughout the provinces of Canada, I wish to state that I support this program as a result of which some 4,600 full-time and 5,500 part-time federal jobs, with a payroll of over $80 million, are being relocated in 24 communities. The presence of the federal offices will boost the demand for locally supplied goods, services and accommodations. A marked increase in regional economic growth and activity should result. It is estimated that construction of new federal offices will produce some 4,700 man-years of direct employment in the construction industry, and about 11,000 man-years of employment in associated fields. This, honourable senators, will be a great boost to employment, and a great boost to the economy of many regions of Canada. I believe it is a policy which will be appreciated by all the taxpayers of the country.

In this regard, I should like to thank the Government of Canada for announcing the transfer of the Department of Veterans Affairs to Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. The agencies and programs which will move to Charlottetown are: the Canadian Pension Commission, the Pension Review Board, the War Veterans Allowance Board and the Bureau of Pensions Advocates, as well as the veterans services, treatment services and administration services of the Department of Veterans Affairs. These units presently employ approximately 650 people in the National Capital Region. The move of the Department of Veterans Affairs to Charlottetown is expected to result in the hiring of between 400 and 500 employees in Prince Edward Island, with an annual payroll of $5 million to $6 million. This relocation to Charlottetown will contribute to the economic growth of the province, as well as tending to reduce some of the regional disparities of the past.

These relocations of federal departments will bring the government much closer to the people it serves. They will also make a considerable contribution to the economic well-being of communities all across the country, as well as giving Canadians who might not otherwise have been able to benefit from federal employment access to federal job opportunities. I commend the Government of Canada for this relocation policy.

I should also like to bring to the attention of the Senate the number of people killed on Canadian highways. I know that the Ministry of Transport, through the Road and Vehicle Traffic Safety Branch, has made great strides in the field of safety, safety equipment, higher standards of roads, and better highway signs. But, in spite of all their efforts, we seem to be having an increasing number of motor vehicle accidents, and an increasing number of young people in the prime of life killed on the roads.

In recent years a number of special studies have been carried out by research groups on the level of blood alcohol in victims of fatal motor vehicle accidents. The published findings of these studies indicate that at least 44 per cent of drivers fatally injured had been drinking, and at least 38 per cent of those drivers had levels of blood alcohol above 0.08 per cent, weight per volume, or 80 milligrams of alcohol per 100 millimetres of blood. The total number of accidents in Canada in 1971 was 491,781, while in 1975 it was 647,302. The number of persons killed on the highways in 1971 was 5,573, and in 1975 it was 6,061. The number of persons injured on our highways in 1971 was 192,599, and in 1975 the number of persons injured was 220,941. I have taken these figures from the 1975 report of Statistics Canada.

Each year many Canadians shake their heads and comment critically on the slaughter on American highways in the peak holiday periods. I wonder how many of those Canadians realize that our fatality rate is almost 50 per cent higher than that of the United States. Fifty per cent higher! I suggest that Canadians should continue to shake their heads, but in shame and not in criticism. There is no reason at all why our fatality rate should not be as low as that of our southern neighbour. I raise this topic for discussion, because I think there is too much complacency among Canadians who think it cannot happen here, or will not happen here. In fact, not only can it happen here but it does happen here, and all too frequently.

I commend the Road and Vehicle Traffic Safety Branch of the Ministry of Transport for its efforts, and I would like to suggest that more drivers in Canada should use their seat belts and lower their speed. We should continue to establish better safety standards for all the new motor vehicles and components. We should urge the provinces to build safer roads, and impress upon our people that they should practise good driving habits. Perhaps we should ask the federal government and the provincial governments to increase their educational programs on highway safety in an effort to do something towards reducing the tragic slaughter of young people in the prime of life, not to mention the millions of dollars of property damage and the millions of dollars of productivity lost to our country.

On motion of Senator Grosart, for Senator Sullivan, debate adjourned.

STANDING COMMITTEES

FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF SELECTION ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the first report of the Committee of Selection which was presented on Wednesday, October 26, 1977.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Perrault, that the report be adopted.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

MESSAGE TO COMMONS—SENATE MEMBERS OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Senator Langlois moved:

That a message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the Clerks at the Table to inform that house that the Honourable Senators Bélisle, Bell, Cameron, Choquette, Côté, Davey, Forsey, Fournier (de Lanaudière), Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Hicks, Phillips, Quart, Riel, Rowe, Sullivan and Walker have been appointed a committee to assist the Honourable the Speaker in the direction of the Library of Parliament, so far as the interests of the Senate are concerned, and to act on behalf of the Senate as members of a joint committee of both houses on the said Library.

Motion agreed to.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

MESSAGE TO COMMONS—SENATE MEMBERS OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Senator Langlois moved:

That a message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the Clerks at the Table to inform that House that the Honourable Senators Bell, Bonnell, Choquette, Duggan, Eudes, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Fournier (Restigouche-Gloucester), Greene, Haig, McGrand, Michaud, Neiman, Riley, Rizzuto, Smith (Colchester), Walker and Williams have been appointed a committee to superintend the printing of the Senate during the present session and to act on behalf of the Senate as members of a joint committee of both houses on the subject of the Printing of Parliament.

Motion agreed to.

RESTAURANT OF PARLIAMENT

MESSAGE TO COMMONS—SENATE MEMBERS OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Senator Langlois moved:

That a message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the Clerks at the Table to inform that house that the Honourable the Speaker, the Honourable Senators Bélisle, Godfrey, Inman, Norrie, Quart and Rizzuto have been appointed a committee to direct the management of the Restaurant of Parliament, so far as the interests of the Senate are concerned, and to act on behalf of the Senate as members of a joint committee of both houses on the said Restaurant.

Motion agreed to.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

MESSAGE TO COMMONS—SENATE MEMBERS OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Senator Langlois moved:

That a message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the Clerks at the Table to inform that house that the Honourable Senators Asselin, Ewasew, Forsey, Godfrey, Lafond, Riley and Yuzyk have been appointed to act on behalf of the Senate as members of a joint committee of both houses on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 1, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 1, 1977

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

First Annual Report of Loto Canada, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the period June 1976 to March 31, 1977, pursuant to sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of Defence Construction (1951) Limited, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Reports of the Anti-Inflation Board to the Governor in Council, pursuant to section 17(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, reporting its reference to the Administrator of the said Act of certain proposed changes in compensation plans, as follows:

1. Bell Canada and its Craft and Services employee groups, dated October 24, 1977.
2. Willow Creek School Division No. 28 and its caretaker group employees, dated October 24, 1977.
3. Port aux Basques Integrated School Board, dated October 24, 1977.

Report of Statistics Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 4(3) of the Statistics Act, Chapter 15, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

Copies of Report of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting compensation plan between Union Carbide Canada Ltd., Chicoutimi, Quebec and the group of its hourly employees represented by the United Steelworkers of America, Local 7287. Order dated October 26, 1977.

Report of The Seaway International Bridge Corporation, Ltd., including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Department of the Secretary of State of Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 6 of the Department of State Act, Chapter S-15, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Canadian Film Development Corporation, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 20 of the Canadian Film Development Corporation Act, Chapter C-8, R.S.C., 1970.

INCOME TAX

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDY

Senator Hayden, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and report upon the subject matter of any bill relating to income tax based on budget resolutions, including the 31st March 1977 budget proposals as subsequently changed, in advance of any such bill coming before the Senate, the Ways and Means motions of 20th October 1977 to amend the Income Tax Act and Income Tax Application Rules, 1971, or any matter relating thereto; and

That the committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisers as may be necessary for the purpose of the said examination.

Motion agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

Hon. Joseph A. Sullivan: Honourable senators, I rise to participate on this day in this debate for a number of reasons. In the first place, it was my very great privilege and honour to be present in the Senate 20 years ago when Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Elizabeth II opened Parliament. I have again been fortunate enough to have witnessed this most auspicious ceremony, and I join with all my colleagues in this body in thanking Her Majesty most sincerely for again coming, as our Queen, to perform this most important constitutional function.

● (2010)

If I may be pardoned for saying so, I believe only 12 senators remain who were present on that occasion 20 years ago. I happen to be number 12. I was the last of the first Diefenbaker appointments who witnessed that previous ceremony, and I believe that all Canadians are deeply grateful and most fortunate in having, as the head of this country, a monarch whom we all deeply love and owe our allegiance to.

Some hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Greene: One more year and you wouldn't have been on the team.

Senator Sullivan: We are all on the team.

Madam Speaker, I pay my respects to you for carrying out the duties of your office in such an excellent and expert manner.

Without attempting to be perfunctory, I congratulate the mover of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, Senator Frith, for a clear recitation expressed in philosophical generalities, but I must say that I believe all senators are aware of most of the issues to be placed before this body.

I should also like to congratulate the seconder of this motion, Senator Marchand, for his vigorous and demonstrative manner of proposing the course of unity for all Canadians.

I have a brief statement on unity that I wish to quote. It is not my own, but I think its particular message is better than anything that could come from any politician, doctor or lawyer. It comes from Darryl Sittler, a young man who captained the Toronto Maple Leaf Hockey Club last year and scored the winning goal for Team Canada in the Canada Cup Tournament. The Prime Minister gave a luncheon at which young Sittler was asked to speak. All he said was: "If we can play together, we can live and work together."

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Sullivan: No one can fault either the mover or the seconder for what they said and how they said it, but we on this side are at a loss to understand why they did not come to grips with the basic underlying cause of the problems of this country, namely, inflation and disunity.

I leave the problem of inflation, and so forth, to the professors, economists and sociologists; they have done such a masterful job over the last ten years! That is all I propose to say.

I feel that the report of the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy deserves the highest commendation, and I warmly congratulate Senator Lamontagne on the report. I had personal reasons for my interest in that committee, and he knows what they were.

I now wish to state quite emphatically the reasons that I am on my feet. I am interested in sick people. Because of my physical condition, once again having undergone major surgery, I was unable to attend the meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science last June when the ban on saccharin, the artificial sweetener, was under discussion. Well, it will be under discussion tonight.

At that time the Government of the United States had already hoisted its ban on saccharin for at least 18 months. Senator Carter, the chairman of our committee, was kind enough to write to me and suggest that if I were not able to attend the meeting perhaps I would like to forward any questions I had in mind pertaining to this particular problem and he would present them at the meeting. However, I was unable to do so from my hospital bed. I did prepare a letter for Senator Carter, but it was too late. I should like to put that letter on record now. It reads:

DEAR SENATOR CARTER: It was awfully kind of you to write to me and offer me the opportunity, if I am unable to attend the next committee meeting, to send to you any questions I would like to ask and you would ask them in my name. That is extremely courteous of you indeed.

However, Senator Carter, after reading the transcript of the last committee meeting, there is nothing I would have liked better than to have been present at that meeting. I am amazed that the Department of Health and Welfare of Canada would be so dogmatic in a decision on such meagre scientific evidence that they have produced in an experimental animal, the rat. I have had a great deal to do with experimental work in animals—the only difference being that I happen to have been out in the world competing in the market place and struggling for advancement while they are protected within the confines of a governmental bureaucracy. I want to place one question to you to ask from the Chair.

In all frankness I must say that the issue cannot be really resolved on the basis of one or two scientific studies. A number of rather complex factors are involved including the impossibility of conducting randomized trials in human beings, as well as a wide variation among lower animal species in their responses to drugs like saccharin.

Shortly after I spoke in the Senate when I discussed the subject of mutation, the department sent a teletype letter, I believe to all the far corners of the earth, stating their conclusion and basing it further on the result of what is called the Ames test by Dr. Ames in California.

I am surprised that some official from the department did not explain that the Ames test is a 'tissue culture' type test for carcinogenic potential based upon the assumption that if a chemical induces a mutation in tissue culture, it is also potentially carcinogenic. The virtues of this test are that it is very rapid and quite inexpensive to perform. Its only potential shortcoming is that the equivalence of mutagenicity in tissue culture to carcinogenicity in man is yet to be proven.

That is from the Science Journal, July, 1976, Volume 193. Further, the letter goes on:

As, unfortunately, I am unable to attend the next committee meeting, I have furnished Senator Buckwold with further irrefutable evidence in regard to this whole matter. I have asked him to use it freely and liberally in every sense of the word because I do not want to witness another 'swine flu bungle' as we have so recently just seen.

I would like to interject here and congratulate Senator Buckwold on his untiring efforts in this whole episode which he carried out so expeditiously and, might I add, correctly.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Sullivan: There appeared on page 20 of the Globe and Mail of Saturday, October 22, a headline which stated that consumers were getting less for their money as a result of the ban on saccharin. I sincerely trust that some official from the Department of National Health and Welfare will appear before the Anti-Inflation Board and present a strong case that thousands of people in this country, yes, hundreds of thousands, the obese and the diabetics, will have to pay more for saccharin, now only obtainable by prescription, than they did before this authoritative decree was enunciated by the department. In other words, people will pay more, and they are not likely to get bladder cancer. If they do not pay anything, they may get it. That is about the reasoning. It is not much better.

What has prompted me more than anything else is the fact that one of the senior deputy ministers of the Department of National Health and Welfare wrote a letter to the Toronto Star on October 18, 1977, in reply to an editorial, which appeared in the same paper of Friday, September 23, 1977, under the heading: "More Proof Needed of Saccharin Danger." I probably would have overlooked this situation had it not been for two remarks in that letter, which I challenge.

● (2020)

First, it is stated in the letter:

The technique used to assess the carcinogenicity of saccharin in rats is widely used throughout the world and is endorsed by such bodies as the World Health Organization and the U.S. National Cancer Institute.

On May 13 of this year the World Health Organization stated that studies made so far failed to provide any proof that saccharin increases the risk of cancer of the bladder. The technique that has been used, as the letter states, in the United States National Cancer Institute has not yet proved that the use of saccharin produces cancer of the bladder in human males. Dr. Sniderman of the United States National Cancer Institute states that they are not in a position at the present time to come to such a conclusion, and furthermore, that it will take a period of at least three years to discover whether this is so or not.

Honourable senators, this is exactly what I quoted from Dr. Charles Best in the conclusion of my speech to the Senate on May 3, 1977, as reported at page 659 of Hansard:

I do not accept the conclusion that as a result of this experiment diabetics [and obese individuals] should discontinue using saccharin, and much further work has to be done.

In view of all this scientific evidence, this particular problem should not be referred to a committee until further epidemiological studies have been concluded.

[Senator Sullivan.]

I repeat that purposely.

The second point I wish to make from this letter is the fact that it stated:

Recent studies conducted by the National Cancer Institute of Canada show a link between saccharin ingestion and bladder cancer in human males.

Well, this is a sorry state of affairs. Without in any way criticizing any of the individuals—far be it from me to do so—who participated in this work for the department, some of whom I know, the department sought to encourage the co-workers of the National Health Research Development Project of Health and Welfare Canada to have a paper entitled, "Artificial Sweeteners and Human Bladder Cancer" forwarded to Washington. Let me explain that the department sent this article to Washington, and it should have known it would be published. Under the so-called Delaney clause of 1952, the United States are at liberty to do so. The irony of this situation is that they did not want it published because certain tables that went with it were a little bit mixed up. Having been a member of the Ontario Cancer Foundation for many years I have some idea how these matters—grants and so forth—are arranged.

I hold up in front of you, honourable senators, one of the most reputable scientific medical magazines in the world, The Lancet. This journal is published in London and Boston, and its editors took it upon themselves to publish this article. The article appeared in The Lancet of September 17, 1977, but the letter to the Star did not mention the fact that at page 592 of the same issue of The Lancet, there was an editorial entitled, "Bladder Cancer and Saccharin". I quote simply two remarks from that editorial:

A study by Dr. Howe and his colleagues—

And it is rather interesting that there are two different groups working in the same Departments of Epidemiology and Preventive Medicine at the University of Toronto.

—reported on p. 578, [of The Lancet] suggests that a positive relationship exists between artificial-sweetener use and the risk of bladder cancer. This has already been publicized in the national Press, largely because recent U.S. legislation requires that documents submitted to federal departments and agencies must be made available to the public. Adequate appraisal is obviously not possible from summary Press reports and The Lancet is publishing the work so that the data on which the claimed association is based are available for independent assessment by a wider audience. Under such scrutiny certain weaknesses in the study can hardly be overlooked.

The editorial goes on further to state:

But there are other reasons for questioning the conclusions drawn by Howe and his colleagues from the association between bladder cancer and A.S. use. If we accept that the findings are not entirely due to chance, we must consider the possibility that the association might be indirect.

I could go on quoting from this editorial, but I shall just read the last paragraph:

There is need for further work on saccharin and bladder cancer in man. One such study has already come to our notice through the U.S. public information rules previously mentioned. This is a careful study by Wynder and Goldsmith—

I will refer to them later.

—of A.S. use in 146 cases and in 132 matched hospital controls: they report that the risk of bladder cancer in A.S. users of either sex was, if anything, somewhat lower than in non-users. We judge that most readers will find the case against saccharin unimpressive.

The Canadian Medical Association Journal published an article in 1974, Volume III, page 1067, by Dr. Robert Morgan and Dr. Meera Jain of the Departments of Epidemiology and Preventive Medicine of the University of Toronto, who did a study of 232 bladder cancer patients and found no positive relationship of cyclamate or saccharin to bladder cancer.

Dr. Robert Morgan and Dr. Robert Osborne of the same departments at the University of Toronto will have an answer to the previously mentioned article which, as stated, appeared in The Lancet with the editorial from which I have read certain pertinent parts. Dr. Morgan's reply will appear in the next issue of the Canadian Medical Association Journal and will be most interesting reading, I can assure you.

In my previous presentation to the Senate I spoke about one of the outstanding men of America who is doing this work, Dr. Irving Kessler, at the School of Hygiene and Public Health at Johns Hopkins University. I should like to repeat one remark which he made, and which was published in the Federal Register on April 15, 1977, Part III. He stated:

• (2030)

Most scientists would agree that individual studies are insufficient by themselves to prove or disprove causal associations in human disease.

Further on in that article he states:

The point of all this is that in seeking to establish causal associations in human disease, science usually advances by means of many small steps converging on the truth, rather than by single spectacular giant leaps forward. To demand from one or two investigations immediate and definitive answers to complex questions on the etiology of human disease is to ignore the manner in which much of our established medical knowledge has been acquired until now.

Dr. W. R. Bruce of the Princess Margaret Hospital introduced me to Dr. John H. Weisburger, the Vice President for Research, Naylor Dana Institute for Disease Prevention, American Health Foundation. Dr. Bruce's letter of June 16, 1977 reads as follows:

Dear John:

Senator Dr. Joseph Sullivan as a previous member of our Board has been particularly interested in looking into the Saccharin legislation. I knew that you were interested in these studies from your talk here two weeks ago and gave him your name.

Yours sincerely,

W.R. Bruce, M.D., Ph.D.

In a letter dated June 21, 1977, Dr. Weisburger wrote:

I just received a note from Dr. W.R. Bruce of The Princess Margaret Hospital. I understand you are interested in our views on saccharin.

As you will see by the documentation which I just submitted to the FDA, it is my considered opinion that saccharin is not a human cancer risk.

With my very best,

John H. Weisburger, Ph.D.

Vice President for Research.

I should like to read a paragraph from another letter, but I will cut it down somewhat because I know it may be a bit boring. I have to put some of these scientific facts on the record, and I intend doing so. Dr. Weisburger, in a letter dated June 24, 1977, stated:

May I say that I know very well my colleagues and friends, the Public Health Protection Branch, whose data are currently used for public action here in the United States as well as in Canada . . . I believe that this is a very controversial area, and I hope that we scientists can come up with a rational solution so that the public can be protected while at the same time not going to extraordinary length in emphasizing health risks by substances which in my opinion are not worth our time and effort.

Further on in that letter he states:

As you will see by the enclosed report of this Institute, the main human premature killing diseases stem from two aspects of our lifestyle; one is smoking, and the other is our diet, which is too rich in fat of all types in relation to our caloric needs due to our sedentary lifestyle.

Thus construed, the saccharin matter is a tempest in a teapot, and it is regretted that so much public attention and scientific efforts were made at great cost. I now believe that we can safely conclude that saccharin is not a human cancer risk under the usual conditions of intake.

In the first paragraph of his letter of June 20, 1977, Dr. Weisburger wrote:

The undersigned is currently Vice President for Research of the American Health Foundation. Prior to 1972, he was Head of the Carcinogen Screening Section and Director of the Bioassay Segment of the Carcinogenesis Programs for the National Cancer Institute, Bethesda, Maryland.

I might explain the meaning of the word "bioassay." It is the determination of the potency or concentration of a compound by its effect upon animals, isolated tissues or micro-organisms as compared with a standard preparation. One further note from Dr. Weisburger's letter is as follows:

These studies further find support in other studies conducted in other laboratories in the United States, Europe, and in Japan in which reliable observation has disclosed no untoward effect of these high levels of saccharin in mice and in rats, the classic species used for carcinogen bioassay.

With his last letter to me, dated October 21, 1977, Dr. Weisburger enclosed an editorial he wrote for the publication, Preventive Medicine, Volume 6, 185-190, 1977. He wrote:

As we just discussed, I am mailing you immediately copies of our papers dealing with bladder cancer.

As I have told you, it is my considered opinion that the positive results with saccharin in rats reflect at best a weak promoting action. Saccharin as tested in animals as well as in rapid bioassays does not exhibit properties characteristic of a carcinogen.

In one paragraph of his editorial he mentioned studies made by scientists in England, and said that they had arrived at the same conclusions as he and his colleagues.

Honourable senators, I have only scratched the surface of this whole problem, but I should not forget The New England Journal of Medicine, one of the outstanding medical periodicals in the world. An article headed, "Saccharin—The Bitter Sweet," appeared in its issue of June 9, 1977, from which I should like to read as follows:

No study, including the Canadian one, has shown convincingly that there is an excess of bladder cancer in rats exposed to saccharin only after birth, the "F<sub>0</sub>" generation. The Canadian study is persuasive only for male rats born of mothers fed a diet containing 5 per cent saccharin and weaned to the same diet, the "F<sub>0</sub>" generation. The study is only weakly positive for F<sub>1</sub> females.

The article goes on to state:

The issue of dose response is crucial. A diet containing 5 per cent saccharin has 500 to 2000 times more saccharin than is consumed by an adult human being.

That is fairly conclusive evidence.

I did not touch upon the views of my colleagues in the United Kingdom, and I know a great many of these men. Unfortunately, I was ill during the time this first came up, but I do not intend to sit here now and not say something about a subject with which I am fairly familiar.

To repeat, I do not wish to see this particular sorry matter made a bungle, as was the swine flu vaccine episode. It is one thing to carry out well-conducted experiments; it is quite another to carry out meaningful ones.

Finally—with a little colloquial phraseology—a good many years ago there was done an in-depth study on the incidence of squamous carcinoma of the cervix uteri in Catholic nuns which found that they were free of this disease. Since these nuns were virginal, the investigators reached the conclusion that this form of cancer was caused by sex. Though I realize that sex is not a food additive, I still feel that, in the spirit of their pontifical announcement, the Department of National

[Senator Sullivan.]

Health and Welfare should demand that sex be outlawed throughout Canada.

• (2040)

Senator Inman: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Where does honey fit in as a sweetener? I read an article some time ago which described honey as being a substitute sweetener for people with diabetes.

Senator Sullivan: Well, are you a diabetic? If you are, come to my office. I get the pure brand of honey. I would not worry about it.

Senator Greene: Most of us—and here I think I speak for most Canadians—have been under the illusion, perhaps mistakenly in the light of the honourable senator's remarks, that our Department of National Health and Welfare, in its research, was more independent of the drug lobby than its counterpart in the U.S.A.. Therefore, the conclusions of scientists in the Department of National Health and Welfare are likely to be more legitimate than those of scientists in the United States Department of Health who were subjected to the pressures, under their system, of the drug lobby.

Can I take it from the honourable senator's speech that this is a fallacy, and that, in fact, in many instances the conclusions of the United States Department of Health might be more valid than those of the Department of National Health and Welfare, despite the fact that it may be more free from the influence of the drug lobby?

Senator Sullivan: Thank you, Senator Greene, but I have not been talking about the officials, outside of one man in the Department of Health in Washington. I have been talking about individual researchers in various institutions in the United States. I have been talking about Kessler of Johns Hopkins University, and I have been talking about Weisburger of the Naylor Dana Institute at Valhalla, New York. The last remarks I read came from the Harvard Medical School. So I was not in any way trying to uplift the health and welfare body of the United States Government over our own—not by any means. I belong to a number of senior American societies, but I do not think that Canada needs to take second place in medical research, with this one exception. Nowhere in the world do people agree with what has been done in Canada—and that is to deprive a whole nation as a result of an experiment on rats.

Hon. Bernard Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, I should like to begin by congratulating Senator Sullivan for calling upon his vast medical and scientific knowledge to place some very important information on the record of the Senate. And, senator, I particularly appreciate that you did not ask Senator Inman for her OHIP or SIN number, or whatever it is you use in Ontario or Prince Edward Island, before you responded to her question.

Senator Sullivan: I don't know quite how to take that, senator. Are you talking about state medicine?

Senator Graham: With all the kindness in my heart, sir.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, first of all I should like to express my whole-hearted gratitude and satisfaction for the warm welcome extended to Her Majesty the Queen during her visit which was a great success.

I join the other senators in paying tribute to you, Madam, Speaker of the Senate, whose wisdom and good sense are a credit to the Senate.

I also pay tribute to the members of the Senate who moved and seconded the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Both proved most convincingly the degree of knowledge and sensitivity which could be expected from two men of such exceptional value.

I congratulate the Leader of the Government and the leader of the opposition for honouring us with their continued presence. Both honourable senators bring to the Senate considerable experience, and an acute sense of responsibility in the performance of their respective duties.

Allow me also to extend my congratulations to their deputies, as well as the whips and all the members of the Senate staff, who were most gracious and co-operative.

[English]

On a much more sombre note, honourable senators, the death of Mrs. Robert Stanfield saddened all members on both sides of this chamber. Both in her public and in her private life Mary Stanfield exhibited a warmth and a kindness which created for her a very special place in the minds and hearts of all Canadians.

We are living in a particularly difficult time in our nation's history. We have slow growth and a serious problem of unemployment. Recent layoff announcements at INCO in Sudbury proved to be rather a dramatic reminder to those of us who live in Cape Breton of the harsh realities we had to face when Hawker-Siddeley suddenly pulled out of the coal and steel industries of our area. Fortunately, the governments of Nova Scotia and Canada recognized the possible consequences and moved quickly to maintain and, in the case of coal, to expand the industry. I am mindful of the part played by our colleague the former Premier of Nova Scotia, the Honourable G. I. Smith, who took courageous action at that time in leading the takeover of the steel plant by the Government of Nova Scotia.

I think it is fair to say that over the past ten years, with the introduction of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, and in no little measure because of the large investments by the Government of Canada, the cooperation of labour and management, and also because of the oil cartel of the Arab countries, we have gone a considerable distance in developing the technology required for a healthy coal industry.

Devco now operates three mines in Cape Breton: one rehabilitated mine, No. 26, and two new mines, Lingan and Prince, and they employ in all some 3,500 people. This, I suggest, is in sharp contrast to the announced intention several years ago of phasing out the mines without one mine or one miner to exist actively in Cape Breton by 1981. At the present time a major offshore drilling program, financed on an 80 to 20 percentage basis by Canada and Nova Scotia, is being carried out in the Sydney coal field. The purpose of the drilling program is to give a more precise definition to the extent of the resource so that accurate planning for the short- and long-term future can be put in place. Early signs are very encouraging. As honourable senators know, coal is a very valuable resource and it is essential that we are vigilant in ensuring that this resource is exploited properly so that the people of Nova Scotia, and indeed of Canada, may derive maximum benefit. I am hopeful that the coal resource will prove to be in sufficient quantity and quality, and available at a production cost, that will warrant the opening of one and possibly two new mines to meet the demands and the possibilities of an expanding market.

● (2050)

I also believe that there can be no security, and therefore no real sense of well-being, until and unless the problem of steel is resolved. As honourable senators know, Hawker-Siddeley left the Sydney community a capital-starved production plant that essentially served the needs of its other divisions. Over the past few years there has been a great deal of discussion about the possibility of a world-scale steel plant, which has been communicated to the public as being a greenfield operation which could possibly produce anywhere from 2 million to 12 millions tons of basic steel depending upon the kind of time-frame presented.

The economic recession of the 1970s has postponed the realization of this project. All possibilities have been fully investigated by the consortium, including the Government of Nova Scotia, the private partners, with some extensive facilitating help from the federal Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

So far as the project itself is concerned, the work has gone well. I believe it has been established that if and when any major steel complex of that kind can be judged to be sensible and feasible, Cansteel offers the best possibility anywhere in the industrialized world. In the meantime, the existing Sydney steel plant has enormous problems. Hawker-Siddeley left us a plant which was often referred to as an orphan plant, in desperate need of capital in several major departments and with a labour force which is most certainly concerned, and at times confused and uncertain.

Nova Scotia is carrying a very heavy burden in even sustaining Sysco. Money must be expended to put the plant in better condition, and federal government support for a realistic approach to rehabilitation is absolutely essential.

I might also say that steps are already well under way to rebuild and to stabilize Sysco's position in the marketplace, and hopefully the day is not too far away when the work force, and indeed the community, will have a sound reason for having a greater sense of optimism and security.

As one means of alleviating the unemployment and economic problems of disadvantaged regions, the Government of Canada instituted a program of decentralization. It is important, however, that the government not only find a way to decentralize its work force, but wherever possible there should be decentralization of decision-making powers.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Graham: One of the best examples can be found in the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Its manpower is widely dispersed throughout the country, but its decision-making power is maintained almost exclusively in the Ottawa region.

We recognize that major policy decisions must be made centrally, but the implementation and rationalization of those policies must respond to the unique problems of the various regions. We must be careful not to use either Toronto's or Edmonton's solutions to solve Glace Bay's problems, and conversely we must not use Glace Bay's solutions to solve Toronto's or Edmonton's problems.

In the field of transportation, I regret to say that the country's national airline has been demonstrably insensitive to the travelling needs of some regions of our country. Let me say at the outset that Air Canada personnel, especially in the part of Canada which I know best, are extremely courteous and helpful. But I suspect that they too are sometimes frustrated and embarrassed by cutbacks and the lack of proper schedule coordination within their own system and with regional carriers.

Senator Flynn: Agreed.

Senator Graham: Let me deal briefly with schedule coordination. Three and a half years ago, on April 23, 1974, the then Vice President of Public Affairs for Air Canada, Mr. Claude Taylor, who is now President and Chief Executive Officer of the company, appeared before the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications. The purpose of the meeting was to deal with Bill C-5, intitled, in part, "An Act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System and Air Canada for the period from the first day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974."

Page 30 of the evidence records the following question asked by me of Mr. Taylor:

In respect to scheduling, what kind of consultation do you have with other airlines? To be specific, what kind of consultation do you have with respect to scheduling in terms of EPA and yourselves in and out of the Atlantic region?

Page 30 also records, Mr. Taylor's response, as follows:

You have probably used the best example that we have in Canada, senator, because there is a closer working relationship between EPA and Air Canada in that region than there is between Air Canada and any other regional carriers. There is a very close working relationship in scheduling between EPA and Air Canada. The two carriers consult in the processing and planning; they consult prior to the publication of schedules, as well as in respect of the volume of traffic over the routes which they both serve.

[Senator Graham.]

Honourable senators, if the coordination of schedules in Atlantic Canada over the past three years is the best example in the country of liaison between the national airline and the regional carriers, then all I can say is, "God help the other regions in Canada."

I do not intend to take the time of the Senate on this occasion to document the callous disregard for passenger convenience which has been shown on numerous occasions in flight scheduling. The record, in the form of schedules, speaks for itself. I do suggest, however, that it is time to inject some humanism and common sense and knowledge of the areas to be served in schedule planning, instead of relying mainly on computers.

Exactly one year ago today, on November 1, 1976, at the opening of the new terminal facilities at the Halifax International Airport, I made, for the umpteenth time, personal representations in this respect to Air Canada officials. This was followed by other appeals, but they have obviously fallen on deaf ears. The senior senator from Cape Breton, Senator John M. Macdonald, never fails to congratulate me on the progress I am making with Air Canada each time that a new schedule appears. We did have one good evening flight to Halifax and Sydney over the spring and summer months, but two days ago that was taken off for the winter period and for the life of me I cannot determine why. The flight originates in Toronto, goes on to Halifax, and terminates in Sydney. I have never travelled on that particular flight, flight 622, when it has not been completely filled. Last Thursday evening, when I was returning home to Nova Scotia, it was over-booked by 15 passengers. Yet that flight has been taken off.

Well, effective July 1 of this year, Air Canada officials, according to one news report, recognized that the Atlantic operation was not receiving the attention at the corporate level that it should, and they created a sixth region, based in Halifax, which reports directly to the corporate head offices in Montreal. At that time they appointed Mr. Roger Linder as Vice President of the Atlantic Canada administration unit. In a reference to his appointment, and to the establishment of the Atlantic unit which he leads, a Halifax Chronicle Herald article of September 6, 1977, quotes Mr. Linder as follows:

● (2100)

This is an important change to air travellers and to shippers as well as the staff of Atlantic Canada, as they will have a stronger and more direct voice at the corporate level.

The story goes on to say that during the previous two months Mr. Linder had spent a great deal of time travelling the four Atlantic provinces talking to staff, provincial and municipal officials, and to business leaders who frequently use the air service.

I feel that I use the air line as much as anyone in Atlantic Canada, and I have never been contacted by Mr. Linder or his representatives, nor has the Deputy Prime Minister of our country, the member of Parliament for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso, nor the member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys, nor the member for Cape Breton-East Richmond, nor, to my knowledge, has any other member of this chamber.

I have spoken already about the industrial development and employment problems we have in our part of Canada. I believe the Government of Canada has been helpful and generous in trying to solve this problem, but the situation is aggravated all the more when prospective developers are reluctant to come and even take a look because of poor airline scheduling.

Now let me say this. I am well aware of the commendable efforts being put forward by Mr. Taylor and other officials of Air Canada to put the airline's balance sheet in the black after three consecutive years of losses. If it is necessary, we are prepared to accept our share of a reasonable cutback, but that, of course, is all the more reason why schedules within the Air Canada system itself, and with regional carriers, should be better coordinated. It will be very interesting to see the balance sheet for this year when it is produced.

Perhaps my good friend, the Chairman of the Transport and Communications Committee of this chamber, and his members, might consider it appropriate, after three and one-half years, to invite Mr. Taylor and his associates to make a return appearance before the committee. I mean that in all sincerity, because I am sure they will have some very relevant information that they will want to communicate to us. We, of course, will want to communicate with them as well. In the final analysis I suggest that if Air Canada wants to remain a national airline it should pay closer attention to the needs of the people for whom the service was created.

Let me say something briefly about the national scene before concluding. Our job today, as Canadians, is to work together towards a new federalism, and thus resolve the conflict and the grievances of our time, just as the Fathers of Confederation did in theirs. High on the list of problems to be resolved are those of language equality and French-English relations. I have already spoken on this question in this chamber, having done so on July 14 of this year during the national unity debate. But it would be very short-sighted to suppose that the challenge to Canada's unity can be defined in terms of language alone. Just as serious a challenge is posed by the sense of inequality felt by people in the Atlantic provinces, and the west, and by our native peoples. Maritimers, for example, have a keen sense of history. They are conscious of the hopes and expectations that were aroused at the time of Confederation, and their sense of grievance is based not only upon the economic realities of today but also upon the gap between the realities of today and the promises of yesterday.

My own province of Nova Scotia was among the most prosperous parts of North America a century ago, having amassed substantial wealth through fishing, trading and ship-building. My ancestors agreed, very reluctantly, I might say, to cast their lot with the union, principally because the union held out the hope of a better life for all through better transportation systems and other means. Nova Scotians agreed to share some of their prosperity with Upper and Lower Canada as part of their act of faith in a new country. They are still waiting for the fulfilment of the hopes of a century ago.

Their faith is sometimes battered, but never broken; their commitment to Canada is sometimes abused, but never abandoned.

We are very much aware, of course, that through equalization payments, cost-sharing programs and DREE grants, Canada and, indeed, the "have" provinces of our country, have, do, and will continue to help the Atlantic provinces both to maintain a national standard of public services and to develop economically. Over the last decade more than a billion dollars have gone into the region in DREE grants, and about $5 billion in equalization payments. Equally important are federal initiatives such as the 200-mile fisheries limit and the federal-provincial agreement on development of offshore resources.

What the people of Nova Scotia and the other Atlantic provinces want most of all, however, is the chance to assume our rightful place in this country; the chance to stand on our own feet as self-reliant and fully productive Canadians; the chance to keep our young people gainfully employed at home and to keep our towns and our cities thriving as vital and proud communities. That is what we want, and as long as we do not have the chance to obtain it, there will always be Atlantic Canadians who are convinced that Canada is unfair to them.

It is true that federal governments, over the years, have seriously addressed the problems of regional unemployment, the need for new and expanded industries, the encouragement of primary industries and the adjustment of harmful tariffs, but disparity persists, and it undermines the confidence of the region that it can some day emerge from its disadvantaged status.

What has happened over the last year or so, to give us new hope and confidence is, ironically, the change that we have seen in the economic and political climate in Canada. The Parti Québécois has opened the eyes of all Canadians to the need for some important accommodations in the way we live together, and the state of the economy has opened our eyes to the need for far more cooperation and mutual understanding among Canadians.

I have never known a time when Canadians were more open to each other than we are today, or more willing to listen to and understand each other, or more accepting of the need to adapt our Constitution and our ways of doing things to the realities of our time and the needs of our regions.

To capitalize upon and give form to that new spirit, I suggest that one of the things that can be done today, which would have been much more difficult just a few years ago, would be for the Canadian federation to make a constitutional commitment to the reduction of regional disparities, thus eliminating the fear in my region, for example, that changes of government, or changes in national attitudes, could result in arbitrary changes in the level of regional encouragement.

● (2110)

More than that, I believe now is the time when Canadians are ready, as seldom before, to contemplate structural economic changes of benefit to the regions. Of great benefit to the Atlantic area, for example, would be more decentralization of national economic activity, the development of alternate energy sources such as tidal power in the Bay of Fundy, better management of fish stocks off the Atlantic coast and the growth of our export trade. Given the climate of public opinion in Canada today, I am much more hopeful that such initiatives are capable of attracting public support in all parts of the country.

Everywhere you go in Canada these days you meet people who show that they are more willing than they have ever been to consider new ways of making sure that every Canadian believes he has an equal place in this country, an equal opportunity to grow and an equal share in the benefits this country has to offer.

It is also clear that western Canadians feel aggrieved at times about their place in the union. Their complaints are as real today as they were at the turn of the century—the feeling of having an unequal voice in Ottawa and inadequate influence over economic decisions which affect their lives. Westerners struggle, as they have always done, against the weather, the railroads, what they sometimes refer to as insensitive eastern corporations, and the grain-marketing system. They want industrial development and opportunities commensurate with their natural resources. They want to feel their accomplishments are valued, and their voice is heard and respected.

Honourable senators, if we are to achieve a new sense of unity in Canada, these grievances, as well as others, must be resolved. A start towards that resolution might be found in the knowledge that Confederation has always been a dynamic system, never a static one. It has been continually adapted to the changing needs of the country. That history of adaptation permits us confidence as we go about the task of adjusting to present reality.

The scope of that task, and the hope it affords of a reunited and stronger country, makes this an exciting time to be a Canadian—a time when every Canadian can contribute to the rebirth of one of the truly great nations of the world.

On motion of Senator Desruisseaux, debate adjourned.

AGRICULTURE

“RECOGNIZING THE REALITIES: A BEEF IMPORT POLICY FOR CANADA”—INTERIM REPORT ON CANADIAN BEEF INDUSTRY—
DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Argue, calling the attention of the Senate to the interim report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, appointed in the last session of Parliament and authorized in that session to examine from time to time any aspect of the agricultural industry in Canada, on its inquiry into the desirability of long-term stabilization in the Canadian beef industry, entitled: “Recognizing the Realities: A Beef Import Policy for Canada,” tabled in the Senate on Friday, 14th October, 1977.—(Honourable Senator Langlois).

[Senator Graham.]

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I am yielding to the Honourable Senator Yuzyk.

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Thank you for yielding to me, Senator Langlois.

Honourable senators, in rising to speak on this report, I want to associate myself with the general thrust of the remarks of Senator Argue, Senator Olson, Senator Greene and Senator Molgat who have already participated in this debate.

There was a considerable amount of work done by the members of the committee, and also by the committee's staff, Albert Chambers and Rick Andrews, in preparing this report. For their substantial contributions they should be commended.

The chairman of the committee in particular, Senator Argue, is to be congratulated for his outstanding role in piloting the report to completion.

● (2120)

This report is a timely and significant document for the beef industry, as we are facing a new round of multilateral trade negotiations in Geneva this fall, and the beef industry is still recovering from a disastrous year of severely depressed prices and record low returns to beef producers in 1976.

Canadian beef producers have been suffering immense losses during the last few years. Senator Molgat has already vividly illustrated this fact by quoting a recently completed independent study which stated that Canadian beef producers have lost $100 million per year for the last three years. The Agriculture Committee was made well aware of these losses as we listened to representatives of producer organizations and producers themselves in the course of our inquiry.

One major point mentioned throughout our study was the devastating impact which imports of offshore beef have had on our markets. I personally find this situation intolerable and, indeed, difficult to understand. During 1976, for example, when beef producers in this country were facing record low prices and constantly escalating costs, the Government of Canada was allowing record levels of imports to enter the country. These imports depressed beef prices generally, particularly in the cow market, by adding to our surpluses. This beef, primarily from Australia and New Zealand, was in fact selling in Canada during 1976 at prices 27.5 cents per pound below its selling price in the United States. In July 1976, an attempt was made by the government to correct this huge discrepancy in price. This resulted in the infamous “6-cent under rule”, which stated that imported beef from Australia and New Zealand would not enter Canada at prices more than 6 cents per pound below the price at which it entered the United States. Such an agreement, however, had little effect, as prices of imports did not come into line with the “6-cent under rule” until November 1976, fully five months after this “emergency action” was taken.

No attempt was made by the government during most of 1976 to regulate or monitor in any way the flow of oceanic imports, despite repeated calls by producer organizations and the official opposition in the other place. Producers were forced to bear the brunt of these excessive import levels alone, which were based on international trading patterns over which producers had no control. Only in October 1976, when the United States triggered its meat import law, did Canada enact the Export and Import Permits Act to restrict the level of imports for the rest of the year. This action also had a questionable effect of reducing import levels as we were already committed to large volumes of meat which was en route to Canada by ship, so most of the damage was already done.

Because there was no long-term policy on imports and because there was no legislative mechanism to regulate the flow of imports, the producers of this country were forced to suffer severe hardships, the extent of which has already been quantified—$300 million in losses since 1974. Considerations such as these prompted the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture to produce its interim report, A Beef Import Policy for Canada. This is an urgent problem, and producers across Canada were unanimous in demanding a solution. I believe that the report currently before the Senate, which has already received considerable attention, provides such a solution.

Before I go further, I must comment on the objective and democratic way in which the committee conducted itself during this inquiry. All parties wishing to appear before the committee were accommodated, and all provincial governments were contacted. In fact, some 30 briefs were presented to the committee in Ottawa. The committee was not satisfied with only this testimony, so it organized a series of public hearings in small towns in five separate provinces. These meetings provided some 1,800 beef producers with the opportunity to talk directly with senators who were members of the committee and who, I might add, took a week of their holidays, when the Senate was in recess, to perform the formidable and commendable feat of holding meetings in seven towns in four provinces in a period of eight days. By the way, they did not use a government aircraft, but travelled by commercial airlines and buses. This is but another example of the vitality and dedication which exists in this chamber, and I heartily congratulate the senators involved.

The next obvious question is: What will be the impact of this report? Judging from the initial reaction by producers and governments, I would say that the impact will be significant. The report was widely publicized in both western and eastern Canada, and I have in my hand an impressive file of favourable press comments. The headline, "Beef Import Curb call Welcomed on Prairies," graced the front page of a major western newspaper. Headlines such as, "Quotas Seen Aiding Beef Producers," "Senate Report Expected to Suggest Flexible Quotas," "Prairie Producers Back Beef Tariff Plan," and "Beef Import Suggestions Getting Favourable Reaction from Industry," appeared in many leading papers.

Soon after the tabling of the report, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the largest producer organization in this country, issued a press release praising it in terms such as "Canadian beef producers will be greatly heartened by the recommendations of the Senate Committee on Agriculture for the beef industry of Canada." Charles Munro, President of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, went on to say that the Federation "will be intensively studying and discussing the details and implications of the very challenging proposals of this important Senate report."

● (2130)

The Canadian Cattlemen's Association, who were important witnesses during the inquiry, are pleased with the overall tone and objectives of the report but have some alternative methods they would like to discuss to achieve these objectives. Our committee will be holding further consultations with all these organizations to discuss our recommendations.

Provincial governments have played an important role in this inquiry, and recently the Honourable Marvin Moore, Minister of Agriculture in Alberta, Canada's largest beef-producing province, supported the committee's report in the provincial legislature. To the question, "Does the Alberta government agree with the Senate report?" the minister replied on October 20 as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the standing Senate committee looked into all phases of the marketing of beef insofar as imports to Canada are concerned. They made a number of recommendations and it would be difficult, without going to some length, to suggest that we are in favour or opposed to all of those recommendations.

I would say, however, in general the spirit and intent of the Senate report to the Government of Canada is one that we can agree with. It can probably be best summed up by a statement made at the beginning of the recommendations in the Senate report, to the effect that the Senate committee had examined the effects of Canada's trade laws on the achievement of stability in the beef industry and found that the laws were inadequate and, in many respects, counterproductive.

If I could quote a sentence from their report, the Senate committee says:

Yet the trade policy pursued by the Canadian government has drained away the resources of beef producers and caused considerable instability in both supply and price.

The Senate committee goes on to say:

The Committee has concluded that this policy and the laws which implement it must be changed.

Mr. Speaker, I would have to say that in general the context of the presentations made by this government to the Senate committee, which are quoted extensively throughout the report, are in fact in concert with what we think needs to be done in the beef industry, particularly for Alberta producers.

It would, however, be an understatement to say that this Senate report has been well received by all quarters that are concerned. Nevertheless, this chamber is rapidly gaining a reputation for the knowledgeable and pertinent studies it undertakes, and this is another obvious example.

After tabling this report the committee immediately undertook the next important step, namely, that of following up its recommendations by promoting their implementation, as it has done with the report on Kent County in New Brunswick. In fact, a meeting was held at noon today with the Honourable Jack Horner, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to discuss implementation of our recommendations. Last week, members of the committee had a successful meeting with the Minister of Agriculture, the Honourable Eugene Whelan, who felt that the beef industry should be given long-range protection. Although he said that he had some reservations, the minister nonetheless agreed with the committee's general philosophy on the question of beef import policy and that the committee's follow-up is important. Obviously we are actively concerned about the implementation of this report, and this follow-up is a role of which we as senators are uniquely capable, and which I believe to be one of our important tasks.

Some of the reactions to our report have been based on the concern that any action that we take will cause serious trade disruptions with our trading partners, particularly the United States. If this were to happen I would be seriously concerned, as the American market is the source of the majority of our export of beef cattle. I personally do not expect any drastic moves which would invite retaliation.

Our report is a careful rethinking or assessment of our relationship with the United States. Our relationship to their market regarding dressed beef has changed considerably in the past few years, and we are now on a strict quota. United States producers are now calling for the inclusion of live cattle in this quota structure. This is exactly what our report suggests—yearly quotas based on historical access. This would allow us to continue our beneficial trading relationship, yet allow each country to protect itself from abnormal floods of beef, which seem to occur often in the North American market.

Our recommendations, therefore, are far from extreme, far from promoting a trade war. In fact, the committee stresses that possible changes would occur only through consultation with our trading partners. We believe, however, that this report should provide the basis for such consultations.

The problem has been defined, the causes have been analyzed and the solution presented. The committee has heard the evidence and its report reflects that input. In some areas the committee has gone beyond what was directly suggested by producers, but this was done in the spirit of the hearings and was considered necessary by the committee to provide a complete and long-term solution to the problem. The members of the committee are convinced that some changes must be made to our import policy.

Although we consider that our recommendations are sound, we are willing to discuss alternative solutions at any time. We are willing to compromise on the details of the solution, but on the necessity of an immediate solution to this serious problem facing beef producers there can be no compromise. Action is necessary immediately.

In closing, let me say that I was pleased to be involved, along with my esteemed agricultural colleagues, on the subcommittee which drafted this report. I am confident that the views of the opposition were well represented and considered.

In lighter vein, if we want the beef producers to stop beefing about the beef industry, it will be necessary to beef up the beef industry. The consumers may beef about a small rise in beef prices, but they will soon realize that this will bring about stabilization in the beef industry, and in agriculture, which in the long-run will be in the best interests of Canadians as a whole.

On motion of Senator Langlois, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 2, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the National Museums of Canada, including accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 22 of the National Museums Act, Chapter N-12, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of operations under the Foreign Investment Review Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 30 of the said Act, Chapter 46, Statutes of Canada, 1973-74.

Copies of Reports of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting certain compensation plans, as follows:

1. Bell Canada, Montreal, Quebec and the group of its executive employees. Order dated November 1, 1977.

2. Bell Canada, Montreal, Quebec and the group of its clerical and associated employees, represented by the Canadian Telephone Employees' Association. Order dated November 1, 1977.

Public Accounts of Canada, Volume I, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 55(1) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

THE HONOURABLE JACQUES FLYNN, P.C.

FELICITATIONS

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it should be noted that yesterday marked the tenth anniversary of our distinguished colleague, Senator Jacques Flynn, as Leader of the Opposition in this chamber.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: It is not only a tribute to his ability, but to his incredible staying power, that he should have survived for so many years in that position. On behalf of all government supporters in this chamber may I wish him many, many more happy years in his present capacity.

Senator Benidickson: He is a former Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I don't know if this should have been put on the record.

[Translation]

That is because there are several interpretations that could be given to such an anniversary. In any event, I just want to say that during my ten years as Leader of the Opposition in this house, I have known three government leaders: Senator Connolly, Senator Martin, and my good friend Senator Perrault.

I must say that in order to survive, I had to rely on the cooperation, ability and courtesy of all the senators of course, particularly those around me who have always honoured me with their confidence and loyalty. I know that as far as senators opposite are concerned, I did at times strike staggering blows. Some hurt less than others, some know better than others how to roll with the punch.

[English]

I must say that I am very grateful for the courtesy and understanding that I have been afforded during these 10 years. I do not agree with the wishes offered by the Leader of the Government that I should stay here many, many more years. My wish is that Joe Clark will soon be able to appoint his own Leader of the Government.

● (1410)

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of Her Majesty the Queen's Speech at the opening of the Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament, and the motion of Senator Frith, seconded by Senator Marchand, for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. Paul Desruisseaux: Honourable senators, first I should like to associate myself with the congratulations that were extended to the Leader of the Opposition. His work has been outstanding and he deserves all the praise that the Leader of the Government gave him.

I should also like to associate myself with those senators who have spoken of the passing of Mrs. Robert Stanfield. We feel saddened by what has taken place, and we do offer our deepest condolences to the family.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I would like first to congratulate the movers of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne which has been so graciously delivered by Her Majesty the Queen of Canada. I would like also to commend my honourable predecessors in the present debate.

May I point out in particular the very correct and constructive speeches of the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition? I did appreciate them very much.

I associate myself with those who spoke in praise of Her Honour the Speaker of the Senate for the excellent work she has done throughout the last session and we express to her our satisfaction and our happiness that she maintains her present functions and again presides over the destiny of the Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament. We felt quite clearly that the Speech from the Throne had been so drafted as to remove any hint of deliberate emptiness which sometimes permeates through it.

I felt it was a model of frankness and political oratory. It describes the nature of the threat to a very unhealthy national economy and the frailty of Canadian unity. It points out that plans for adequate solutions to some of our problems will be disclosed during this session. Naturally, they will not be easy proposals. Already some even have doubts and fears in this connection.

The progressive removal of wage and price controls expected in the spring of 1978 threatens to increase wages at a time when our economy would be liable to experience another inflationary thrust on the domestic as well as international levels.

The Honourable Jean Chrétien will have much to do to cope with the complex problem which indeed is not exclusive to Canada. I think that whatever may be our political allegiance, we must close up our ranks, show a kind of common front, conclude unanimous agreements to facilitate the choice of steps and means to find more effective solutions.

The Throne Speech was for me a model of moderation and realism. It takes into account the present pitiful condition of national unity. It promises challenging government measures on our constitutional issues and our language problems.

I am one of those who feel there is no easy solution to such problems. They will not be solved in Canada more easily than elsewhere. Moreover, they will be solved only through the good will of the people involved, around a table where a frank and intelligent discussion might be fruitful.

The unemployment problem which was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne is even more acute than believed in some quarters. I am still confident, because some solutions are on the horizon. There is always a silver lining. Yesterday's setbacks are only preparation for tomorrow's successes. For the time being we cannot exclude the possibility of another depression. Should the economic and unemployment situation deteriorate any further, we will unfortunately have an alarming increase in unemployment and the snowballing effects it entails.

I intend in the near future to talk about that serious problem. It affects our industries which, here in Canada, create most of the jobs. The quest for solutions to that major and far-reaching problem should be the main and pressing objective in this session. Assistance measures through tax cuts as announced in the Speech from the Throne and specified in the speech delivered by the Honourable Jean Chrétien will not have the full scope expected by many.

With the annual deficit forecast for this year, namely $8 to $9.5 billion—the largest in Canadian history and, I believe, the highest prorated per capita deficit in the world—no one can reasonably expect wild give-aways. I will have the opportunity to go back to this subject in the very near future.

The Speech from the Throne calls upon our intelligence, and asks us for a more generous contribution in solving many of our political and even social problems. That, I suggest, will be an ideal opportunity for opposition parties to offer their positive suggestions and criticisms.

The Speech from the Throne also reminds us that we, as Canadians, are in a deficit position as far as those individual and common disciplines which are so essential to success and prosperity are concerned.

Faced with the very dismantling of our country, we have it as a duty once again, as our forefathers did, to be committed to a national renewal which would enable us to make common strides towards the progress of our young country.

● (1420)

[English]

As to the multilateral negotiations now under way that were mentioned in the Throne Speech, I intend to speak to you about them in the near future, and to discuss with you the effects and consequences of certain arrangements in the past for some areas of Canada. I will then also touch on the federal consultations with the provinces and the private sector which are mentioned in the Speech. I will, however, abstain from elaborating now on the other points raised in the Speech from the Throne. We will have occasions to discuss them during the session.

May I simply comment that I do not believe that the announced legislation to help private enterprise in undertaking large foreign projects financed by Canada would be anywhere near as beneficial to us as would Canadian projects financed here in Canada, to give more direct and better employment to Canadians. Important developments are needed here for so many obvious reasons. The second trans-Canada highway, which is to run more northerly, the hydro-energy development and the power transmission network that would enable a thorough distribution of our energy from renewable resources and give more guarantees against blackouts, and a great many other public works projects, would help to create additional jobs for Canadians at a time of emergency.

We are in deep trouble in our output, and to some extent, one could say, in our trade. We find we are in great need of productive Canadian investments.

I believe the best interests of government and Canadians demand that we develop a much better relationship with those who de facto have been producing or creating jobs in Canada, and with those who have been creating work for Canadians and who can now, better than anyone else, get us out of the economic problems we are experiencing. I believe we could somehow benefit in these areas from the examples given us by certain countries which have succeeded in lessening these particular problems, in spite of the difficult times.

We are in dire need of better and more serious consultations with Canadian business and industrial people in relation to the establishment of domestic and international economic policies which Canada should follow to achieve greater and better results for continued prosperity. These consultations would be in the best interest of the nation and to the greatest advantage of its people, and would eventually create jobs and fiscal revenues at a time when the need for both is so great. As far as I am concerned, this would have excellent public appeal and would seem so much sounder and better than blindly following the adventurous and sometimes untried economic book theories advocated by certain pseudo-economic advisers, which could very well precipitate some major economic disaster that would make Canada a much poorer nation.

I believe we must hereafter cease to expect a Utopian government capable of creating, at will, a flamboyant Canadian era. I believe that only through good will and "bonne entente" among the founding members of our young country can we hope to achieve a good, sound and efficient government that will be capable of promoting worthwhile basic national policies based on Christian capitalist principles. These can best serve us as a nation.

We have, indeed, the ability to realize quite rapidly such good government programs, backed and supported by our industrial, financial, labour and business people and by our trade organizations.

I believe that these are our best means to return to an era of prosperity and good employment to which Canada is entitled. After all, our statistics are far from being all bad, and we are following a worldwide pattern of economic hardship and recession.

● (1430)

After some recent quarterly economic reports of no growth, Canada's real gross national product in the last quarter grew roughly at an annual rate of  $4\frac{1}{2}$  to 5 per cent on the strength of improved merchandise exports, with further moderate growth expected for the remainder of the year. The United States gross national product growth is now expected to be about the same as ours.

Consumer income, spending and savings have not decreased, and consumer credit and durable spending are still following a pattern of growth which will in fact supplement the use of consumer credit for durable purchases.

Retail trade is expected to increase but will remain slightly below the 10 per cent gain of 1976. Consumer prices have now been contained considerably and are not expected to be up this year over 7.9 per cent, which is still much better than most countries of the industrialized world.

Business investment, in spite of recent scares in Canada, has continued to increase modestly this year.

Farm production is not expected to surpass last year's, but it will be of interest to note that inventory build-ups are also growing appreciably less rapidly in 1977.

Corporation profits are still expected to rise by some 12 to 16 per cent in 1977, and will now exceed $22 billion.

Interest rates have not really galloped this year. The Canada-United States interest rate spread has narrowed to around 2 per cent, from a  $2\frac{3}{4}$  per cent annualized rate. Bank lending increased over 10 per cent, with Canadian bankers' acceptance still going up and mortgage lending growing this year over last year.

Against these fair and welcome figures what we as Canadians are critical, displeased and unhappy about is the uncertain situation created by our unemployment, now at about one million people, and our labour market where, at the same time, we find an increased participation rate among our young people, giving rise to sharply higher unemployment. For this reason, unemployment should be number one on the list of priorities for this session of Parliament.

Our welfare state dedication, the high cost of interest on our immense consolidated national debt, our over-generous gifts, or 50-year-no-interest-loans of large amounts to foreign countries, even to those who are not friendly, or who are quite incapable of ever reciprocating, have increasingly siphoned away billions of Canadian dollars—dollars that were and are most needed here as productive investments to cut unemployment. Insane spending by all levels of government, which has increased again this year, is among the reasons leading us to require a full reconsideration and a serious analysis of our national economic policies.

There are other points. The open, free and easy free trade system in the name of world trade and commerce will gradually lead to the closing of more and more manufacturing industries in Canada which up to now have provided some 40 per cent of all Canadian employment, because the processing and even the buying of natural resources will, hereafter, be done outside Canada and sold to us, under these free trade arrangements, at a cost much lower than that at which we will be able to produce them here because of the high cost of labour through wages and fringe benefits. So as we continue to be uncompetitive we will have ever-increasing Canadian unemployment if we lack the courage to react and wake up to these facts and do something about them.

A sane revision of our trade practices and of our national economic policies is necessary and urgent. The one million unemployed Canadian voters have identified many of the weaknesses of our present national economic policies and they are not accepting them. And tomorrow, in the realization of what has happened or is happening, labour unions will condemn them and fight them, and our youth, whom we have been telling to continue their education so that they can obtain some employment, will bitterly fight and search vindication and revenge because of our unwilling betrayal.

I believe that a good and well-intentioned government, such as I believe this government to be, should establish a sort of council made up of experienced advisers, the best brains of labour, business, finance, industry, education and the leaders of provincial and federal governments, who together would undertake to review our Canadian economic policies in a manner that would lead us out of darkness and on to the road of more employment and greater individual and collective prosperity.

Senator Flynn: They should have started that a long time ago.

Senator Desruisseaux: I would not disagree with the Leader of the Opposition on that point, but these views are not easily shared. However, they will come to realize what they are doing. In my view those mainly responsible for the present situation are those who have been advising the government, the economists, the pseudo-economists who espouse the cause of free trade entirely and without reservation, and perhaps a few other interested parties.

● (1440)

Before closing my address, may I say that I endorse Senator Frith's suggestion that a Senate committee be established to study proposals for Senate reform. Such a committee should report its findings and its recommendations to the Senate and, through the Senate, to all Canadians.

Senator van Roggen: Senator Desruisseaux, I wonder if I might put a question to you. First of all, may I say I agree with much of what you have said in your speech, but, as I understood you, on two occasions you took exception to our support, with government assistance, of exporters and the development abroad of export facilities by means of Canadian government assistance. That subject has, of course, been in the press recently because of the Inco matter and the new plant being developed in Guatemala, and so on.

My question to you is this: Would we not be in danger of losing major Canadian technological advantage overseas if we were to cut off such assistance in the face of the fact that there is no way we can avoid the type of competition we will have from the Germans, the Japanese and the Americans and others, all of whom provide that type of assistance? Surely we, as one of the world's greatest trading nations per capita, must provide the same type of assistance in order to be competitive in those areas.

Senator Desruisseaux: I thank Senator van Roggen for his question. As I said just a moment ago, these questions are not easily agreed on. It is my belief that what we are now doing is preparing the road for the closing of so many manufacturing industries in Canada because we will not be able to face competition from the other countries which are now enlarging their exporting views. The problem used to be centred on textiles, and you have had my thoughts on that; but now we see the problem expanding into other fields of manufacturing.

If matters continue along these lines, the labour difficulties we are experiencing in Canada will only increase and there will be more unemployment. Ironically, while we are trying—and trying sometimes in the face of great difficulty—to increase our exports, we are actually losing out because of our efforts to better our situation. I believe in terms of Canada's independence in international trade that we are no longer free. We depend on others. Because I am worried and concerned about this, I say that we should have some kind of reciprocity in our dealings with other countries so that when we sell goods to another country we can expect that country to buy from us in the equivalent amounts of our sales. In that way at least we can increase our exports and increase our work here in Canada for Canadians.

It is good that we should aim at divorcing ourselves from some of the internal troubles occurring in other countries, but at the same time too few people fully realize the situation existing in Canada. I believe that our trade is not what it should be and that we should try to improve it. There should be a measure of compensation where necessary, and everything should be done within the guidelines. However, the subject is too complex to attempt a reply to the question. I intend to speak next week on the situation concerning Canada's secondary manufacturing industry, and I hope to provide a few statements of fact that will be helpful in explaining my views.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I am pleased to take part in the debate on the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, and I should like to follow tradition by first congratulating both Senator Frith, the mover of the motion, and Senator Marchand, the seconder.

I have just returned from spending one week at the United Nations in New York as parliamentary observer, and I must say that I am delighted to have had the experience. While there I was in constant contact with most of our officials at the Canadian Mission to the United Nations, and I can say with pride that Canada is very ably represented. Ambassador Barton is our permanent delegate at the United Nations. Each morning there were briefings on different topics in which the United Nations is involved.

The United Nations of today is very different from the United Nations of 1945. At that time there were 51 member states; today there are 149. The principal objectives then were the peace and security of the world and, while those objectives have not lessened, greater stress is placed today on a new world economic order. It is believed it will take approximately 20 years before that complex undertaking can be successfully concluded.

What impressed me most is the manner in which the business of the United Nations is carried on. The emphasis is on consultation and negotiation, and definitely away from confrontation. Of course, there are some exceptions in that area.

I could not have chosen a more interesting week to be there. The Security Council was in session, during which the situations existing in South Africa and Namibia were discussed; a special political committee dealt with a presentation from the International Air Line Pilots Association regarding terrorism in the sky; and the Palestinian question was discussed in the General Assembly, as well as the question of Israeli settlement of occupied territory.

Canada is held in high regard at the United Nations because of her sincere and positive efforts on behalf of the work of that international organization. I found that English-speaking and French-speaking countries look to Canada because of its bilingual policy, and believe we can understand them both. I recall a poster that was put out by the Commissioner of Official Languages showing that 33 countries speak English and 25 speak French, and stating that Canada enjoys the best of both worlds. Anyone who has any doubt as to the merit and value of bilingualism should pay a visit to the United Nations. Canada has certainly made a great contribution towards promoting understanding among the members of that organization.

● (1450)

Speaking of contributions, I would like to touch very briefly on the contribution that Canadians of Italian extraction have made in the development of this country. Some Canadians are under the mistaken impression that Italians have only just arrived here, but I would point out that they have participated in virtually every aspect of Canadian history from the discovery of America down to the present. Although the pattern of contribution has changed, until the late nineteenth century the Italians who served Canada were, in the main, highly skilled individuals—navigators, missionaries and soldiers. Large scale immigration to Canada did not commence until the 1880s, and the settlers then were mostly from southern Italy.

It was Giovanni Caboto, a citizen of Venice, who sailed the Matthew from Bristol, England, in May of 1497, and after 52 days at sea landed on the shore of what is now Cape Breton Island. He planted the royal flag, and that of Venice, and solemnly took possession of the island in the name of Henry VII.

Another great navigator was Giovanni da Verrazzano, who was in the service of the King of France. You will notice that Italians did not discriminate in those days. They worked for both the royal family of England and the royal family of France, the latter in the person of Francis I. Giovanni da Verrazzano sighted the coast of what is now known as South Carolina in 1524 and continued south to Florida. He then turned north and followed the coastline to Cape Breton, and provided the first conclusive evidence that Canada is joined to the rest of America. Da Verrazzano's explorations and reports clearly fixed the attention of France on North America. He convinced the French court that settlement was feasible, and further exploration desirable.

In 1642 there arrived Father Giuseppe Bressani, a Jesuit. At that time there were not more than 200 Europeans in all of Canada. He set out on an arduous and dangerous undertaking on behalf of the early French missionaries—the establishment and maintenance of a mission in Huronia, Ontario. During his eight years in New France, Father Bressani experienced much hardship and tragedy. He was captured by the Iroquois, was wounded and tortured but, by some miraculous means, survived. He returned to France and came back to Canada several times, but eventually the missionaries abandoned the mission and Father Bressani returned to Italy in 1650.

A great many Italians served in the French army attached to New France. The Marini family, of noble Genoese origin, served for several generations. Carlo Marini enrolled in the Carignan regiment and landed in New France in 1665. His son Paul received the title of Chevalier de St. Louis in 1743, and eventually became commander-in-chief of the French troops in the Ohio country. Giuseppe Marini, like his father and grandfather, served in the west and in Acadia. He was wounded at the battle of the Plains of Abraham, and returned to France after the fall of Quebec.

In 1678 we see a marine officer named Enrico Tonti as an assistant to de LaSalle. Tonti spent 25 years exploring the Mississippi Valley. Later, in 1703, Captain Tommaso Crisafi reached the height of his career when he was appointed governor of Trois Rivières. There are many others, such as Francesco Carlo Burlamacchi, known in French as Bourlamaque, who served as Montcalm's third in command and was promoted to brigadier-general. After the fall of New France, many Italians continued to come to Canada as soldiers of two foreign regiments, the de Meuron and de Watteville, which were sent to Canada during the war of 1812 with the United States. The de Meuron regiment included some 300 Italians, and the de Watteville an unknown but significant number. When the regiments were disbanded in 1816 most of the men chose to stay in Canada, settling around Drummondville, Quebec, and southern Ontario. Ketch Harbour in Nova Scotia was founded by a small group of Italians in the late eighteenth century. A retired British army captain, Filippo de Grassi, settled near Toronto. His family played a significant role in the Upper Canada rebellion of 1837.

Today there are approximately 800,000 law-abiding, honest and hard-working Canadians of Italian descent in Canada. They have settled in every province, including the Northwest and Yukon Territories, and are to be found in every field of endeavour.

By far the largest concentration of Italian-Canadians, many of whom are already of the first or second generation, is to be found in the Toronto area, where some very substantial community projects have been carried out, such as Villa Colombo, a senior citizens' home and cultural centre, which is the pride of the community; and the Friulano Club, which is both a recreational and cultural centre. There are many other entities such as the chorus of Santa Cecilia and that of Abruzzi; the York Italian band; C.O.S.T.I., a retraining centre for disabled workers; the National Congress of Italian-Canadians; the Dante Society; sports and educational associations; and others too numerous to be listed in other parts of Canada.

A year ago last May a fund-raising campaign was initiated to assist the earthquake victims of Friuli, northern Italy, where I was born. The sum of $4,200,000 was raised throughout Canada. The federal government donated $1 million, and the province of Ontario $500,000. A few other provinces also contributed lesser amounts, as did Metropolitan Toronto and the Borough of York. The balance was raised by private donations.

There was constituted a national ad hoc committee of 32 members, which acted on behalf of an umbrella organization known as the National Congress of Italian-Canadians. This committee perceived that the donors wanted the trustees of the fund to by-pass governments and agencies and to provide assistance directly to the earthquake victims. To this end a technical committee, with fewer members, was created, and it formulated a plan to build 181 anti-earthquake, permanent homes—92 in the town of Venzone, where the Canadian army established an open kitchen immediately after the earthquake, which served the immediate needs of the area; 59 in Forgaria; and 30 in Pinzano—as well as two senior citizens' homes, one containing 40 beds in the town of Bordano, and another in Taipana of 45 beds. In total the project will be able to accommodate 830 people of the 60,000 that were left homeless. It is, in the words of President Comelli, the President of the region, the largest single project being carried out in Friuli by a group of private individuals.

The ad hoc committee went to great lengths to carry out the project in the proper manner. It appointed the firm of Clarkson, Gordon & Co. as auditors, and formed a national committee of distinguished and reputable Canadians, some of whom are members of the Senate, to oversee it. Tenders were advertised for in both Italy and Canada. Unfortunately, no Canadian firm submitted any bids, but 18 Italian construction companies did. Their sealed tenders were opened in the presence of representatives of both the federal and provincial governments, the media, community leaders and members of the ad hoc committee. Three different construction firms were awarded the contracts, which are now under way and nearing completion.

● (1500)

There were two contractual arrangements signed in Udine on April 2, 1977—one with the construction companies and the other with the municipalities. The municipalities have to provide the construction sites and all the required services. The contracts also spell out the manner in which the houses are to be allocated.

Each allocations committee consists of five members: three from the local council—two from the administration and one from the opposition, because, as you know, in Italy they have party politics at the municipal level, and it was thought that by having both the administration and the opposition represented on these committees a balanced view would be obtained—and the other two appointed by the National Congress of Italian-Canadians. The recommendations of the committees are then to be submitted for approval to a meeting of the heads of families in the towns which are going to benefit from these homes, so that there will be no question of preference, favouritism, or nepotism. All precautions have been taken to ensure that the Friuli project is carried out in a convincingly proper manner. Not only Italian-Canadians, but all Canadians, should be proud of both the size and type of assistance they provided to the earthquake victims of that area.

Unfortunately, the Italian community is often the object of bad publicity and stereotyping. The action of a few often obscures the real contribution of many. The CBC program The Fifth Estate of October 4 last certainly contributed a great deal towards that end. I read recently the speech delivered by Mr. A. W. Johnson, President of the CBC, on October 7, 1977 to a Rotary Club of Toronto, and this is what he said:

[Senator Bosa.]

A new era of Canadianism for cultural understanding of ourselves is the basis of nationhood. Our television and radio programming must be central in providing this cultural understanding by Canadians on Canadianism.

That is our job—more crucial today than ever before.

I believe Mr. Johnson is sincere in what he says, except that he is not aware of the deep prejudice that lies in some parts of his bureaucratic machinery.

I do not monitor the CBC, but from personal experience I can quote the following examples. When Spiro Agnew resigned as Vice-President of the United States, Barbara Frum—a very able interviewer, and this is no reflection on her—interviewed a Washington journalist on the radio program As it Happens. During the interview there were some brief intervals during which the theme music from Zorba the Greek was played, and this connected Spiro's wrongdoing with the entire North American Greek community.

A similar thing happened on the same program when Mr. Elio Madonia and Mr. Lorenzo Duso were interviewed on their efforts to form an anti-defamation committee. The music played on that occasion was from The Godfather. In my view, this is just a perpetuation of stereotyping.

As I mentioned earlier, on the evening of October 4 last the CBC program The Fifth Estate produced a documentary which is a classic example of stereotyping and distorting something which is good and honest, and which leaves the viewer confused and perplexed. There has been some controversy—and I am sure honourable senators will have read about it in the press—concerning a financial transaction between the Italian Government and one Canadian construction company, namely, Atco, over the acquisition of prefabricated homes. The CBC chose that controversy; a scandal alleged to have happened in Sicily in 1968; mismanagement of funds raised in 14 countries to save the City of Venice; a negative report on international aid; our projects; and lumped them all together in one program. As a result of many inquiries, our committee is engaged in a campaign to explain that there is nothing wrong with the Friuli project.

When Mr. Ron Haggart, a senior producer of the CBC, was asked to explain the purpose of the program, he replied that it was to demonstrate the new attitude of people towards charity. It was to show that we no longer live in an age when the receiver of charity accepts what he is given, and is expected to be grateful and to keep quiet.

● (1510)

The program, according to Mr. Haggart, was intended to show that people will express their displeasure with charity, if that is what they feel. I am in total agreement with that concept, but why did the CBC not ask the people of Friuli how they felt about our project? Why did they ask Mrs. Claudia Persi-Haynes, who lives in Canada and who, according to Mr. Haggart, "performed services for the CBC," or Rocco Maragna, the architect and the only paid person from Canada, who gave his reports to the media before he gave them to his employers. He is no longer the committee's architect. I want to know if these two people have been paid by the CBC. I want to know if the CBC had arranged for these two people to go to Friuli, and if they have received any compensation.

Another example of prejudice is when Mr. Primo Di Luca, the technical co-ordinator of the project, was being interviewed and asked what he thought about organized crime. What did that question have to do with the earthquake project? Is that not prejudice?

I am sure Mr. Johnson will want to look into these matters, and assure us that he will do something about them. Canada is a multicultural country. In the words of Martin Luther King, everyone longs for "a feeling of somebodiness." The CBC could foster that feeling by representing the facts as they are.

Hon. Andrew Thompson: Honourable senators, I would like to congratulate Senator Bosa on his forthright speech.

He is probably aware that a number of very interested senators watched the development of the National Congress of Italian-Canadians. I remember three years ago when we had a meeting with Mr. Campeau of Montreal, the first president, and Mr. Delzotto of Toronto. They told us of the problem of organizing the Italian communities across Canada. They explained the challenge facing newcomers in getting their roots planted in this country, and their consequent absorption with economic problems. A characteristic which is common to Italians—as it is to many other people—is a strong sense of individuality. I know the senators who were present at that first meeting are delighted, and, indeed, not surprised, at the success of the campaign, because they recognized the verve and the vigour of those two men who spoke to them at that time.

I concur completely in the honourable senator's remarks concerning the media abuse the Italian-Canadian community across Canada has received, even in connection with many of its worthy drives. I have been at the Friuli Club, and I remember the start of this campaign. I saw the many volunteers spending days and nights in getting this project on the road. Frankly, the raising of almost $4.5 million was a magnificent effort. Then I read in the Globe and Mail an interview with one paid organizer. I know that there were very few paid workers, but that newspaper story unduly emphasized the trivial fact that that particular person had an expense account. It seemed to me that that unnecessary emphasis must have dismayed every volunteer who had been working so strenuously—and here I must mention that Senator Bosa and many of his colleagues have given freely of their own time in flying to Italy to see that what was needed to be done was done.

I am sure that all honourable senators are delighted that the National Congress of Italian-Canadians is going to counteract with a strong voice something that has been going on for too long in Canada—the stereotyping of national groups and, in particular, the Italian-Canadians. I represented a riding of Italian-Canadians for almost ten years. I saw what they achieved by hard work and talent, and I heard the malicious slurs that were heaped upon them because of their financial success. Suggestions of organized crime and everything else would be made about many of them. I hope that all of us will help at being watchdogs, not only with respect to the CBC but also with respect to the news media, and even those who use the immunity of a legislature or parliament to cast slurs, and who do not have the courage to step outside and voice those same defamations.

Honourable senators, I am sure we all congratulate the National Congress of Italian-Canadians and Senator Bosa, and wish them as much success in their further endeavours in Canada as they had in this great international project.

Hon. Edward M. Lawson: Honourable senators, I, too, would like to make a brief contribution to the debate on the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

I am pleased that the government plans to take some steps to deal with what I view as the most serious problem facing the country—that of unemployment. Even though millions of dollars have been set aside to deal with unemployment, the impact of that has almost been shot down the drain by the action of Inco in its handling of the particular problem respecting its employees and the large number of layoffs they are facing. If there was ever an example of how not to deal with your employees, and how not to improve labour-management relations, the action of Inco, in the way it handled that particular problem, is probably the best and the worst at the same time.

The government must recognize that unemployment across the country is perhaps the most serious problem facing us; that it is really a smouldering powder-keg. I, too, have experienced situations in which we had great difficulty in finding employees to go to jobs, and found that there are people who are not prepared to work. Our dispatchers have had to call 30 or 40 people to get one man to take a job that was available at good wages and good working conditions. But the present circumstances are that there are many thousands of Canadian workers who are out actively soliciting and seeking employment, and no jobs are available. We simply cannot minimize the seriousness of that.

Another comment I would like to make concerns the announcement by the government about the removal of controls. First, I want to say that there has been an unfortunate choice of date for the removal of controls, simply because of the unfairness of it. Had they selected a date like October 13, the people who were the first to be caught by the controls would be the first to be relieved, and vice versa, and the controls would have been applied fairly and equitably to everybody. The way that the government proposes to remove controls is most unfair, and there is resentment among fair-minded Canadian workers, who recognize unfairness and who resent it. I suggest that when the controls are finally off there will be an attempt by those workers who have been unfairly dealt with to make the necessary corrections, and economic conflict will follow.

There must be a positive side to the impact of controls, and perhaps it is best for me to describe it.

● (1520)

I have been doing a simple analysis, a review, of the lower number of man-days lost as a result of work stoppages in British Columbia and nationally, last year as against this year. In the first half of 1976 in British Columbia there were 446,487 man-days lost; in the first six months of this year that was reduced substantially to 70,739 man-days. These figures are handed out by Statistics Canada, or whoever is responsible; they put out the information, give us the numbers, but do not tell us what they mean. Applying the average wage of the average worker in British Columbia, the saving to the economy of British Columbia by keeping these people working, with no additional plant and no additional equipment—simply working at the job instead of being off the job—is approximately $24 million.

Nationally, the reduction in man-days this year over last year is approximately four million. This, transmitted into dollars, is more money in the economy—somewhere between $150 million and $200 million, depending whose economist you use. More money has been kept in the economy than the whole of what the government is proposing to use to deal with unemployment or to provide additional job opportunities.

I think this is simply due to a combination of things. The Anti-Inflation Board and the controls have to assume some credit for creating a situation which resulted in a lesser number man-days lost, because the people involved from the union side, the employees, and the employers knew there were upper limits and there was no point in striking beyond that because the controls were there. There was also a genuine concern by the employees, the unions and the companies to improve their labour-management relations, and the net result was a savings to the economy of millions and millions of dollars.

The government is to be congratulated for their program of expending millions of dollars to assist labour organizations to improve education, to improve understanding, to teach economics and so on. They are to be congratulated, because if we can simply continue the practice of reducing lost man-days by keeping people at work in the present plants, with the equipment and so on that they are operating with now, it is surely a better investment than even creating new plants and new equipment, having regard to all the funds that we would have to make available to assist that. So the government is to be congratulated there.

Those are some of the positive things about the controls program. On the negative side there are some very serious ramifications. There are too many examples of where the Anti-Inflation Board has acted unfairly and arrogantly, and many unions have suffered as a result of it. In Newfoundland, for example, one local virtually went bankrupt in filing its appeal to restore what it had properly and fairly negotiated, and what was ultimately granted when it was appealed. There are other examples where the Anti-Inflation Board, because of the people on it having no understanding of the industries involved, has destroyed long-standing historical relationships, and in my judgment there will be many attempts to correct those inequities when the controls come off.

[Senator Lawson.]

Probably the worst example, which surprisingly did not involve a trade union, has been the Anti-Inflation Board's treatment of a company called Canadian Freightways in Alberta. Not many years ago this was a bankrupt company. It had a new management which decided that they should try some of the newer methods of working with their employees—running a good tough operation, discouraging absenteeism, putting in the kind of welfare programs that would assist them from a medical point of view, putting in a safety program to eliminate a shutdown because of accidents and so on—doing all the things you would expect a good company with a good labour-management relationships to do. What was contemplated, as I understood it and as they understood it, by the government in putting in the controls program was increased productivity and the elimination of waste. The net result was that they made a profit of $2.3 million, but the Anti-Inflation Board said, "No, that is an excess profit and you must dispose of it."

Those of you who understand the trucking industry will know that it is regulated, and a rate increase applies to everybody. The first thing they said to the company was, "Cut your rates." The response of the company was, "If we cut the rates we are going to increase our volume of business, and bankrupt all the competition running with us under the same tariff."

The Anti-Inflation Board then said, "Perhaps that is not such a good idea. Then what you do is give the customers you haul freight for one free day a week"—a Friday surprise sale. During that period they made 960,000 deliveries for 6,000 different shippers, and it is utter economic madness to propose that they have a one-day surprise sale. The net result of that would be again to increase their volume of business, and unfairly distribute the money.

The company kept saying throughout, "All we want to do is carry out what we understood the program said in the first place. We would like to build a new plant in Edmonton. We want to build a new warehouse in Prince George. We want to buy some additional trucks, and we want to put some people to work." The AIB said, "None of that kind of nonsense. This is what you must do." Talk about bureaucratic madness.

The company then appealed, and made a rather unusual request. They said, "We want representatives of our employees to come with us." The Anti-Inflation Board said, "No, we can't have that. They will have access to your private financial information." The company replied, "They have it now. This is the kind of company we operate. We share information with our employees. They know; they are concerned." However, the board said no. Finally, they did agree to allow the union representatives, representing the employees, to be in attendance.

The meeting took place in Victoria and I had the privilege of attending. I heard the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board say, "What you have to understand is that increased productivity by the employees, people productivity, doesn't count under the Anti-Inflation Board program. If it is increased productivity as a result of plant or equipment, that is all right; but not by people, not by workers." I asked the chairman, "Have you made this as a public statement? Is this public policy? I have discussed this with the Minister of Labour, and I have heard him making speeches, as I have been making speeches, across the country and saying to employees, 'What is necessary is to work harder, produce more, and eliminate waste', and now you tell us it does not count." People productivity doesn't count under the Anti-Inflation Board.

The matter was then pursued further with the Minister of Finance, the Honourable Donald Macdonald, who agreed that the excess profit had not been properly calculated, and directed that it be re-calculated under the other method. The result was that it was substantially reduced from $2.3 million to approximately $0.5 million. That appeared to be the way the matter was going to be resolved, but the then Minister of Finance resigned. The very next day, or certainly within 48 hours, the company received a directive from the Anti-Inflation Board that the deal that had been arranged through the former Minister of Finance was off, and telling them what they must do.

That is the current state of that particular situation, and I want to draw it to the attention of the Leader of the Government, who I hope will draw it to the attention of the new Minister of Finance. I certainly shall give him a summary in writing. I can refer him to the September issue of Motor Truck magazine, which describes the whole issue in detail.

Sure, the company can eliminate this profit. They can go back to the bad old days of having work stoppages, of having a lot of wasted time through absenteeism, and of having a lot of accidents. They can go back to doing all the things that would reduce the company to a non-profit-making company, and a situation in which they certainly don't build new equipment, don't buy any new trucks, and don't put people to work. This is the present attitude of the Anti-Inflation Board. It is probably a classic and the worst example of the arrogance presently shown by the Anti-Inflation Board.

As I said at the outset, I want to say some positive things about the Anti-Inflation Board and what they have accomplished. They did give reasons so that there could be appeals, but because there have been successful appeals taken against their decisions they now won't give any reasons. In one case, when we said we wanted to appeal, they said, "That is a waste of the taxpayers' money." I do not believe that we should take from any bureaucratic agency the statement that we are wasting the taxpayers' money when we are simply exercising our legal right to appeal, under the procedure contemplated by the legislation, from the many unfair decisions that have been made by that tribunal.

● (1530)

They simply say, "Well, if you are going to appeal, it will be 40 weeks before you get a decision." How do you like that? These are the types of attitudes that are being demonstrated, and I bring them to the attention of the government by outlining this particular example, this terrible example of what is happening to what I consider to be a model company. Because of its good labour-management relations, its relationship with its employees, its responsibility in the area of safety, the work place, equipment and efficiency, its relations with other carriers and its concern for its role as a good corporate citizen, it is being subjected to this type of treatment.

It is, perhaps, unusual for someone with a labour background to be speaking on behalf of a company, and pointing out the unfair treatment it is receiving. However, this case simply cries out for something to be done about it. I certainly urge the government, when a new monitoring agency is considered for the period after the controls come off, not to make the mistake of transferring the people who are caught up in the bureaucracy of the present situation. The government should have the good judgment to go out and select people from industry and labour who are practitioners, who know what it is like out there in the field to run a company or a union, and who make a living and work and produce. They must get people who have some understanding and some involvement.

One point I wish to make in conclusion is that everyone is looking for a magic formula, and I do not believe there is any magic formula. Everyone is looking to the government to wave a magic wand and solve all the problems, or get someone to solve them, but it will not work that way. In my opinion, what we really need is a combination of confidence and commitment. It is hard to have confidence in the face of all the things that are going on, but I think this is the time we need it most. We must have confidence in the country and the economy, and we must have commitment.

I say to all the employees to whom I am able to speak that they must have individual commitment to do just a little better job, and produce a little more. We need their commitment to their fellow workers in the areas of eliminating waste, trying to do better jobs and producing better quality products, because we are competing domestically and in world markets. We must have commitment from labour and management to eliminate waste, and to continue to reduce those lost days resulting from strikes and lockouts. There should be commitment from management to provide safer and better work places. Then, we must all acknowledge that beyond our own selfish interests we have a greater commitment to the community as a whole, to the economy and to the country we live in.

On motion of Senator Langlois, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, November 3, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I should like you to welcome some very distinguished guests and colleagues from the Caribbean and from the provinces of Canada who are attending this week the Fourth Canadian Regional Parliamentary Seminar in Ottawa.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of a Report to the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency, dated July, 1977, entitled "1977 Update of the Provincial Models of the Farm-Gate Cost of Egg Production for Medium Size Egg Producers," issued by the Minister of Agriculture.

Report of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act (Part II, Labour Unions) for the fiscal periods ended in 1975, pursuant to section 18(1) of the said Act, Chapter C-31, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of operations under the Export and Import Permits Act for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 26 of the said Act, Chapter E-17, R.S.C. 1970.

Report on the administration of the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 17 of the said Act, Chapter I-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Report of the National Advisory Council on Voluntary Action to the Government of Canada entitled "People in Action", dated September 1977, issued by the Secretary of State of Canada.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE EXPENSES TABLED

Senator Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, which was empowered to incur special expenses in connection with the examination of documents, bills and other matters referred to it, in advance of such matters coming before the Senate, and the examination of such legislation as was referred to it, tabled, pursuant to rule 84, the expenses incurred by the committee during the Second Session of the Thirtieth Parliament.

NATIONAL FINANCE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE EXPENSES TABLED

Senator Everett, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, which was empowered by the Senate on October 28, 1976 to incur special expenses for the purpose of its examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as might be referred to it, tabled, pursuant to rule 84, the expenses incurred by the committee during the Second Session of the Thirtieth Parliament.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

REPORT OF COMMITTEE EXPENSES TABLED

Senator van Roggen, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, which was authorized by the Senate on October 27, 1976 to examine and report upon Canadian relations with the United States, tabled, pursuant to rule 84, the expenses incurred by the committee in connection with the said examination during the Second Session of the Thirtieth Parliament.

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE EXPENSES TABLED

Senator Bonnell, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, which was authorized by the Senate on March 23, 1977 to inquire into and report upon such experiences in prenatal life and early childhood as may cause personality disorders or criminal behaviour in later life, tabled, pursuant to rule 84, the expenses incurred by the committee in connection with the said examination during the Second Session of the Thirtieth Parliament.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, November 8, 1977, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

● (1410)

Honourable senators, as is customary, before the question is put, I should like to give a brief rundown on the business that will be before the Senate in the coming week.

On Tuesday evening and Wednesday afternoon we shall continue with the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. A number of senators have indicated an intention to take part in the debate on those days, Wednesday being the last day that this matter will be debated.

It is expected that Bill C-3, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada, will be passed by the other place today. In that event we shall have it before us next week. As honourable senators will recall, Bill C-3 had reached the report stage at prorogation of the last session. It was introduced de novo at the beginning of this session and immediately advanced to the report stage.

The several standing committees of the Senate have now held their organization meetings. The Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee met this morning to commence its advance study of the budget resolutions respecting income tax, and will continue that study on Wednesday next. It is expected that other committees will be authorized today to continue with the studies in which they were engaged last session. I am not yet in a position to inform the Senate when those committees will commence hearings.

The two bills to be introduced in the Senate, which I mentioned on Thursday last, should be ready for introduction on Tuesday evening.

Motion agreed to.

THE ESTIMATES

NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDIES

Senator Everett, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures proposed by the estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ended the 31st March 1977, tabled in the Senate on 19th February 1976; and

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject in the preceding session be referred to the committee.

Motion agreed to.

Senator Everett, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures proposed by the estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending the 31st March 1978, tabled in the Senate on 17th February 1977.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL FINANCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO ENGAGE SERVICES

Senator Everett, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purposes of its examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as may be referred to it; and

That the committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDY

Senator van Roggen, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to examine and report upon Canadian relations with the United States;

That the committee be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be required for the purpose of the said examination, at such rates of remuneration and reimbursement as the committee may determine, and to compensate witnesses by reimbursement of travelling and living expenses, if required, in such amount as the committee may determine;

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject in the three preceding sessions be referred to the committee; and

That the committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

CHILDHOOD EXPERIENCES AS CAUSES OF CRIMINAL BEHAVIOUR

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDY

Senator Bonnell, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science be authorized to inquire into and report upon such experiences in prenatal life and early childhood as may cause personality disorders or criminal behaviour in later life and to consider and recommend such remedial and preventative measures relating thereto as may be reasonably expected to lead to a reduction in the incidence of crime and violence in society;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, technical and clerical personnel as may be required for the purpose of the inquiry;

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject in the preceding session be referred to the committee; and

That the committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

VISIT OF PRIME MINISTER OF QUEBEC TO FRANCE—QUESTION

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, as a Canadian and especially as a French-speaking Quebecer, even though my name is Flynn—and in view of the reception given Mr. Lévesque by the French government which, both by deeds and words, endorses and supports Mr. Lévesque's independentist stand and the fact that most Quebecers—I am not talking about the rest of Canada—disagree with that stand, is it the intention of the government to send a note to the French ambassador to Canada to protest, not only on behalf of Canada but also on behalf of the majority of French-speaking Quebecers, against such interference in not only the domestic affairs of our country, Canada, but also in the domestic affairs of Quebec?

Senator Perrault: The senator's question is very important.

[English]

The visit of the Prime Minister of Quebec to France and statements attributed to him and representatives of the Government of France are of substantial interest not only to the Government of Canada but to all Canadians. I must advise honourable senators that the full texts of some of the statements have not yet been received in Canada. Those that are available are under detailed scrutiny today, but because that study has not been completed I am not in a position to make a full statement on this important matter now. When the study has been completed, I shall make a statement on behalf of the government in this chamber. Possibly, that will be early next week.

● (1420)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

LEGISLATION—QUESTION

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government. Can he give us an idea of what we might expect to receive in the way of legislation in this session, in addition to the measures Senator Langlois has already mentioned? I ask this question so that members of the Senate may prepare for debate on the matters to come before them.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a list of legislative priorities has been developed by the government for the current session. However, in view of the fact that most of these proposed measures have yet to be introduced in the other place—and, indeed, information is not publicly available on the subject matter of most of these proposed bills—it is not possible for me to provide the house with that information at this time. The schedule of proposed legislation is a rather full one, and I can go only to that point in attempting to answer the honourable senator's question.

[Senator Bonnell.]

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, my reason for asking that question is that I was wondering, if bills are to be initiated in the Senate, whether we might be given some idea of the subject matter of those bills, and thus be more able to participate in the debates in a fruitful and positive manner.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is the intention of the government to initiate a number of bills in the Senate. I would hope that there will be a greater number of bills initiated in this place than there were during the Second Session of this Parliament. As honourable senators will recall, in the first session of this Parliament some 30 bills originated in the Senate, which I believe was to the benefit of the entire parliamentary system. Last year there were fewer bills introduced here, and there was a good deal of frustration generally because of the slow progress of legislation through Parliament. I have taken a number of recent initiatives to ensure, hopefully, that a greater number of government bills will originate in this chamber in the next few weeks.

ALASKA HIGHWAY PIPELINE

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES—QUESTION

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government with respect to what appears to be a disagreement between the United States Senate and certain bodies in Canada over procurement and tendering in connection with the AlCan pipeline. My question is:

(1) Is a negotiating team now at work attempting to clear up this disagreement?

(2) Will the result of the negotiations be reflected in the legislation to be presented to Parliament when ratification is requested by the government?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I must take that question as notice. I understand that there was some information in the media this morning with respect to the question asked by the honourable senator, but I have no detailed information available at this time.

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

STATUS OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—QUESTION

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government whether he can inform us as to the current status of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the National Capital Region?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, at this moment we are awaiting the arrival of certain information regarding the matter from the minister responsible for the National Capital Commission and its work. I had hoped that we would have had that information by this week. Indeed, it may arrive later this afternoon, and if it does I will seek leave to provide it to the house.

● (1430)

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of Her Majesty the Queen's Speech at the opening of the Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament, and the motion of Senator Frith, seconded by Senator Marchand, for an Address in reply thereto.

[Translation]

Hon. Léopold Langlois: At the very beginning of my remarks, honourable senators, I want to reiterate to Her Majesty the Queen our feelings of deep and sincere gratitude for doing us the great honour of opening the third session of the thirtieth Parliament.

There is, in fact, nothing I could add just now to the feelings we conveyed to her when I moved, seconded by Senator Jacques Flynn, P.C., the following motion:

TO HER MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY
ELIZABETH THE SECOND,

By the Grace of God of the United Kingdom, Canada and Her other Realms and Territories Queen, Head of the Commonwealth, Defender of the Faith:

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN:

We, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada, in Parliament assembled, humbly wish to convey to Your Majesty the loyalty, affection and deepest respect of this House and of all Canadians, our happiness in welcoming Your Majesty and His Royal Highness the Prince Philip to Canada during Your Majesty's Silver Jubilee, and our gratitude to Your Majesty for graciously opening the Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament.

I am also happy to join with my honourable friends in the Senate in congratulating The Honourable Speaker for the way she has discharged her important responsibilities and in expressing once again our feelings of gratitude and admiration.

I have been greatly impressed by the speeches delivered by the mover and seconder of the Address in reply to the speech from the Throne. I noted their practical suggestions, to which we should address our best attention.

I am particularly interested in the suggestions made by Honourable Senator Frith on Senate reform. He will surely let me suggest a slight amendment to his proposal to appoint a special committee to study the reform of our Chamber.

Indeed, I do not believe it is either practical or possible, due to the great number of committees now in operation in the Senate, to add a special committee for that purpose. Rather, if the Senate were to conclude that such a study was necessary, I would suggest that it be conducted by the Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

I am especially concerned with Senator Frith's proposition, because I took an active part, in 1973, in the debate on the motion by Senator Croll drawing the attention of the Senate to the urgent need, in the public's view, for immediate reform of the Senate. That debate was most interesting and constructive. I hope, honourable senators, that you will allow me to put on the official record of the Senate a few of the suggestions I made on that occasion.

If I may, I would refer you to the Debates of the Senate of June 19, 1973, pages 748 and 749, where I said the following, and I quote:

In concluding, honourable senators—I have already spoken too long—I submit that it is rather the responsibility of this house to initiate its own reform, by adjusting better to the new circumstances under which it must operate, to the changing needs resulting from our rapidly expanding country, as well as to the vocation it has assumed both at the national and international level.

This reform from inside can be carried out right now or gradually, smoothly and without confrontation, through the improvement of our ways and means, as well as the addition of new activities coming under the domain of the Senate within the Canadian parliamentary system.

We might easily "de proprio motu" initiate studies on new formulas, whether in the social, economic, human or political fields, so as to elaborate original solutions to the problems which the various areas of our country and the various classes of our society have to face.

I think that this chamber can also greatly contribute to a climate of understanding and co-operation between our levels of government in the field of federal-provincial relations, while maintaining, through our studies and activities, public awareness of the need for a truly nationwide dialogue.

Concerning some of the other reform objectives which can be attained from the outside, such as improving the representation of ethnic groups and political parties in the Senate, they can also be achieved without friction and debates of a partisan nature, and without acrimony, simply by way of a statement of policy on the part of the government in office to the effect that henceforth the Prime Minister of Canada will consult, for instance, either the provincial Premiers, or the Leader of the Official Opposition in the house of Commons, or for that matter organizations representing ethnic groups, before recommending to the Governor General the appointment of a certain percentage of nominees to the Canadian Senate.

I had added previously that in my view at least one third of this house should belong to opposition parties at any given time. I did not change my mind on that matter. I would like a Senate committee to re-examine these proposals which are, in my view, practical and can easily be implemented.

I quote further:

Such a method of reforming the Senate along those lines could be adopted without the Prime Minister of Canada having to abdicate for evermore in any way his unquestionable right of recommending appointments to the Senate to the Governor General, just as the Minister of Justice, for instance, does not abdicate his ministerial duties when he consults either judges or lawyers before appointing new judges.

Once this new appointment policy for Senate members has been consecrated by time and constant usage, it would become an intrinsic part of our Canadian parliamentary system.

It has often been said that the best constitutions were never written; however, nothing will prevent a government, if it so wishes, to incorporate this new policy in the text of the Canadian Constitution itself and to add, if the political situation at the time makes it possible, other Senate reform objectives which require one or several amendments to the Constitution.

I wanted to put on record those suggestions I made in 1973 because, as I said earlier, I hope they are worth mentioning again as I wish to emphasize the need for the present government to carry out the reform of the Senate of Canada immediately.

Honourable senators, the Speech from the Throne deals with several issues, which the Parliament of Canada and the whole country will have to study in the immediate future, and particularly issues related to the economy and national unity.

I do not intend to deal today with the problems which affect the Canadian economy at the present time. I consider that the Leader of the Government has delivered a masterly speech on this question to which I could hardly add. Furthermore, I know that I shall have other opportunities to deal with our economic and financial problems during the present session, particularly when I am called upon to put forward various appropriation bills in this house.

Therefore, today I shall deal exclusively with the problem of national unity, casting aside all bitterness and partisanship. I firmly believe that national unity transcends all other matters and should be approached with serenity, in an atmosphere of mutual understanding and respect for others' views. The future of our country is at stake. That is why we cannot risk in the slightest way to jeopardize the best possible solution which can be found to that serious national problem.

The November 15, 1976 election of a government whose main objective is the separation of Quebec from the rest of Canada has certainly marked a major step in the political evolution of our country. There is no need to recall that that government got elected after having covered up, so to speak, that objective and setting as their first task the providing of a good provincial government for Quebec.

[Senator Langlois.]

However it seems that the Parti Québécois is again resorting to those tactics to get a favourable vote on their referendum, or plebiscite, on the independence or separation of Quebec. Those two terms, in my opinion, reflect the same line of thinking or the same objective in the point of view of the present Quebec government.

Our attention has again been drawn to the possibility of their covering up and confusing, to get a favourable vote for independence. I refer to the statement made by the PQ member of the National Assembly for Vanier, the son of the late Jean-Jacques Bertrand, a former premier of Quebec. It is to be noted that the member for Vanier is also a member of the parliamentary committee on the referendum on the future of Quebec, and I am quoting his statement as reported by the Montreal Gazette of October 31 last, which statement has yet to be contradicted by any other member of the Parti Québécois. I quote what the Gazette said on this subject on October 31 last:

[English]

"Separatism and independence" are terms that should be banned from the Parti Québécois government's vocabulary, a PQ backbencher said on the weekend.

Jean-François Bertrand said the government's objective is not to separate Quebec from Canada, but to assure the province of sovereignty in an economic association with the rest of the country.

[Translation]

It is interesting to read the statement of MNA member Bertrand and compare it with what Mr. Lévesque himself said when he was interviewed by Mr. Keith Spicer. During that interview, Mr. Lévesque claimed, to our astonishment, that he was unable to define clearly and specifically what type of association he has in mind for Quebec with the rest of Canada, that he was unable to do so because he had not had enough time to study the problem in depth. Honourable senators, it is inconceivable that a man as intelligent as Mr. Lévesque should think that he can continue to mislead Quebec so drastically without simultaneously spreading confusion first and then suspicion. The Lévesque-Spicer interview, to which I have just referred, was reported in full in the Montreal Gazette for Friday, October 26, 1977. I shall quote some of the answers Mr. Lévesque gave Mr. Spicer, leaving it to you, honourable senators, to decide whether Mr. Lévesque can really reconcile what he says with the propaganda his people are now spreading with a view to giving Quebecers the impression that they are no longer thinking in terms of independence or separation for Quebec, but merely and simply of an association from which everyone might stand to benefit.

Here, then, are some quotations from the Spicer-Lévesque interview. First, the Gazette quotes Mr. Lévesque as saying:

● (1440)

[English]

I think November 15, 1976, was really what you might term "rising expectations."

Expectations of a society modernizing and discovering itself at the same time. It was a threshold we crossed. That threshold brings us closer, I think, to independence.

[Translation]

Further on Mr. Lévesque added, describing that proposed association as a working hypothesis or the second part of his option—and I also quote, as reported in the Gazette of October 26, the same issue from which I took the first quotation:

[English]

For my part, I consider that it's a very fine formula of our times which started with the Belgo-Luxembourg-Netherlands grouping (later Benelux) which became the Europe of the Nine. The Scandinavian experiment too.

[Translation]

In my opinion, that last reference of Mr. Lévesque relates to the concept of independence and not solely to that of some kind of association. Let us see now what Mr. Lévesque thinks of a so-called third option and the possibility of negotiating such an option before the referendum on independence.

Again I quote the same newspaper of the same date, that is October 26, 1977.

[English]

So we prepared an option we're going to defend, which we have been defending for 10 years, which we're going to defend right up to a referendum. Then we'll see.

Meanwhile I hear others who say—and (our option) has at least done this much good—"Well now, we'd better hurry up to find a third option," a third way somewhere between ours and the status quo. Mr. Trudeau even said at one point that we'd have to go back to square one, "zero base" as in Washington.

Well, it's fine with me if others come up with options. We're not stupid, we'll look at them.

I want you to note this:

But I believe in advance that these options will not answer the need to feel in Quebec, that is, that federalism is a straitjacket for the society which Quebec has become and it's going to get more so.

[Translation]

Then Mr. Spicer asked Mr. Lévesque what he thought of the project of the Canada West Foundation, namely, a Canada with five parts, the negotiation of a new Confederation with the five main areas of the country. It should be noted that Mr. Lévesque made a half-affirmative answer, under the reserve that Quebec should remain a different and completely autonomous entity.

Again I quote what he said, as reported in the October 26, 1977 issue of the Gazette:

[English]

I think it's not a crazy idea at all as a rearrangement.

It could, in many ways, make sense. It would give a better base for regional power in the legitimate sense of the word to exercise itself, and it would bring a rearrangement much more attuned to regional aspirations and needs, both at Senate level and at Commons level.

The only basic difference with our own idea, and I have to underline it, is that joining such a group I think would be very interesting for Quebec—but (in the form of) a different entity which has its own self-government.

● (1450)

[Translation]

Then Mr. Spicer asked Mr. Lévesque:

[English]

SPICER: As an independent state in the international sense?

LÉVESQUE: Which would join the kind of tier like that in a new association which I think would be a lot better balanced, but as an independent state with its full powers, with its full tax base and with no federal representation—

[Translation]

In the light of those verbatim quotations by Mr. Lévesque, it is clear that the only possibility of an association with the Quebec he has in mind would be on the basis of a treaty between fully autonomous and independent countries. His proposal, in my book, only spells the destruction of Canada as we know it today, being replaced by a group of independent states which would merely be related by economic agreements or treaties.

I felt it would be advisable to put on the record of this house what Mr. Lévesque said, and his words I did not dare translate for fear of misinterpreting him, even though I do not know whether the interview was conducted in English or in French.

Senator Flynn: He is good in English. He is even pretty good in English.

Senator Langlois: Even if it had been conducted in French, I would not have stood the double risk of a second translation of a text which had already been translated.

However, I know Mr. Lévesque well enough—we come from the same part of Quebec—I know his vernacular and I recognize him in the excerpts I have just quoted. I am therefore under the impression that the interview was conducted in English.

It is important to note that in his proposed association Mr. Lévesque is dead set against the idea of a common state, a national state, therefore the principle of Canada as we know it, and he would not want that state to continue in a Canada minus Quebec.

Mr. Lévesque has been consistent in his opinion. Did he not, in the aftermath of November 15, 1976, tell the New York Economic Club that independence was irreversible and unavoidable? That first public statement was followed by several others during which Mr. Lévesque clearly said that he would under no circumstances negotiate with Canada as we know it today, simply because he was fed up with those ten-against-one federal-provincial conferences.

In the circumstances, we must conclude that Mr. Lévesque first wants to separate and then negotiate his proposed association with the status of an independent and autonomous head of state negotiating with another or other also autonomous and independent head or heads of state. Indeed, in his interview with Mr. Spicer, Mr. Lévesque stated that the staying power of the rest of Canada after separation would depend on the will of the other areas of Canada to stay together within a Canadian state, as I suggested earlier, without Quebec.

Indeed, yesterday in his speech in Paris Mr. Lévesque I think continued, as do his propagandists here, to spread confusion by always talking about a strictly economic association, proposing negotiations on an equal footing while at the same time inserting in his speech the word "Confederation". He even managed in his manoeuvring yesterday to confuse the Radio-Canada analysts brought together to comment on his speech; they could not explain that reference even though those three analysts included a member of the executive of the Parti Québécois, Mr. Harvey.

Honourable senators, we should not be surprised if the PQ maneuver creates a situation voluntarily made ambiguous for the purpose of trying once again to filch a favourable vote from the people of Quebec as they did to gain power in November 1976. So it is up to us to alert the people of Quebec and Canada, even some of our politicians who in that confusion are desperately trying to find solutions to a problem they know little or nothing about. This explains why we receive so many contradictory solutions from all sides.

The same thing goes for those who again yesterday were shouting in distress: "What does Quebec want?". It is certainly difficult for us from Quebec to understand today that a person who just yesterday was asking what does Quebec want should now propose with disconcerting assurance all sorts of solutions, going as far as denouncing those responsible for a situation which just recently they did not know anything about.

In that impossible situation it is important to upset those content mortals in their comfortable possession of an innate and even spontaneous knowledge. This results in this extraordinary inflow of magic solutions, in an even more confused climate than the one the Parti Québécois wanted to create at the outset.

What is wrong in Quebec now, and I would even add in Canada, is that we have too many nation builders, too many constitution makers to allow the voters of this country to opt for a clear and specific solution to this problem of national unity.

I think it is high time for every one of us to help clean up this climate of confusion and consolidate our positions by a common expression of solutions that could in our opinion be beneficial to every region of this country, and it is important for that purpose to have unanimity among the political parties in this house, as well as in the other place, and in all provincial legislatures in Canada.

[Senator Langlois.]

However, I would not for a moment consider suggesting that we stop any discussion on national unity. Quite the contrary, I want to encourage a healthy convergent discussion toward a consensus for the preservation of this country we love so much and we all want to see grow in unity and prosperity.

What I am asking for as forcefully as I can is an end to that divergence on the means to be taken, coming from people in authority to whom the people of Canada will have to turn tomorrow for advice on the answer to give in a plebiscite or a referendum, whatever the origin or the purpose. Honourable senators, it is also important that an end be put to those criticisms made by politicians from coast to coast who day after day keep blaming our confederative system for all the economic problems afflicting their province or their area, as if they were the only ones to suffer from such evils, at a time when the world economy as a whole is in bad shape, and as if only a change in the political system of Canada could magically rid them of their present problems.

This type of mentality has been so spread out by politicians across this country that a few days ago I noticed in a newspaper the testimony given by a Newfoundlander before the Pepin-Robarts task force. He asked in all honesty to what extent the economic situation of his province would have deteriorated today had Newfoundland joined Canada in 1867 instead of 1948.

• (1500)

No need then to stress the fact that Canadian opinion is seriously affected and damaged by the state of confusion brought about by these internal bickerings coming from every part of this country.

Another aspect of this debate, which also seems to me badly engaged, stems from this kind of attitude too often adopted which consists of trying to persuade the Quebec separatists to give up their independentist option either in favour of the status quo or a third option. In my opinion it would be childish to think that Mr. Lévesque is prepared to put aside his proposed referendum and to accept instead the status quo or a third option endorsed by the rest of Canada. Besides, as I have already mentioned, it seems to me that most Canadians do not want to retain the status quo. On the other hand, Mr. Lévesque himself rejects without hesitation the possibility of negotiation before that referendum, insisting that he does not want to negotiate in a one-against-ten type of position.

It also happens, and quite unfortunately too often, that the supporters of the position which I have just described are tempted to try to win support for their solution by raising arguments based on what has quite rightly been called economic terrorism. One must not believe that Quebec can be induced to see things the way we want by the fear of economic reprisals or by dark predictions, whatever they might be.

In my opinion, it is unthinkable and senseless to believe that you can get Quebec to do the things you want by using fear. Besides, those negative arguments have no weight in any case and we will convince Quebec to espouse our position only with positive arguments, clearly establishing that the solution which we are putting forth is as good for them as it is for the rest of the country.

Finally, I urge those Canadians wishing to participate in the debate and negotiations regarding this great national issue to avoid politicizing the debate. The present situation is tense and confused enough without having to add additional political or partisan considerations to it, because they would be likely to ruin whatever chances we have to reach a national consensus on the main aspects of the issues at stake.

Honourable senators, I will conclude by saying that the future of Canada demands from us that we invite all our fellow citizens to consider the present situation in a climate characterized by peace of minds and hearts.

Senator Denis: Would the honourable senator allow a question?

Senator Langlois: Certainly.

Senator Denis: If I understand well, your contention is that independence is a prerequisite for association. Once independence is gained, the independent government would associate. Well, as you know, five provinces have already turned a deaf ear to any offer of association with the Quebec government. How does the honourable senator explain the Quebec government's determination to pursue that kind of association when five major provinces, the four Western provinces and Ontario, have stated they would not have any part in it?

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I prefer the last sentence in my colleague's question, as I was going to take exception to his preamble blaming me for that association concept, whereas in fact I have taken some thirty minutes to stress the exact opposite. The P.Q. government's policy to try and enter into an association after divorcing from the rest of Canada, is in my view a sheer fallacy, and Mr. Lévesque is day-dreaming, to use one of his favourite phrases, if he believes he can destroy Canada and rebuild it afterwards. He thinks he can raise it from the dead in even less than three days, rebuilding it, as it were, into a sovereign state associated with the rest of Canada. As my colleague has already pointed out, a number of Canadian provinces, through their premiers, have clearly precluded any form of economic association between a separated Quebec and what would then be left of Canada. I also think that such a position by the Parti Québécois is sheer Utopia.

[English]

On motion of Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 8, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 8, 1977

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

AIR CANADA BILL, 1977

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-3, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada.

Bill read first time.

Senator Perrault moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA BUSINESS CORPORATIONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Senator Perrault presented Bill S-2, to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act.

Bill read first time.

Senator Perrault moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Board of Trustees of the Queen Elizabeth II Canadian Fund to Aid in Research on the Diseases of Children, including the Auditor General's Report on the financial statements of the Board, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 15 of the Queen Elizabeth II Canadian Research Fund Act, Chapter Q-1, R.S.C., 1970.

Statement of all bonds registered at the office of the Registrar General of Canada for the period October 13, 1976 to October 17, 1977, pursuant to section 32 of the Public Officers Act, Chapter P-30, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada, Volume II, Annual Statements of Property and Casualty Insurance Companies, for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 8 of the Department of Insurance Act, Chapter I-17, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of financial statement on the operation and maintenance of the Great Slave Lake Railway for the year ended December 31, 1976, together with a statement showing the net capital investment as at December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 9, Chapter 56, Statutes of Canada, 1960-61.

Report of the Department of Transport containing a Statement of Wharf Revenue Receipts and a Statement of Harbour Dues for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 14 of the Government Harbours and Piers Act, Chapter G-9, R.S.C., 1970.

Reports on operations under the Regional Development Incentives Act for the months of February, March, April, May and June, 1977, pursuant to section 16 of the said Act, Chapter R-3, R.S.C., 1970.

Report on the administration of Part I of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 26 of the said Act, Chapter R-11, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Canadian National Railways Securities Trust for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 17 of the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act, Chapter 311, R.S.C., 1952.

SCIENCE POLICY

REPORT OF COMMITTEE EXPENSES TABLED

Senator Lamontagne, Chairman of the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy, appointed in the Second Session of the Thirtieth Parliament on November 30, 1976 to consider and report on Canadian Government and other expenditures on scientific activities and matters related thereto with power to incur special expenses in connection therewith, tabled, pursuant to rule 84, a report of the special expenses.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit while the Senate is sitting tomorrow, Wednesday, November 9, 1977, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

ALASKA HIGHWAY PIPELINE

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES—
QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a question was asked by the Honourable Senator Olson on November 3 regarding the Alaska Highway pipeline. The question followed these lines, quoting part of the question:

I should like to ask a question . . . with respect to what appears to be a disagreement between the United States Senate and certain bodies in Canada over procurement and tendering in connection with the AlCan pipeline. My question is:

(1) Is a negotiating team now at work attempting to clear up this disagreement?

(2) Will the result of the negotiations be reflected in the legislation to be presented to Parliament when ratification is requested by the government?

Under Article 7 of the agreement between Canada and the United States on principles applicable to a northern natural gas pipeline, signed September 20, 1977, each government undertakes that it will endeavour to ensure that the supply of goods and services to the pipeline project will be on generally competitive terms, having regard to the objectives of the agreement. The objectives specifically include the desire to advance national, economic and energy interests and to maximize related industrial benefits to each country through the construction and operation of the pipeline system. Article 7 also provides for consultations between the two countries should it appear that these objectives are not being met. Canada will have recourse to such consultations if concrete problems arise.

In the agreement the two governments recognize that legislation will be required to implement the provisions of the agreement. The government has made clear its intention to introduce into Parliament legislation which would carry out and implement relevant provisions of the agreement.

U.S.S.R.

OCTOBER REVOLUTION—SIXTIETH ANNIVERSARY—QUESTION

Senator Yuzyk: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he could supply senators with a copy of the telegram that the Prime Minister of Canada sent to Soviet leader Brezhnev on the occasion of the sixtieth anniversary of the Great October Bolshevik Revolution.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I must take the question as notice. I shall look into the matter. I know of no such text, but if one exists I shall attempt to determine the facts.

Senator Yuzyk: If such a text is available, could this telegram be printed in the next issue of Senate Hansard?

Senator Walker: No.

Senator Grosart: Wait until we get it.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I would not presume to undertake that responsibility or commitment until the facts are ascertained.

Senator Choquette: It might be too friendly.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, November 3, consideration of Her Majesty the Queen's Speech at the opening of the Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament, and the motion of Senator Frith, seconded by Senator Marchand, for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, the ceremonial opening of this session of this Parliament was a great state occasion. The majesty of the monarchy and, indeed, the majesty of the Monarch herself, were both evident and warming. There was a dignity in the occasion which the institutions of Parliament also conveyed, and behind the panoply lay the majesty of the law which it all symbolized. Here stability showed and the reassurance of due process. The television made the event available to Canadians everywhere. This, too, was reassuring.

• (2010)

Madam Speaker, you played a significant part in this impressive ceremony, and we were proud of you. All of us are delighted, of course, that you continue to preside over our more prosaic business. In my opinion, it all goes to prove that the Senate is a workshop and not a theatre.

I congratulate Senator Frith for the perspective and discernment in his speech. There is an injunction to senators carved upon the walls of our Speaker's chambers, Sapere aude—Dare to be wise—and there was wisdom in Senator Frith's words. I wish the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition in this house well as they discharge their onerous duties and exacting tasks. We are greatly in their debt every day, as is their country.

After hearing the speech of Senator Marchand, I am glad that this chamber can provide a forum for a person of his experience and talents. I would say that in that speech he arrived as a senator, and it is to our advantage. His speech has inspired others in this debate to express themselves on the pressing question of national unity. Now, for his sins, he must bear the responsibility of having stimulated me in the same direction.

Honourable senators, if Rip Van Winkle had fallen asleep in Canada late in 1967 to awaken in 1977, he would have been mystified. The centennial celebrations in this country produced a national sense of euphoria. The world and its leaders beat their ways to our doors to celebrate with us. Our prosperity, our institutions, our freedoms and our enlightenment were widely commended for emulation. Expo was a window on Canada for the world and it was a window on the world for Canada. Then, within a decade, the word is abroad that the national community which is Canada is threatened in its unity.

and in its very existence. This would have startled a modern Rip Van Winkle and it certainly startles us. I have no magic solution for this problem, but I have some views upon it which I would like to express as a senator from Ontario, and a citizen who is deeply concerned.

The immediate and proximate cause of this crisis in national unity was the election about one year ago of the Parti Québécois in the province of Quebec. The reasons for the dramatic drop in the popularity of the Bourassa government were many and various. Alarm at the state of the economy of the province was widespread; little growth was seen, or foreseen; and debt had mounted. Very visible and prominent projects such as James Bay and the Olympics, projects good in themselves, peaked at a time of fiscal and social malaise.

There was trouble, too, in the national economy, along with frightening inflation, massive unemployment, and turmoil in the work force. These problems have not been solved. These conditions, of course, disaffected all of the communities in the province of Quebec as well.

In the larger picture, world trade was declining. There was social unrest; there was violence. The actions of the oil countries of the Middle East not only disrupted national economies but they precipitated an alarming crisis in the supply of energy everywhere. It was a bad time for governments; it still is a bad time for governments. The Government of Quebec fell with a resounding thud.

When people decide to dismiss a government, they seldom do it for sophisticated reasons. When they do so, they turn to the available alternative. In the province of Quebec the available alternative was the Parti Québécois, because no other group appeared to be acceptable or viable.

It should surprise no one that, once in office, Mr. Lévesque and his colleagues should embark vigorously upon a policy of separation and independence from Canada for the Province of Quebec. This has always been the reason for the existence of his party. For years he had preached that Quebec was at a disadvantage while in Confederation, and that the only remedy for Quebec was the severance of that tie. If other circumstances, such as an unpopular government and a faltering economy converged to bring his party to office, as they probably did, it would be fatuous for people in Quebec or elsewhere to expect him to abandon his basic policy. He has not done so. He has said so in Canada, in the United States, and, lately, in France.

There is an extreme nationalism at the base of this movement, and the flame has been fired by emotional appeals and extravagant promises from brilliant performers, writers, artists, speakers, academics, intellectuals, politicians, people who know the value of organization, who are expert in the use of the media, and whose work prospers in a time of discontent.

The new breed of politician in the Parti Québécois is prepared to reject the view of Cartier, who devoted his career to the proposition that Quebecers could find their place in the sun within the Canadian Confederation. They refuse to believe Laurier—surely one of the greatest persons Canada has ever produced—who said that the twentieth century could belong to Canada with Quebec playing its full part. They rebuff St-Laurent as they ignore his passionate plea for national unity. These men were great Canadians and also great Quebecers. The centuries of tremendous development within the province of Quebec vindicate the careers of all three.

Honourable senators, the proximate cause of the crisis in Quebec is political. The remedy, then, must also be political. And under our democratic institutions the needed remedy is not evidently available yet in Quebec. There is a vacuum in their politics. The old parties do not offer the leadership to challenge effectively the policies of the present Quebec government, and until that vacuum is filled, until a viable alternative is established, existing ministers and their supporters in the National Assembly and elsewhere hold virtually undisputed sway.

● (2020)

Surely this is political priority number one for Quebecers who are deeply Canadians. To provide this will take much time and hard work. We all know it is the anxious concern of thousands of resolute Quebecers, many of whom are in this Parliament, many of whom are in this honourable house. Had we not known, they would surely have told us.

Honourable senators, it is trite to say we are not a homogeneous people. For over 200 years that fact has conditioned our history and has influenced our public policy profoundly. But it was not easy for the 60,000 French Canadians in the early days of British rule. If one reads the terms of the capitulation of Quebec and of Montreal, if one reads the terms of the Treaty of Paris of 1763, if one reads the stipulations of the Quebec Act (1774), one will find that none of these documents contain a code of basic freedoms. There was a glimmer of this attitude in the British Parliament from men such as Fox, Burke, Sheridan, and Sir Guy Carleton, but there was no sweeping assertion of minority rights for the new subjects of His Majesty.

For the French-speaking colonists of those days, the old master was gone. They were expected to adjust to the new one. The French Canadians at that time decided there was more to it than that.

There were some concessions, for there was some enlightenment in the British Parliament, as I have said. The new subjects were allowed to practise their religion. This was unusual, given the disabilities which applied to Roman Catholics in the United Kingdom at that time. There was wisdom in this step, too, for the British, if only to preserve peace and order. After the conquest, most of the governing classes in Quebec returned to France. The church was the only remaining organized protector of law and order, and protector of these people.

The colonists were allowed to apply the provisions of their civil law, which was based upon the ancient Customs of Paris. It was the only law they knew, and it was written in the only language they spoke. But language rights were not entrenched. Falteringly, they were accepted, mainly because French was the only language the people understood. French was freely used in business and in the courts. But in the early legislative assemblies and in the legislative councils which preceded them, in retrospect, the use of French came to be accepted with a gradualness which was agonizing.

In time, despite Lord Durham, there was progress in the area of language rights.

When the Act of Union of 1840 had outlived its usefulness, the scheme of Confederation as we know it was put in hand. The British North America Act of 1867 was not legislation imposed upon the Canadian colonies by the British Parliament. It was passed by the British Parliament. But its provisions resulted from agreements freely made by colonial statesmen of the time.

Honourable senators are very familiar with the salient elements of this our Constitution. Sections 91 and 92 purport to provide an equitable distribution of powers between the federal and provincial authorities. Section 93, in some respects the keystone of the arch of Confederation, provides for education and denominational schools to be under the control of the provinces. Section 133 prescribes the extent, then envisaged, for the use of both English and French. Minority and provincial rights were to be protected, in a measure, by the stipulations in respect of the Senate in section 21 and following sections of the act.

In the first century of Confederation there were swings of the pendulum from an acknowledgement of provincial control in certain areas at one extreme, to strong federal control at the other, and back again. These changes resulted from court decisions, especially those of the Privy Council, which strongly favoured provincial power; from the use of the War Measures Act in national emergencies, which conferred very wide authority on the federal government and the federal cabinet; from royal commissions like Rowell-Sirois, which proposed a reallocation of powers between the federal and provincial authorities. There were tax-sharing agreements between Ottawa and the provinces, especially in the Second World War. This was for fiscal accommodation, and it was a good step—a step in the right direction. Then there was the federal-provincial conference. Federal-provincial conferences are now virtually institutionalized for continuous federal-provincial consultation in many fields. This is a bird's-eye view of the legal structure.

The country, too, has experienced great growth in population, in wealth, in industrialization, in its work force. There have been huge national undertakings, the building of railways, the building of highways, the airlines, the seaway, pipelines, and provincial and federal budgets have experienced a multiplier effect as we have grown. Popular demands in the fields of health, welfare, pensions and education have produced services never dreamed of in 1867. And the demands upon the federal government by the provincial governments still grow. And the demands by all levels of government upon the taxpayer grow apace.

In this century we have had buoyant economies and stagnant economies; we have seen great prosperity and severe depressions; in most respects our cycles of economic change, both good and bad, have followed economic trends in the whole of the Western World. Now our economy is in a trough, and it does not help the unemployed to know that we have in our company many of the other great nations of the world. I need not dwell upon this point because honourable senators, particularly in the opposition, have already done so in this debate. But despite their disapproval of the government or of its policies or of the present Prime Minister or of his attitudes, opposition members generally, unanimously in fact, project a basic optimism about this country. What they say is this: Canada is still great and all it needs is their party to run it—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West):—and they are entitled to that opinion. Realists remain optimistic about Canada, but none of us should refuse to accept change where change is warranted. We may and probably do need structural changes in our organic law, in our Constitution. Unquestionably, certain powers are essential for the national Parliament if our integrity as a nation is to be preserved. We know these fields full well—monetary policy, defence, external affairs, national communications, the essentials of the judicial system. This is not power grabbing, this is common sense. But at times we observe how advisers to federal governments reach out in programs which do in fact infringe upon provincial jurisdiction. This is the way of the power grabber, of the centralizer. The federal authority has no divine right and no constitutional right to legislate in every field. There are times when provinces can legislate more effectively and within their own constitutional capacity.

• (2030)

In the past 50 years federal governments have been deeply involved in certain relatively new areas of activity, areas of activity really never contemplated at the time of Confederation—consumer affairs, housing, pensions, health, even some aspects of fisheries and of agriculture, and certainly of education.

In the committees of this house we see evidence of encroachment in these areas of provincial power, as we did, for example, in respect of the Competition Bill. We notice, too, a tendency on the part of the federal authorities to legislate in grey areas, probably to the chagrin of the provincial governments.

I ask: Is it enough for Ottawa to justify itself by pleading that it must set national standards by doing this? We must think about the consequences if provincial legislative authority is eroded. We know, too, that the provinces will not assume added responsibilities without having corresponding fiscal capacity; but should they do the taxing in these overlapping fields or should Ottawa? These are major problems in a federal state. So long as our state is a federal state, we shall have to cope with them and deal with them.

Now, what of language rights? Section 133 of the British North America Act is not adequate for the needs of today. I think everyone acknowledges that. There are large francophone communities in many places outside Quebec now that did not exist in 1867. The report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, and the studies issued by that commission, contain a great deal of material both useful and wise in this great discussion—particularly in respect of bilingual districts and in respect of amendments to section 133. Indeed, they set out a trial amendment for that section, and the Official Languages Act passed by Parliament in 1968 is a step in the right direction.

In the light of the stipulations of Bill 101 passed in Quebec in 1977, and in the light of other legislation passed years ago and since abrogated in other places with respect to language rights in the so-called anglophone provinces, it seems clear that Canada should have a provision in her Constitution adequate to establish language rights for Canadians who use either of the official languages. And the language rights of other minorities, so-called new Canadians, must be treated adequately as well.

New situations have developed since 1867. Take Ontario alone. There are now large communities—comprising in total over a million francophones—in the east, in the north and in the southwest part of this province. Successive Governments of Ontario, to their credit, have made arrangements so that much progress has been made in the provision of francophone schools in Ontario. But in the Legislature, in the courts and in the system of records there is no provision for French in Ontario yet. This need has emerged, and the remedy, I really believe, will not long be delayed.

Not only Quebec, but all the provinces, and the federal authority, need and can profit from adjustments in our organic law to meet emerging, modern requirements. I differ profoundly from Mr. Lévesque when I say that this can be done to the greater advantage of all groups and of all citizens, anywhere in Canada, within the framework of the Constitution.

One can wonder if a truncated Canada could be a bilingual country. What would future public opinion decree in that unhappy development? What then of the cultural security of millions of French Canadians outside Quebec if that kind of thing should develop?

I return to the situation in Quebec. If separation should occur I think the cost to Quebec alone would be enormous. I believe there would be restrictions in economic growth, a lower standard of living and a reduction in training and educational facilities because the costs would be so great. There would be the establishment, unfortunately, of an introspective enclave within the North American land mass, and perhaps an enclave without the assurances for the survival of its culture which Canada's institutions guarantee and enshrine today. There would be a relative inability to attract capital for development, probably social upheaval and unrest, and a severe brain drain. Support from the Government of France would not cure these ills if they should develop in Quebec.

[Senator Connolly (Ottawa West).]

If I were to list the dire consequences of the separation of Quebec from the rest of Canada I suppose I would be here most of the night, though perhaps you would not be, but I think the Premier of Nova Scotia made a pretty good fist of it yesterday in a speech he made somewhere in the maritimes. I think the consequences of separation would be equally bad for Canada. Honourable senators, in my humble opinion the separation of Quebec from Canada would be an unmitigated disaster for Quebec and for Canada.

It may be that thoughts of independence have crossed the minds of leaders in great states of the American union, such as New York, California, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Texas. Some of them are empires. But I do know that each of these states has gained immeasurable strength from staying within the union. From the union, for them, flowed opportunities both on the national and the world stage. That book is open. Anyone can read it.

Honourable senators, the lives and prospects of the younger generation of Canadians have been enlarged and enriched by the thought, the work and the sacrifices which have been made in this country by earlier generations of Canadians. As we acknowledge this debt we cannot forget—though in anglophone Canada we often do—the part French-speaking Canadians have played in this tremendous national development. The ancestors of the people of Quebec today were the Europeans who discovered and first settled this country. They were the contemporaries of these first settlers who explored this country—and their names colour the map of the continent—Marquette, Joliet, LaSalle, Hennepin, DuLuth, and Vincennes.

● (2040)

When Selkirk's settlers reached the Red River, and the site of Winnipeg, in 1802, intrepid men had preceded them. The first was LaVerendrye. He was there in 1737, and he was on the prairies and in the mountains to the west before Mackenzie saw the Pacific from Canada East in 1793.

The early French of the church in this country left us all a magnificent legacy. Laval, the country's first bishop, was the founder of the first institution of higher learning in North America. The stories of the early missionaries who became martyrs are tales of heroism and devotion. E. J. Pratt, the brother of one of our former colleagues from Newfoundland, wrote his great epic about Brébeuf, and his brethren, Lalemant, Jogues and the others.

There were women in the early hospitals and in the first schools—Marguerite Bourgeoys, Jeanne Mance and Madame de la Peltrie.

William Lyon Mackenzie had his Lower Canada counterpart in Louis Joseph Papineau in the 1830s. Reform was their motto.

Baldwin and Lafontaine, commemorated in a monument just outside this chamber, presided over the Union of the Canada in the 1840s. Later Sir Louis Hippolyte Lafontaine was the head of the commission that gave Quebec, and Canada, its distinctive Civil Code. Fathers of Confederation from Quebec pledged their careers to the new nation—Cartier and Langevin.

Prime ministers of Canada from Quebec have all been dedicated to the concept of one Canada, one nation in which French-speaking citizens would play a full part—Laurier, St. Laurent and now Trudeau. Other Quebecers have been honoured leaders in Canadian public life. Is it now to be said that men like Lapointe, Dandurand, Gouin, Cardin, Blondin and Sevigny, and indeed Quebecers like Fitzpatrick, Doherty, Power and Hackett, deceived their fellow Quebecers with their Canadianism? Is their memory to be dishonoured and are their careers to be discarded?

Quebec has given Canada great jurists, four of whom have been Chief Justices of the Supreme Court of this country—two Taschereaus, a Rinfret and a Fauteux. The bar of Quebec has produced giants—men like Geoffrion, Lafleur, St. Laurent, Beaulieu, and one of our former colleagues, who was here after the height of his career, Gustave Monette.

Who does not honour Gagnon, the painter; Hébert and Bourgeault, the sculptors; Lavallée, who wrote our national anthem; and so many other Quebecers in every artistic discipline?

Honourable senators, I have not lately come to these views. Quebecers have huge economic, social, intellectual and physical investments in this country. In public life, in the professions and in large and imaginative enterprises you see Quebecers everywhere. This is their capital too. This investment of three centuries has assuredly redounded to their benefit, and to all Canadians as well. The partnership has been fruitful; certainly fruitful beyond the dreams of the men of the seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Such people cannot leave Canada—a Canada to which they have given so much, and in which they can continue to expect to develop and to flourish as part of one of the great nations of the world. And other Canadians must say this as well.

● (2050)

We say we love our country, and we do. But our devotion and our affection we must not confine to a beautiful land in its infinite variety and in its myriad moods. Our love must also be for its peoples, for its men and women who live here, who build upon the achievements of earlier generations and who, regardless of language, or race, or colour, or creed, together, can make it greater still.

Hon. Margaret Norrie: Honourable senators, this is indeed a memorable occasion for me, rising to take part in the debate on the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne delivered by Her Most Gracious Majesty, Queen Elizabeth the Second.

Her devotion to duty, her exemplary conduct, her high principles and her deep concern for the welfare of her people is heartwarming. These wonderful qualities in our Queen justify sincere loyalty from her subjects.

Prince Philip, the Duke of Edinburgh, has shared with Queen Elizabeth her duties and honours throughout the 25 years of her reign. I am sure that we all wish them well for years to come, while expressing our sincere appreciation for their gracious presence at the opening of the Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament during her Silver Jubilee visit to Canada. I hope that their visit has strengthened the cause of unity in Canada, and has given us the determination to overcome our problems which at present concern us so deeply.

Honourable senators, I am happy to extend my sincere congratulations to Madame le Président du Sénat, the Honourable Renaude Lapointe, on the excellent performance of her duties as Speaker. She has extensive obligations in many other fields as well, both far and near, in which she has shown good judgment and warm hospitality.

We are fortunate to have as Leader of the Government in the Senate, the Honourable Ray Perrault. He debates with vigour and conviction when the occasion presents itself. In no less measure, the same can be said about the Honourable Jacques Flynn, the Leader of the Opposition. With these two senators as our guides, the Senate is well directed.

I join with other senators in congratulating the mover and the seconder of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, Senator Frith and Senator Marchand, respectively. It is gratifying to have two such gifted newly-appointed senators in our chamber.

I should like to congratulate Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) on his superb and scholarly speech tonight. It was most moving, and it was a delight to listen to him.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Norrie: The three subjects on which I wish to briefly comment are unemployment, industrial policy—chiefly small business—and agriculture. There is no doubt that unemployment causes major hardships and hazards in our society. There is also no doubt that high employment means a healthy economy in our democratic countries. The impression seems to be widespread that our government is not doing much to alleviate the situation. This is quite untrue. It is a bad situation, but the government is doing its utmost to remedy the problem.

An 8 per cent unemployment figure is very high. The government is not shirking its duty. It is endeavouring to pinpoint the trouble and to bring about a reversal of this trend, and has made some very definite moves to help employ more people. Between 1976 and 1977, 209,000 new jobs were created in Canada. In the last four years, one million jobs were created. Between 1970 and 1976, Canada had a higher rate of job creation than any other member nation of the Organization of Economic Co-operation and Development, including the U.S.A. and Japan.

One problem is that while employment opportunities are expanding, the number of people who want work is growing more rapidly. Each year another 200,000 young people enter the job market. The federal government stepped up their job creation effort. The federal budget of March 31 raised the 1977-78 allocation for direct job creation to $450 million. Then, on October 20 the new finance minister directed that an additional $150 million be placed in the job fund. He also assured the Canadian public that a further $450 million has been set aside for Canada Works and Young Canada Works in 1978 and 1979.

Incentives for improvement in the employment level is a must, and the government is dedicating its utmost efforts to this end. To really boost job creation, we need an expanding economy, price stability, and a high level of demand for Canadian goods and services. The Canadian labour force that manufactures our goods is demanding such high wages that we cannot compete in the world markets with our fine products. We Canadians have to learn to "tighten our belts" and face facts. The British people have been on many an austerity program and they have survived. I am sure we can also, if we will co-operate to save Canada from economic disaster.

Even in the United States, where performance has been good, unemployment has risen again by about 7 per cent, and thus we find ourselves in Canada in the early stages of a national crisis, under dark economic clouds, with very high unemployment, very high inflation, and receding economic growth. Around us is a faltering world economy from which we can expect little stimulus. At least we are not alone, but that is very small comfort.

The outlook in Canada for 1978 is indeed brighter, according to some economists. The Bank of Canada is limiting increases in the money supply. This restraint policy serves the objective of returning the economic growth levels by beating inflation. This policy, some think, tends to keep us below our potential and is thought to be economically unjustifiable and politically imprudent.

Along this more optimistic trend are some suggestions: keep controls for at least one more year, cut down on personal income tax, and expand the expenditure program guidelines.

The importance of small businesses is being emphasized. A good rule of thumb to judge whether a company is lucky to have developed a major management structure is the number of people it employs. One hundred employees or less has been accepted as the standard for this group. One-half of the private sector work force is employed by small business. Twenty-six per cent of the total sales, which is $77 billion, is made up by small business. Twenty per cent, or $38 billion, of the GNP is accounted for by small business. There are 600,000 small businesses in Canada, including 240,000 incorporated firms and 360,000 unincorporated firms. Eighty-eight per cent of Canadian business employs 100 people or less. These people are a breed apart. They have pride in their contribution to our society. They believe in the value of hard work. They are independent and have a "take charge" attitude, and they like their government to stay at arm's length.

● (2100)

A major concern of small business is the availability of finance. The government may analyze the United States concept of a small business investment company which encourages the formation of pools of private risk capital for investment in small firms.

[Senator Norrie.]

Finally, a statistical handbook on small enterprises may be helpful to those interested in small businesses. This is something which our government cannot and will not overlook.

A major tactic is to encourage more Canadian multinationals like the success stories represented by Massey-Ferguson, Avco Industries, Northern Telecom, Noranda, Polysar, McCain Foods, Wajax Industries, Dominion Road Machinery and the Electrolosis Corporation, to name some. In fact, all multinationals reserve their product innovation for the home country, thus giving the parent company a world edge in new products and the weight to influence world market shares for its subsidiaries. These multinationals are important because they do their engineering for product innovation here in Canada.

At this point, honourable senators, I should like to bring to your attention a shocking production by the CBC on the tar sands, on September 12, 1977. The Esso Reporter Bulletin of October 5, 1977, was sent to me, and this is what they say:

Few events concerning Imperial have aroused as much emotion as the CBC's production of The Tar Sands last September 12. The first reaction was sadness and dismay that the company could be vilified in such a manner.

As it turned out, public opinion seemed to be against the program, if newspaper comment is any guide. The Calgary Herald called the show "a terrible failure of intellectual honesty" that "ranks just above poisoning wells." The Edmonton Journal said the program was "fundamentally misleading" and the Citizen said "not even compelling television can justify the unwarranted damaging of reputations." Commenting on the technique of fictionalized journalism used by the CBC, the Lethbridge Herald said "it cannot be fair and should not be repeated" and the Toronto Star said it was "unfit for a democracy."

Opinion at Imperial is the program was a willful distortion of events, and Jack Armstrong wrote the following letter to the president of the CBC:

Dear Mr. Johnston:

During recent months Canadians have had the opportunity of discussing the ways in which government and industry may cooperate to serve the national interest in developing Canada's energy supply.

All Canadians realize the magnitude of that task. Even in the best circumstances it will command all the resources of mind and will that our people can summon. We need their support.

For this reason it was disappointing to me to see the attitude displayed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in its recent drama, The Tar Sands. As you know, the film dealt with the negotiations surrounding Syncrude and attributed statements and attitudes that were utterly fictitious to various persons who were involved.

The role of the CBC in this instance leaves me baffled. How can government and industry rally the public to the tasks at hand if events are to be willfully distorted and characters vilified by our public broadcasting system?

Anthony Westell, writing on the editorial page of the Toronto Star about the program, expressed a very pertinent view: "Democracy is in enough trouble already without the CBC making it even harder for citizens to follow events and make intelligent judgments."

I have said before, and I say again, how can the economy prosper when a crown corporation is allowed to destroy fine industries with events that are willfully distorted and characters vilified, as is being done by our Canadian Broadcasting Corporation? Can such slanderous remarks be allowed in our democratic country such as Canada? There must be a limit beyond which slander and character vilification cannot go.

Agriculture is, of course, most vital to our well-being. At the present time the beef industry is in a depressed state. This three-year depression in beef prices is very detrimental to the economic prosperity of Canada as a whole. Unrestricted imports of beef, veal, and live slaughter cattle were recognized as a real threat to the Canadian industry by beef producers and by the provincial governments.

The Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture established a beef industry inquiry in an attempt to get to the root of the trouble in the industry. The committee heard beef producers voice their suspicions again and again that Canada had a cheap food policy, that once the long awaited price recovery began imports would be permitted to follow freely, and that the beef industry, and agriculture in general, would continue to be traded off in favour of manufacturing in international negotiations. It was these fears that prompted the demand for a beef import act and rejection of supply management.

The Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture considers the demand that Canada should have a long-term import policy for beef, veal, and live slaughter cattle to be a reasonable one, indeed a necessary one. Without such a policy Canada cannot maintain a productive, viable beef industry. The committee has made recommendations which will, if implemented, do much to reduce the negative influence that imports have on the Canadian beef industry.

● (2110)

Another area in the agricultural aspect which concerns me greatly is the indifference with which our governments, both federal and provincial, disregard the insidious harm caused by urban sprawl and the encroachment of highways and industries on our prime agricultural land. This prime agricultural land is gone forever—gone forever from a country which could become a leader in agricultural productivity in a world where the starving millions need large quantities of food.

I quote now from the booklet, Agriculture and Land Planning by Norman Pearson, put out by Agriculture Canada. Under the heading "Why Preserve Farmland?", the author writes:

And yet the question is still posed: why bother to preserve farmland? This is the illusion of the limitless future, an illusion so dangerous because it blinds us to the realities of change. Let us explore this. Canada has a land area second only to China: less than 10 per cent of our 2,272 million acres is farmed, and slightly over half that is in cultivation. Two-thirds of Canada is climatically completely worthless in any practical sense for the commercial agricultural venture. Of the remaining one-third which is climatically favourable, the greater part is also useless because it is rocky, wet or steep. We are left with about 201 million acres of potentially useful arable land: a reserve area of about 27 million acres as yet undeveloped, and a developed area of 174 millions acres... Recent expansion has almost entirely been in the western provinces, and farming is in retreat in the eastern provinces. Only about 100 million acres is improved land and it is generally synonymous with the useful land and soils. Of that land perhaps 24 million acres is arable land in climatically favoured areas, and the great bulk of that land lies firmly in the path of urban development. Canada is now urbanizing so rapidly that already more than 76 per cent of the 1972 population lives in cities and towns, and in the period 1966-1972 this figure was augmented by 11.4 per cent. At this new rate, the forecast that shortly after the year 2000 A.D. Canada would be 90 per cent urbanized must now be revised. We will probably reach that situation by 1985.

In an address to the "Resources for Tomorrow" conference, Mr. Crerar further forecasts that if the present urbanization trends continue, by the year 2000 agricultural activity will be almost insignificant in the lower Fraser Valley, in most of southern Ontario and in the St. Lawrence low lands. This is where the bulk of the key 24 million acres of climatically favoured best soils lie. In the broad world spectrum concerning a food policy we are faced with enormous responsibilities to hungry peoples, according to a brief by CUSO. Canada has a responsibility to take a leading role in developing a world system of food reserves. The system should recognize not only need, but must be workable within the world supply and marketing system. This is a period of international concern about the world's ability to adequately feed its growing population.

Food shortages such as those seen in Bangladesh and the Sahel and Sudan regions of Africa cannot be overlooked or disregarded. While many views on world food security tend to focus on forces which are thought to be beyond human control, other more optimistic ones contend that the greater application of modern technology offers a primary solution. Still others consider the current shortages as largely transitory, easily corrected through a more intelligent reorientation of priorities, and an overhaul by governments of those policies and conditions which influence the distribution and consumption of food.

A broad world food policy would stimulate our agricultural industry and give us a chance to produce food without flooding the market. It is an enormous field for thought and action, and we need our smartest agriculturists to show us the direction to go, and our economists to co-operate in every way. It must be a united effort in all fields. There is no doubt of the need. Let's get going! Starving people cannot wait long.

I have just a few more words to say. Mr. Lang's announcement of the development of a container pier in Montreal comes as a severe shock to the Halifax and Saint John container port officials, Halifax has been trying to get an additional pier for several years.

It is hard to believe that the pier in Montreal would not have adverse effects on the Halifax pier. According to Atlantic Container Lines, there will be a drop of 6 per cent in the traffic going through Halifax. This will mean a lay-off of men, and fewer freight trains leaving Halifax will mean additional lay-offs. Has Mr. Lang no consideration of our high unemployment rate? The two ports will not be competing for new business, Mr. Blaikie said, because Halifax services container ships en route to the United States, while Montreal attracts smaller ships calling in Canada only.

There is a great amount of bulk traffic moving through the port of Halifax. It is still one of our busiest ports. The need for expansion—that is, another pier—is great and real, so I hope Mr. Lang will move cautiously and not destroy the efficiency and future of the container piers in Halifax and Saint John.

On motion of Senator Choquette, debate adjourned.

AGRICULTURE

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO MAKE STUDY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Senator Argue, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, November 2, 1977, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture be empowered, without special reference by the Senate, to examine from time to time any aspect of the agricultural industry in Canada; provided that all senators shall be notified of any scheduled meeting of the committee and the purpose thereof and that the committee report the result of any such examination to the Senate;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisers as may be necessary for the purposes of such examination;

That the committee, or any subcommittee so authorized by the committee, may adjourn from place to place for the purposes of any such examination;

That the papers and evidence received and taken on its inquiry into the desirability of long-term stabilization in the Canadian beef industry in the preceding session be referred to the Committee; and

That the committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

● (2120)

Senator Langlois: No. Explain.

Senator Argue: This is the same motion that the Senate has agreed to for a number of years. It merely gives the committee power to continue the work it has been doing in the past.

Senator Langlois: I move the adjournment of the debate.

Senator Argue: Perhaps I am a little sleepy. I wanted this motion adopted so we could have our meeting tomorrow, and proceed with our work.

Senator Langlois: The debate is adjourned.

Senator Argue: On this motion?

Senator Langlois: Yes.

Senator Argue: Very well.

On motion of Senator Langlois, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 9, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

AGRICULTURE

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Senator Langlois moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture be authorized to meet when the Senate rises today, to hear evidence on the Canadian beef industry.

Motion agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY ADOPTED

The Senate resumed from yesterday consideration of Her Majesty the Queen's Speech at the opening of the Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament, and the motion of Senator Frith, seconded by Senator Marchand, for an Address in reply thereto.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, the Throne Speech was sterile and banal, and most of the arguments made by government supporters in its defence have been emaciated and dull. It is my intention this afternoon, therefore, to help alleviate with sustaining insight the intellectual famine which obviously affects several of my friends opposite.

Before I do that, Madam Speaker, I should like to congratulate this administration on its one worthwhile accomplishment since 1974: your appointment as Speaker of this chamber. You have presided over our deliberations with a degree of patience, equity, and resourcefulness that deserves nothing short of our fullest admiration and respect. It ceases not to amaze me, Madam, how a person as perspicacious as you are can remain a government supporter. But then again, I suppose you are as loyal and charitable as you are gifted. I want you to know, however, Madam Speaker, that if ever the embarrassment of your association with this blundering, comic-opera administration becomes more than your integrity and self-respect can bear, we would be pleased to welcome you into that refuge of right and reason known as the Progressive Conservative Party.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: Some harbour of refuge.

Senator Flynn: This offer does not extend to Senator Perrault.

Senator Choquette: Honourable senators, I could hardly begin my speech today without heartily congratulating our honourable and distinguished colleague, Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), for the gem he delivered yesterday.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Choquette: We are old classmates at the University of Ottawa and I recall the history that we learnt there in those days, which were years ago. He seems to have not forgotten any part of the history regarding the French régime, and I think his speech should be given all the publicity that it deserves because it is unbelievable that descendants of people who have done so much to help build this great country of ours could think of breaking it apart.

Since November 15, 1976, the question which Canadians throughout the country have been asking themselves concerns the future of this very land. We know that the destiny of peoples is not written in the stars, but is molded by man. It follows, then, that it is up to us to develop solutions, but finding a common denominator among the myriad of ideas, points of view and expressions of feelings which emerge from each of Canada's regions is not an easy matter, especially so when a most important and most dramatic hour is ringing at the clock of our history. This, indeed, commands us to search for solutions, but before defining or exploring solutions which would be acceptable to the immense majority of Canadians, let us try to find out why we are in such a situation today. To use a common expression, let us go briefly to the root of things. Honourable senators, I am asking myself and, indeed, asking my anglophone compatriots, whether the French language and culture need to be observed and developed in all regions of this our beautiful country? I am inclined to speak in the affirmative when considering statements made on this subject by some eminent and important people.

Let us recall that Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth spoke highly of the French language when visiting Quebec City on October 10, 1964. She said, and I quote:

It is most agreeable for me to think that there exists in our Commonwealth a country where I am able to express myself officially in French—one of the most important languages in our western civilization.

• (1410)

That same year, President de Valera made an official visit to Canada. On June 3, 1964, he delivered a memorable address to the members of the Canadian Club in Ottawa. The next day, the Ottawa Journal commented as follows:

President de Valera, that Celtic sage, told the Canadian Club yesterday that he believed no part of the world had such bright prospects as Canada.

The above quotations are certainly attuned to the testimonies of some of the best Anglo-Canadian historians who wrote on the same theme. Allow me to refer to Canada, Nation and Neighbour by Arthur Lower, formerly head of the Department of History at Queen's University of Kingston. I quote:

The foundations of French Canada were laid in the seventeenth century, at the proudest period of French history . . . Every French-speaking Canadian retains these racial memories; he is a citizen of no mean city, the scion of the proudest culture and the greatest state in the world.

In another of his works—namely, Canadians in the Making—Arthur Lower went further. He said:

To English Canadians, immersed in their own rich heritage, it rarely occurs to reflect that their French fellow-citizens brought with them the proudest and most distinguished tradition of Europe.

Lastly, when he was Governor General of Canada, Vincent Massey, during a convocation at Carleton University in Ottawa on May 24, 1963, said, and I quote:

How many English-speaking Canadians fully accept the implications of the fact that in this country we have two different cultures existing side by side. This is embedded in our foundations.

In short, Vincent Massey did not ignore the existence of the two peoples who founded Canada; but neither did he disregard the new Canadians who came from Central Europe and settled in our country. On June 1, 1964, while speaking to the members of the Canadian Club in Charlottetown, he said:

It must be remembered that more than a quarter of our population comes of neither French nor British stock. We welcome the cultures which these people have brought with them; we value the rich contribution they make to our national life. We, however, have two founding races, French and English in origin, their languages and cultures having a permanent place in the national scene. This is an historical fact, not a political judgment.

Closer to home, on January 17, 1967, Robert Stanfield, then Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, made a similar statement when addressing the German-Canadian Club of Toronto. The next day, the Ottawa Journal wrote that Mr. Stanfield had spoken with wisdom. It added, and I quote:

Opposition Leader Stanfield followed his promised formula of "straightforward talk and frank consideration," when he told a German-Canadian Club in Toronto that the French language had special rights in Canada. An inheritance of history. There were surely those in his audience who thought German was entitled to rights as well as French and English, but Stanfield gave them no encouragement. His frankness was admirable.

Honourable senators, many fellow-citizens imagine that national unity is being fostered by the unity of language while language diversity is prejudicial to that unity. I must state that such people are mistaken. To demonstrate what I mean, allow me to draw the attention of honourable senators to Willie Moore's writing in The Clash on page 302. I quote:

[Senator Choquette.]

Homogeneity is no assurance against the disruption of the state . . . Our English-speaking Protestant Loyalist ancestors who fought against their English Protestant revolutionary neighbours . . . Nor did homogeneity in language save the United States from civil war in the eighteen-sixties. Protestant fought Protestant and in both armies English words were the words of command. The fact that the Englishman of England and the American of the United States spoke the same language, in 1812, did not prevent them from fighting. We had a domestic clash of arms ourselves twenty-five years later and men did not divide upon their manner of spelling freedom but upon their manner of thinking freedom. No! There is something better than "one school," and "one language": It is harmony in diversity.

And summative ideas of Willie Moore could be condensed, I think, in the following sentence: "If we cannot sing in unison, let us sing in harmony; it is so much nicer."

Taking into account the preceding quotations and remembering what has taken place in the last 50 years, are we not to wonder that English Canada has failed in its mission of also contributing to the survival and development of the French language and culture in Canada? Perhaps we can echo here the complaints penned by Douglas How in Reader's Digest on June 17, 1963. I quote:

A country sinking roots in both of the two greatest cultures and languages man has created would not only be a country distinct; it would be a country of hope and significance far beyond our shores . . . Here, at its best, is possibly the most beautiful language of man (the French language), the key to a magnificent literature and culture, a vital tool of diplomacy. History gave to this country an unusual opportunity to do something with it and we have failed. This failure in Canada to sell, even to come close to marketing properly the most charming language in the world.

During the difficult years which are to follow, let us wish for the union of all Canadians of good will so that our country, strengthened by the lessons of the past, will be up to its remarkable destiny and will be at last able to rest its hope on a future full of promises.

In the course of this debate a lot has been said about the French language, bilingualism and biculturalism, and that the knowledge of French by anglophones would do a lot to foster unity in this country. The question of how French should be taught has not been dealt with at all in this debate.

I am confident that if the French language had been taught properly in English schools in the last 50 years about 75 per cent of the honourable members in this chamber would be bilingual, and I am pretty sure that half of the population would have a working knowledge of the French language.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

• (1420)

Senator Choquette: Unfortunately, although French was a compulsory subject in high schools, I was always amazed that after taking French for three or four years the anglophone students were unable to carry on a conversation in French.

We might ask ourselves the reason for this situation. The only answer I can find is that the French language was poorly taught. Instead of teaching conversational French, the students were asked to conjugate irregular verbs and memorize intricate rules of grammar and of syntax which we all know are most difficult. Not only that, but the students were told that they would not be understood by French Canadians because the latter did not speak Parisian French but a language made up of part Cree, part Huron and part eighteenth century French. This notion has prevailed for many years and is still prevalent in certain quarters. In other words, honourable senators, French, in the last 30 or 40 years, has been taught as a dead language, just as Latin and Greek were taught, and as long as the graduate knew a few rules of grammar it did not matter whether he could carry on a conversation or not. That should not have been the case, and it will not be the case in the future, because children are starting to speak now at a very early stage, and that is the time to learn.

I should like to tell you an anecdote about something that happened in the thirties when I was studying law. At that time I got acquainted, and rather well acquainted, with some of the famous European French professors who were teaching in the University of Toronto. We used to have dinner together on Bloor Street, or on Yonge Street near Bloor Street. One day one of them said, "How would you like to teach two nights a week at a place called Western Tech, because I've got other things to do that are better paying than that." I said, "Sure, I'll do that for $8.50 per night, two nights a week." In those days it paid my room and board. So he said, "I'll take you to the principal, and I'll introduce you to him." So I went with him and we met the principal. Then, after the introductions, he left on his own. The principal looked at me and said, "Listen, young fellow. This might be a whole lot of nonsense, but you will have to tell these pupils that you are from Paris." I said, "Well, that will sound pretty ridiculous. The farthest east I've been is Montreal, and the farthest west is Toronto, and these people are in their early thirties, or late thirties or forties. They might have been all over Europe. What if they ever talk to me about places in Paris? I would look stupid." He replied, "Well, the next best thing you can do is to tell them your parents came from Paris, that they brought you to this country when you were only 10 years of age and that you don't remember very much about Paris and other places in Europe." He then handed me the grammar, which was child's play for me, and he handed me the text book, with the essays. I gave my lesson. The students were grown-ups, as I say, and right after the class was over they came round to me, and the inevitable question was asked, "Are you from Paris?" I said, "Well, it's like this . . ." and I told them about my parents, and myself at 10 years of age, and they said, "We knew the minute you opened your mouth that you were not a French Canadian."

I then said, "What are you translating just now?" They said that they were translating what is considered a classic, and is still considered a classic, and is taught in universities and high schools, namely, "La Dernière Classe de Français," by Alphonse Daudet, which is a story told by a young Alsatian after France had fallen into the hands of the Prussians around 1871. It happened that I knew it by heart, because the preceding year I had won a gold medal in a contest by reciting it. I said, "I'll tell you what I'll do. We'll complete the translation in a few lessons, and I'll recite it by heart for you."

The word got around, and the night I was to recite the story I had a full house. The professors had heard about it, and those who had been teaching it for years in high schools and universities were present. They came to me afterwards and said, "We never thought it was possible to memorize such a long story, and we're glad." Nobody said, "Did you recite it in Parisian French or Canadian French?" I just said that I had recited it the way it was written by the author.

That, honourable senators, is one of the reasons why people did not want to converse. They were convinced that they had learned Parisian French, and that what was spoken here by the usual Canadian of French origin was what was called a patois.

Senator Bourget: Or "joual".

Senator Choquette: Or "joual." It is difficult to learn another language past the age of 40, and here I should like to open a parenthesis to congratulate Senator Keith Laird and Senator Hastings, who, at their age, learned French and gave us a speech in this house which surprised everybody. Their French was correct and, I would say, flawless. This is concrete proof that with perseverance, hard work and a good professor, French, or any other language for that matter, can be learned.

In conclusion, I wish to say that I was very impressed by the speech delivered in this house by Senator Marchand on October 19 last. This honourable senator knows the situation currently existing in his province. He knows its people, perhaps better than any other Quebec politician, and I admire him for his stamina and courage. I believe him when he says that on November 15 last the voters of Quebec did not vote in favour of separation, and with him I say that we should, all together, try to convince Mr. Lévesque to hold his referendum as soon as possible, so that we may finally know where we stand and shed our poker faces, because we have no indication as to what tomorrow may bring.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I regard the customary tributes which we normally pay in the debate on the motion for an Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne as something more than mere traditional conventions. They give us an opportunity, once in a session at least, and sometimes oftener, to recognize those whose endeavours do so much to make the work of this chamber as successful as it is.

I refer, first of all, to Her Majesty the Queen, who, on this particular occasion, joined us in this chamber and took part in the activities of the Senate. In a very gracious speech she indicated her satisfaction at having been to Canada seven times in the last decade, and will be here again at the time of the Commonwealth Games in Edmonton next year.

● (1430)

You, Madam Speaker, have once again added further to the prestige of the important office which you hold, and many of us who know of your activities outside the chamber are aware that the presence of the Speaker of the Senate is now regarded as essential at various functions of national and international significance. In addition, you have presided over our meetings here with that mixture of firmness and tolerance which is known as the mark of a great Speaker.

The Government Leader, as we all know, has carried out his very difficult role with unquestionable skill—the skill, of course, being proportionate to the difficulty of the role which we all recognize as being at times anomalous, in that he is a member of the cabinet. Legislation which is brought before us is legislation which he has discussed and, generally speaking, approved. He then has the task of making sure that the approval of the Senate is obtained. He has carried out that difficult role with unusual vigour, a vigour perhaps matched only by the vigour of the Leader of the Opposition.

It is very much in the interests of the Senate that we have leaders on both sides who state their positions with vigour and decisiveness. I have, of course, special reasons for knowing the nature of the heavy load that is carried by the Leader of the Opposition. Many references have been made to the reasons for that difficulty, and I know that the Leader of the Government is aware of them. I believe that all honourable senators are as anxious as we are to see some relief given to the Leader of the Opposition and to the group which supports him.

It is not for me to speak of the great importance of the office of Deputy Leader of the Government, but in Senator Langlois we have one who has given a new importance to the role of deputy leader. He has, in effect—and the Leader of the Government will understand what I mean when I say this—raised that office to that of leader of the house in this place. We all appreciate that he states his positions with vigour, and with more vigour when those of us on this side disagree with him.

The Whips, of course, have an important part to play in the activities of the house. It is not surprising that those who have been chosen for these offices are men of warm personality, and persuasiveness of manner and speech. We on this side think that Senator Petten is too effective at times, and I am quite sure he has earned the eternal gratitude of the Leader of the Government and the government itself for the skill with which he was able to prevent what would have been a sensational defeat of a government measure in this house.

Senator Flynn: You refer to the Inuit?

Senator Grosart: Had it not been for his hard work and his skill on that occasion, the Senate would have gone down in history, and for the first time in years, as taking a firm stand in what not quite a majority of the members of the Senate believed in at that particular time. His skill, however, was noticeable, if regrettable from our side.

The officials in the chamber do their work unobtrusively but well, and we hear few, if any, complaints.

[Senator Grosart.]

The same applies to the staff. I think all senators will agree that we have in the Senate a staff remarkable for its loyalty to individual senators as well as to the Senate itself.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Grosart: Not all institutions in the world today can boast that kind of loyalty. It is certainly noticeable to me, and I am sure to other honourable senators in their contacts with the staff.

The mover and the seconder of this motion faced a difficult task, but they performed it well. I would say that this may have been the most difficult year in all the history of the Senate for the mover and the seconder to make sense out of some parts of the Speech from the Throne. They tried hard, but I will not say that they succeeded.

I was particularly interested in the speech of the Leader of the Government. He always makes an outstanding speech, and on this occasion he did not fail us.

Quite properly, and quite appropriately, he devoted most of his speech to replying to the excellent speech of Senator Flynn, the Leader of the Opposition. I say “appropriately” because if ever there was a speech made here that needed a reply, it was that searching analysis and exposure of government ineptitude that Senator Flynn made.

Senator Perrault’s main complaint, of course, was that Senator Flynn was not optimistic. He found it strange.

Senator Perrault: That is right.

Senator Grosart: He thought Senator Flynn should exude optimism about the work of the government, even about its ineptitude and its mismanagement of the economy. Senator Perrault quoted Senator Flynn on an occasion in May 1958 when he was optimistic about government policy. I think Senator Perrault, who may have been quoting Senator Flynn on the spur of the moment, forgot the circumstances. The circumstances were very similar to the circumstances today because a Liberal government, in office for many years, had recently brought about the worst recession since the depression, the highest unemployment in Canadian history, continuing deficits in trade, and complete contempt for Parliament in the pipeline debate.

Senator Flynn was optimistic because a Conservative government had taken over and was already beginning to remedy those deficiencies in the administration of the Liberal government—so much so, that unemployment immediately began to drop and it continued to drop. That government brought about the first favourable balance of export trade in the decade. It restored confidence in Parliament. Looking forward to that, Senator Flynn was—and properly, I think—optimistic on that occasion. But Senator Flynn is now back to the same kind of pessimism that he had prior to June 1957.

Senator Perrault: Twenty years in the Tory caucus has done that.

Senator Grosart: Twenty years in the Tory caucus and ten magnificent years as Leader of the Opposition in the Senate. A tribute was paid to him last week for his ten years as Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, and I can only say that there are millions of Canadians who fervently hope that this year will be his last year in that capacity. As a matter of fact, the only grounds for any optimism that Senator Flynn may have is the prospect of that change of government. I, for one, in common with many other senators, expect to see Senator Flynn performing an important and distinguished role in that new government.

I need hardly say that Senator Flynn's pessimism is widely shared in Canada today. Even the Leader of the Government gave us some grounds for pessimism. In his speech he said, for example, and I quote from our Hansard of October 25:

● (1440)

International investors want the best return for their money for the least risk, and for one reason or another they feel that there are certain risks involved in investing extensively in our country at the present time.

Quite true, and not grounds for optimism. He also said:

How can we become more competitive in the world unless we make a concerted attack on the number one problem—inflation and a high-cost economy, an economy which is 20 per cent less productive than that of the United States but has 7 per cent higher indemnities for workers?

Not grounds for optimism.

As a matter of fact, if Senator Perrault had obtained more up-to-date and correct figures he would have given us even greater grounds for pessimism, because instead of a drop from 23 per cent actual growth in government expenditure, the figures are rather different. However, I was amazed at the suggestion that we should be optimistic, should praise the government for its having reached 23 per cent, which was Senator Perrault's figure. It has now dropped to 9 per cent, and we should now praise that government. We should praise the government which actually, for the first time in history other than in wartime, increased its expenditures by 23 per cent in a year.

But that is not the whole story; the figures are much worse. They make it quite clear that this government reached a top level of year-to-year increase in federal government spending of 28.7 per cent, followed by 22.9 per cent the next year, which was Senator Perrault's figure. The figures also show that in spite of the fact that the government announced restraint in its spending in June 1975, I believe, the growth in government expenditures in 1977 was greater than in 1976. Finally, of course, in the comparison between the growth in expenditures of the various levels of government, the federal government leads the others.

Now, it is often said that anyone can quote figures. Whose figures are they? These are not my figures; they are not from labour, and not from the business community. These are figures from the AIB, the government agency whose function is said to be that of controlling such matters—controlling this kind of spending and these kinds of increases. Perhaps I should read the figures into the record. They will be found at Table

1.1 in the Second Year Report of the Anti-Inflation Board. The percentage changes in federal government expenditures on a national accounts basis for 1972 to 1977 are: 1972, 15.8 per cent; 1973, 11.4 per cent; 1974, 28.7 per cent; 1975, 22.9 per cent; 1976, 9.4 per cent; and 1977, 13.7 per cent. For the current year, the percentage increases in expenditures by other levels of government are: provincial governments, 12.1 per cent; and local governments, 7.4 per cent. Those figures have to be compared with 13.7 per cent for the federal government.

I cite those figures because we have been told often by the Leader of the Government and other government spokesmen that the real culprits are the provinces and the municipalities. That simply is not so. The greatest increase in year-to-year expenditure in 1977 was caused by the federal government.

The Leader of the Government also reminded us of some other causes for pessimism. He recalled double-digit inflation. Of course, he said we do not have it now, only that we had it. He also said that, in his view, there are grounds for optimism because the Auditor General said—and he quoted him as saying it—that the government had “got its own act under control.” That may, or may not be so. However, this obviously raises the questions: Who caused these high level problems? Who was responsible for 23 per cent and 29 per cent increases in government expenditures? Who was responsible for bringing about a $9 billion deficit in export trade? Who was responsible for double-digit inflation?

It is quite true that not all the responsibility can be laid at the door of the government. I will admit that in a moment. The international situation has had a great deal to do with it, but the Leader of the Government also told us that we should be optimistic because Canada has tremendous natural resources, which, of course, is true. But, who has diminished the initiative of and the incentive for the private sector in the development of our natural resources? There is only one answer: The present government, by unwise, unsound intervention, restrictions and regulations. The fact of the matter is that, given those great resources, Canada should not have the problems it has. Other countries, which do not have those resources, have weathered this international storm considerably better than we have. I am thinking of much smaller countries than Canada which do not have those resources.

It seemed to me that Senator Perrault was almost suggesting that Senator Flynn should be optimistic about inflation, and what the government is doing to bring it down. Here again the facts, in my opinion, seem to justify Senator Flynn rather than Senator Perrault, because the inflation rate today is 8.4 per cent. Last year it was 6.5 per cent, and the government prediction for this third year of controls was 4 per cent. No one believes that we will even begin to reach that.

Our currency is collapsing. The dollar has dropped below 90 cents U.S., and the Bank of Canada is losing millions of dollars in attempts to support it. One of the finance minister's own officials, Dr. Hood, stated that each percentage point drop in the value of our dollar compared to the American dollar—which itself has been dropping on world markets—will result in approximately one-tenth of one per cent further inflation in a year, and three-tenths of one per cent in two years. If it continues, it will be a major contributor to further inflation. Again, the nation's deficit account in international trade is the highest in history. The annual deficit in our financial statements is higher than it has been for years, and our public debt, of course, is increasing by leaps and bounds.

With respect to the standard of living of Canadians, when the present government took office we were second in the world, second only to the United States, but every year this government has been in power the standard of living of Canadians has dropped. I am not able to ascertain where we are now because international comparative figures are slow in coming in, but certainly we have dropped to sixth or seventh—

Senator McDonald: Seventh.

Senator Grosart: Senator McDonald says seventh, and I take his word for it. That is bad enough, without suggesting that it may even be lower, but in the period in office of one government, a decade or so, we have dropped from second place in the world in respect of standard of living to seventh place, in spite of the head start we had over all other nations by reason of our natural resources. Is this a ground for optimism? I think not.

There was some suggestion made that the government restraint program in the federal public service should give grounds for optimism. Again, the facts would suggest pessimism. We now have, I am told, 580,000 employees in the federal government and its enterprises, which represents an increase of 13.7 per cent over the figure of a year ago, and it was then that we had all of these assurances that the government was holding the line on the hiring of further government employees.

● (1450)

The curtailment of the free enterprise system by this government is certainly one of the major causes of the current economic mess in which we find ourselves. The Financial Times put it well quite recently when it said:

This country is rich in natural resources and skilled, educated people. The economy is like a great machine which has been badly run and damaged by careless operation.

And so it goes across the country. I have been unable to find any optimism anywhere in the country. I have found no evidence among those with whom I have discussed this, including supporters of the Liberal Party, that they are optimistic about the immediate future of this country under a Liberal government.

Senator Flynn's pessimism is, I think, the mood of the country at the moment. To say, as government spokesmen, including the Prime Minister, have said, it is not the fault of the government, but the fault of the country, the fault of the people; to say that the people should tighten their belts when the government refuses to tighten its own, and so forth, is the worst kind of evasion.

To quote Peter Cook of the Financial Times: "The major concern is the Trudeau government's penchant for self-delusion when it comes to economic policy." I think that is probably one of the major grounds for Senator Flynn's pessimism. The government seems to keep on deluding itself into believing that all is well. Senator Perrault has said we should be optimistic, we should be cheering, we should be Pollyannas. Surely a little pessimism as to the immediate future of the country under the present policies of this government is the best thing that could happen to the government. As long as the government continues to be optimistic, it is not going to change its ways or its policies. The government needs a good dose of Senator Flynn's pessimism.

[Senator Grosart.]

The Montreal Star asked, "Can Ottawa expect the rest of the world to believe, without a concentrated effort, that the economic management of the country is in competent hands?" The rest of the world does not believe it. Pessimism is justified on that score. The Winnipeg Free Press, referring to the so-called mini-budget, the new directions the government suggests in its policies, said, "More of what doesn't work." And so it goes. This country is pessimistic about its prospects under the present government. We are not at the moment, as Senator Perrault hopes, "a nation of optimists."

In bringing this matter to the attention of the Senate and to the attention of the government, I have tried very hard not to quote partisan sources. I looked for the considered judgment of those who could in no way be accused of a partisan approach. I thought immediately of the C. D. Howe Institute and Carl E. Beigie, who is certainly not a partisan supporter of any party. In a recent speech, looking, hoping for solutions to the problems, and assessing, therefore, the present policies, Carl Beigie made a harsh assessment of the situation. In fairness, he does say that he cannot see how the government can do much to change its present policies. He suggests that the government has trapped itself into a position where it just has to go along with the present policies. In that context, he says:

Two years ago the federal government embarked on a major new approach to economic policy in Canada. After two years the most visible results of that approach—which has come to be known as "gradualism"—are an unemployment rate of over 8 per cent; an inflation rate of just under 8 per cent; a depreciation of the Canadian dollar of about 10 per cent over the past year in relation to the U.S. dollar, which has itself been declining in relation to a number of other currencies; and an economy that exhibits balanced weakness in all major sectors. With that kind of performance it would be an understatement to say that the policy of gradualism is experiencing some difficulties.

A final comment, again an impartial one, from the Economic Council of Canada. In one chart the ECC shows a comparison of the national productivity of seven countries, the key indicator of our standard of living, and of the seven Canada is at the bottom. Looking to the future, the Economic Council of Canada—surely as impartial a group as any could be—had this to say:

Even with the set of stimulants introduced by the Minister of Finance in October, the outlook for the next five years, as we perceive it, is for relatively modest growth, persistent inflation, high unemployment, and very large current account deficits.

Honourable senators, those are some of the reasons why some of us—in fact, most Canadians—are at the present time pessimistic about the economy. We are pessimistic about the immediate future, but not of the future of Canada itself. There are some very hopeful indicators of optimism on the horizon—both the horizon before us and the horizon behind us. One, of course, is that the economy has survived this decade or so of Liberal government ineptness. The economy is sick, but the patient has survived. He is still alive and merely waiting for a new doctor to come along, analyse his symptoms, and restore him to health.

Senator Perrault: We don't want any quacks in there.

Senator Grosart: That was an unfortunate intervention by the Leader of the Government. Talking of quack remedies, I do not suppose any government in the history of this country has ever come forward with more quack remedies than has this government. The government has come along with policy after policy, with high hopes and great predictions—such as a 4 per cent rate of inflation in this third year—none of which have worked. They were all quack remedies.

I think it was an unfortunate intervention on the part of the Leader of the Government. I have considerable sympathy with him inasmuch as he has to live with this quackery and come here so often and defend it—and defend it against some pretty good doctors that we have on this side, such as Senator Sullivan and “Doctor” Flynn.

Senator Perrault: It all amounted to malpractice when the Tories last governed.

Senator Grosart: There is no question that they are out of practice. That is one of the unfortunate happenstances that every country has to put up with.

During my remarks on the record of the last Progressive Conservative government, I expected Senator Greene to ask why it was that it did not stay in office. Unfortunately, Senator Greene is not here today. I merely say that my reply would have been—and this may be something of an indication of the immediate future—that that government was defeated, unfortunately and regrettably, partly because the value of the Canadian dollar dropped to 93 cents. It is now lower than 93 cents, and I believe that public reaction will be the same. Because of that, and because the time may not be too distant, we have some degree of optimism and will accept to that extent the urging of the Leader of the Government that we be optimistic.

● (1500)

Senator Bosa: Will the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Grosart: Of course.

Senator Bosa: I did not want to interrupt the honourable senator when he was speaking, but he referred to the increased expenditures of this government. However, he did not differentiate with respect to how much of those increased expenditures are attributable to statutory conditions which the government has nothing to do with.

Senator Flynn: On the contrary! They are responsible for those very conditions.

Senator Grosart: I have to say, first of all, that the premise of the honourable senator's question is unacceptable. He said that government expenditures were controlled by statutory provisions which the government had nothing to do with. The fact of the matter is that—

Senator Bosa: I said some of them; not all of them.

Senator Grosart: Some of them or most of them—it doesn't matter. Government expenditures cannot be made unless there are statutory provisions for them. The vast majority of the expenditures are the result of statutory provisions put through Parliament, and by this government, so I do not see why the honourable senator suggests that the government can hide behind the fact that the expenditures are statutory. Of course they are statutory. There are no other kinds of major expenditures permissible under our system.

Senator Smith (Queens-Shelburne): He is referring to statutory items in the estimates. You know what he means.

Senator Grosart: Of course I do.

Senator Flynn: But you don't understand what the reply was.

Senator Grosart: They are statutory items, of course. Why not?

Senator Smith (Queens-Shelburne): The point Senator Bosa was making is that these expenditures, or a large proportion of them, are directly related to statutory items in the estimates.

Senator Flynn: They forced Parliament to pass them.

Senator Smith (Queens-Shelburne): He was referring to statutory expenditures which the government has nothing to do with.

Senator Grosart: Of course it has, because every statute is before Parliament every year. There is nothing to stop the government from saying that the expenditure under a particular statute is more than it should be. The government should be the first to say so.

Senator Flynn: They can repeal the laws, in that case.

Senator Goldenberg: May I ask Senator Grosart a question? Can the government say, “We will not pay the interest due on the debt”? That is the sort of statutory obligation Senator Bosa was talking about.

Senator Grosart: That is far from being a statutory obligation. It is not a statutory obligation at all. The honourable senator is, I think, just guessing with his question. Interest on the debt is one of those expenditures which are not statutory, and it amounts to about 14 per cent of the total federal expenditure in any year. It is not statutory, and there are some others too.

Senator Flynn: Who borrowed the money, anyway? The government did.

Senator Bosa: I wonder if the honourable senator will permit another question. He suggested that the only reason the Conservative government was defeated in 1963—

Senator Flynn: It was one reason.

Senator Bosa: —was because of the devaluation of the dollar. Would the honourable senator not refer also to other matters such as the many resignations from the cabinet and the great dissidence within the cabinet at that time?

Senator Flynn: Not in 1962.

Senator Grosart: As I said, there are great similarities in situations between then and now. There have been some spectacular resignations from the present cabinet. I think the honourable senator is making a very good point.

Motion agreed to, and the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne adopted.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Flynn:

That the said Address be engrossed and forwarded to Her Majesty the Queen.

Motion agreed to.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Flynn:

That an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General praying that His Excellency will be pleased to transmit to Her Majesty the Queen an engrossed Address, which the Senate of Canada, in Parliament assembled, adopted in reply to Her Majesty's Speech at the opening of the Third Session of the Thirtieth Parliament.

Motion agreed to.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Flynn:

That the Address to His Excellency the Governor General, adopted this day, be engrossed and presented to His Excellency the Governor General by the Honourable the Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

THE ECONOMY

STATE OF SECONDARY INDUSTRIES IN CANADA

Senator Paul Desruisseaux rose pursuant to notice of Wednesday, October 26, 1977:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the state of secondary industries in Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, if I may be permitted, I will give the address which I had intended to present last June. I have made a few amendments to it since then.

Senator Flynn: You have up-dated it.

[Senator Grosart.]

Senator Desruisseaux: Yes, I have tried to up-date it, but it was difficult to do that because we have to keep in line with the facts.

Many of the views I will be expressing today are supported in an analysis of the condition of the Canadian industry, with special emphasis on its secondary manufacturing, which was made by the Science Council and released by it in October, and I intend to refer to that analysis. As will be noted, the Science Council explores, "solutions to deep-seated industrial problems bearing upon its capacity to innovate, to compete and to prosper economically," and, I also deduce, to give the most employment to the most Canadians.

The Economic Council as of yesterday issued its own assessment of this situation, and although I make no reference to it because I did not have time to look at it as I should have liked, I do hope that you will find time to read its analysis and the statement of concern which it made.

● (1510)

[Translation]

Our secondary manufacturing industry is in a terrible state.

In my opinion, Canadian economic advisers made a terrible mistake in evaluating what should have been done to guarantee the best possible growth. Of course it is not by sacrificing our secondary manufacturing industry to importation that we shall meet acceptable short- or long-term economic growth objectives.

Whatever we may say, free trade as we understand it is disastrous for our country if it does not also involve in return the firm guarantee of at least comparable exchange and export reciprocity. If it causes a progressive weakening of important sectors of our manufacturing industry, as is now the case in Canada, it is no longer to our advantage. The theory that we should support a systematic destruction of whole sectors of our manufacturing industry is wrong, irresponsible, damaging and perhaps even fatal for major Canadian sectors. In fact, this destruction was decided without consulting those most concerned. It goes against the best interests of our country and creates major regional disparities which are quite costly to alleviate.

The Economic Council of Canada, which recommended acceptance in the past, unfortunately did so without asking for the participation or the acceptance of the provinces involved and, I believe, without taking into consideration the economic and even the social consequences for the regional sectors concerned. The public servants who then applied this acceptance to the policy that was recommended to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, did so while knowing very well how this would hurt the economic future of major sectors and without providing a guarantee of equivalent compensating action. They also gave the public a guarantee that jobs that would be lost because of this would be replaced, which promise was never kept.

Moreover, we should certainly not have been represented at GATT by people who may be brilliant, but who belong to this same school of thought and who kept on trying to make us accept this type of damaging trade without any consideration for the harmful effects of some of their international agreements. The economic philosophy of GATT must be reviewed if we want it to serve our country. The massive admission of imports to gain the favours of certain foreign countries and to open international trade outlets is a direct cause of the deterioration of a large part of our national and regional economy, of our high unemployment, and of the large expenditures that must be added to fight against resulting new unemployment. This was for us a real national economic disaster.

To solve such problems, Australia, which is somewhat similar to our country, is now considering a white paper on relations between manufacturers and the state. This country is looking for an effective method to ensure intelligent relations between the state and its departments on the one hand, and manufacturers on the other, through an active and non-political manufacturing council which would be directly responsible to the trade minister and which would consider and analyze legislation and problems related to tariff protection or the subsidies and concessions to be made because of international agreements.

The Australian white paper also invites Canada to consider a review of its economic approach, studies and methods to develop its manufacturing economy.

The progressive destruction of major sectors of our secondary industry constitutes a serious economic heresy that should be eliminated. It undermines the very base of our economy. Maintaining the strength of our secondary manufacturing industry, as in all other industrial countries, is essential to Canada particularly at this time if we are, as required, to provide the highest employment rate possible for Canadians and to give this country the self-dependence it needs in its international trade. We must redirect and correct immediately the economic formula now used. It causes at present major damages which directly affect and delay our national economic growth. It has never achieved real, productive and good results in the Canadian economy although we were entitled to expect it. It has made its way in providing dreams to Canadians and very costly commercial baits to other countries.

We at the federal level have no right to jeopardize large segments of our economy, with overt lightness quite unjustified by our economic destiny, even under the pretence of assisting foreign countries which are in need. We are also in need and the systematic sacrifice of our secondary manufacturing industry is much too disastrous to accept it.

At any rate, at this important time in our history, the continued application of this theory will not take place without a relentless fight by the provinces concerned and without a deep and important response on the part of hundreds of thousands of Canadian workers. They find themselves on forced leave on a permanent basis, being therefore plunged into some kind of submissiveness or misery and faced with the indignity of being unemployed, under false pretences, such as to argue that we must assist foreign countries in need and that it is now important in this country to allow massive transfers of unemployed people so that they find a job elsewhere, without being concerned with the social and economic effects it will have on those families who live in the affected areas, while creating new economically unproductive and weak regions which the state will have to subsidize and help for ever after.

[English]

The economists, the manufacturers, the industrialists and, recently, some of our ministers, are warning us of a possibly much larger collapse of our present national economy. For sure there are reasons presently for streamlining and modernizing our economic philosophy along more realistic and more practical lines, both domestic and international. For sure there is in our economy an urgent and direct need for a much stronger labour-intensive manufacturing sector which can add value to resources and which can create wealth, which is synonymous with productivity. Growth of productivity can improve our national standard of living and fill more quickly the gap in our economy. It will soon be realized that forcing our dollar value down, thus making Canada poorer, is a very expensive and a very uncertain way to make our Canada competitive on the world markets. Productivity is value added, and we know it is highly important in manufacturing. Improvements in national productivity come in large part from goods-producing industries and from manufacturing in particular.

● (1520)

This is the sector that has the greatest ability to apply capital and where the greatest potential for economies of scale and specialization can be found. It is the employment incomes and wealth created by manufacturing and their producing industries that provide most of the support for our vast service industries.

Secondary manufacturing upgrades our natural and other resources into consumable products; it creates much of the employment and incomes upon which the other sectors rest; and it has the best ability to achieve productivity gains and thus improve our standard of living. These are good enough reasons to protect and support secondary manufacturing when needed, but this is not what has been done efficiently nor is it being done efficiently now.

Some 20 per cent—it used to be appreciably more—of Canada's domestic products come from manufacturing. This figure is well below that of most other industrialized countries, and it is certainly below the figure of 32 per cent which is the average of our six major trading partners. Yet, Canadian manufacturing provides for 40 per cent of our total employment in Canada. Our manufacturing has now declined to a 20 per cent share of our gross domestic product, and thus Canada stands tenth among the 12 industrialized nations of the world. Canada created this situation. It is a very bad performance in an area that would yield more jobs, and it results from economic theories that have been unwisely promoted.

No other country permits such a large chunk of its domestic markets to be serviced by imports. Textile imports now constitute 55 per cent of our domestic market, after taking into account the recent restrictive quotas.

Economists point out that other factors contributing to the poor results in our national economy can be listed as follows:

1. Wage and salary escalation
2. Canada's strike record
3. Canada's last year's productivity performance
4. Canada's inflation performance
5. The high cost of governments in Canada at all levels
6. The overvalued exchange rate
7. The import competition
8. The high cost of doing business in Canada
9. All considered, Canada's poor profit performance
10. The prevailing general climate of uncertainty

Honourable senators, we know pretty well what is wrong and we can do something about it in most of these areas at little economic cost. Here are just a few facts explaining the factors adversely affecting the Canadian economy:

1. Wages are reported to be 21 per cent higher here than those in the U.S.
2. In pulp and paper, wages are said to be up to 25 per cent above those in the U.S.
3. In beverage and food industries, wages are some 11 per cent above those in the U.S.

In Canada the average manufacturing employee is 17 per cent less productive than the average U.S. employee, and he is paid 10 per cent more to produce 17 per cent less. Canadian unit labour costs are 27 per cent higher than in the U.S. Labour costs are one-third of total manufacturing costs, and this discrepancy, I am informed, amounts to about a 10 per cent cost disadvantage for a Canadian producer compared to his U.S. counterpart.

Honourable senators, here are some facts on our Canadian strike record: In 1974, 2,600 man-days per thousand Canadian workers were lost in strikes, according to the ILO. We are told it was the world's worst strike record. It compared badly with the strike record of the United States, which lost 1,480 man-days in strikes per thousand employees. Our record was much worse than any of the other industrialized nations we deal with. There were small improvements in 1975 and in 1976, but the record remained bad. This serious unfavourable factor also contributes to our deteriorating productivity performance. This should now be re-examined in the light of the record of the best performing countries, and corrected.

Manufacturing output is hurt by allowing dumpings and damaging low-cost imports away above a reasonable percentage of the total Canadian consumption. Productivity and employment in the manufacturing sector is lowered appreciably. I believe that imports should never be above 25 to 30 per cent of the total national consumption of any product in any field of manufacturing in any country, and in some cases even less. This 25 to 30 per cent limit for imports should be a national policy.

[Senator Desruisseaux.]

We also know that some 60 per cent of the GNP coming out of the service industries, the highest figure in the industrialized world—

[Translation]

Senator Deschatelets: Honourable Senator Desruisseaux, would you allow me a question?

Senator Desruisseaux: Of course.

Senator Deschatelets: You have just said that according to you, or the secondary industries, imports should be limited to no more than 25 or 30 per cent.

Could you then tell us what they amount to at this point in time, today, or in this month and for the last six months? You say that imports, according to you, should not exceed 25 to 30 per cent in a given sector, let us say textiles. What would you say they represent at this time in the textile industry?

Senator Desruisseaux: I thank Senator Deschatelets for his question. It is interesting. But, to give a complete answer, I should consult the statistics, the reports which are put out, to know exactly what that percentage is. I know that, with regard to textiles, they now represent 55 per cent. We are told that in the field of footwear, and gloves, it is even worse. But, as far as the most recent figures are concerned, I am afraid I cannot enlighten you completely. The concept I have—

Senator Denis: The quantity does not change the percentage.

Senator Desruisseaux: Not at all.

Senator Denis: It is the percentage that is interesting.

Senator Desruisseaux: That is why I say that if we had a limit of 25 to 30 per cent, which we could allow to develop trade, the problems we now have with unemployment would not exist. If you wish, Senator Deschatelets, I could try to get those percentages again. They exist.

● (1530)

[English]

We also know that some 60 per cent of the GNP coming out of the service industries, the highest figure in the industrialized world, affects Canadian productivity averages because it has a slower rate of growth and does not create comparative employment. Yet, it has a very direct effect on our economic future and our national standard of living.

In my opinion, it is not worth sacrificing labour-intensive secondary manufacturing for a Canadian unilateral free trade policy that will hurt both our employment and our economic stability.

[Translation]

The textile industry, our most vulnerable industry, which I mentioned earlier, was the first victim of the first stage of the program aimed at its progressive and systematic elimination. As we can see so far, it results in bankruptcies, particularly in the large areas of my province where it was located, in human misery, instability and dissatisfaction among thousands of unemployed. Then there are other industries—footwear, gloves, furniture, rubber, electronics and chemical. Others are following that trend and are doomed to a future of misery, unemployment, economic instability against which the federal government shall also have to fight at a tremendous cost after having itself somehow created that malaise because of such a wrong economic policy in a young growing country with new economic needs.

[English]

Between 1970 and 1976, job creation fell short of requirements by 30 per cent. Such deficiencies, honourable senators, have far-reaching consequences. Moreover, I am informed that there will be a need for at least 180,000 new jobs by 1980. This is no longer a time to be working on an antiquated free trade policy—it is passé—that would actually contribute to a phasing-out of our most labour-intensive industries, and would thereby increase unemployment, costs of welfare, and losses of tax revenues. The benefits would be very small and unstable gains.

Some have advocated another devaluation of the dollar as a correction for the monstrous unfavourable economic setup that had been created for us. I say, however, that devaluation is not a basic or lasting solution. In the opinion of some, it would provide, at most, a short breathing spell, and perhaps give us time to devise better and more lasting solutions. It is a short-term arrangement that would be costly to us.

A few months ago, Mr. A. D. Amery, an economist from Dupont, and Mr. J. E. Newall, Vice-Chairman of the Textile Institute and a manufacturer in his own right, addressed the National Defence College on the importance of manufacturing. They listed the following as better and more permanent solutions for our economic ills:

First, and foremost, total public spending by all levels of government must be rigorously controlled.

Second, improved productivity must be our main concern.

Third, we must follow immediately the tax pattern of the United States, which has a more generous investment tax credit. It is 5 per cent in Canada, and 10 per cent in the United States.

Fourth, we must have a tax system no more onerous than that of the United States.

Fifth, we must make some needed changes in the area of Canada's commercial policy.

Policy changes are needed in such areas as the exchange rate, commercial policy, competition policy, taxes, government regulations, and in the general attitude toward business and profits. It was, and is, very wrong not to consult more with business before making major changes in national policies or programs. More constructive consultation can be carried out by the government without relinquishing any of its responsibilities for final decisions and their implementation. A free trade concept should not be accepted without an assurance of receiving in exchange an immediate and at least equivalent economic compensation in foreign trade.

● (1540)

We should at no time make concessions at the expense of our labour-intensive manufacturing sector, a sector which offers rewards of greater economic growth and more social stability and employment, both of which are necessary for a growing country such as Canada. There is an urgent need for the establishment of a much better working relationship between Canadian manufacturers and the federal authorities. A more realistic economic restructuring must be achieved—this time with the help of industry and labour—in order that we do not miss the coming upswing in the general world economy.

I should like to quote from the conclusions of the Science Council's analysis of the condition of Canadian industry, with emphasis upon secondary industry, as follows:

1. Policies which were intended to promote growth through import substitution have at best promoted a superficial, stunted form of industrialization. Worse, such policies were allowed to exist long after their original limited utility was exhausted. For a long time they have achieved the opposite of import substitution—namely, export substitution. Import substitution contributed to a growing economic dependency of Canada on larger centres of power: export substitution is an expression of how that dependency can be exploited once it is firmly established.

2. . . . It is now clear that the very rapid growth rates in population and labour force . . . obscured the actions of important detrimental forces in Canada's economy; they created an environment of dangerous complacency.

3. . . . The Canadian manufacturing sector is becoming an arena of surplus production in a period of shrinking markets for the industrial nations.

4. . . . It is to their economic advantage [speaking of transnationals] to "prune some fat" from their foreign operations sooner and to a greater degree than from their operations in the country of origin. This proclivity may well be strengthened by government policies and initiatives in the countries of the parent organizations.

5. . . . A poor business climate in Canada can be reduced to one essential ingredient, the perception of a climate less favourable than in the United States . . . Canada cannot [and, if it wants to protect itself, I would say must not] depart far from the conditions and policies that exist in the U.S.

I remain of the opinion that we must now assure better, safer, and more realistic economic decisions for the implementation of better and more rational structures for our long- and short-term national and international economic plans, which are so important for our future.

In the recent very informative submission "Agenda for Action" by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association there are a number of points made which should be mentioned. Time, however, does not permit this, and I shall quote only briefly from that submission, as follows:

The potential for job creation in manufacturing is very large, although in recent years this potential has not been realized. As to the future, economists are pointing to the growing evidence that the primary extractive service and construction industries will not create a sufficient number of jobs to absorb the growth of the labour force. The estimated 500,000 shortfall in new jobs in the next 10 years must be filled by the manufacturing sector. Manufacturing has this potential—provided our present problems are overcome.

The submission "Agenda for Action" also states:

Only a cooperative effort by industry, labour and government will bring our costs in line with our major trading partners. Only then will Canadian manufacturers compete and grow and provide their large share of the jobs needed at this time of emergency.

We can ill-afford to waste time debating which party is at fault. The need to "renovate" the institutions and the need to improve our relations is obvious.

Recently, there has been government recognition of the need to review our national economic policies. It is now to be hoped that this reviewing can be done firmly, and that it will rectify the weaknesses of our economic policies so that the interests of all Canadians can be served to their best economic advantage. That should be our highest priority this session. It is a vital goal, and its importance to our nation transcends all other national programs.

● (1550)

[Translation]

Hon. Pietro Rizzuto: Honourable senators, I wish to congratulate Senator Desruisseaux for his very important speech, especially in the light of the present situation and the concerns shared by all Canadians today. There is serious talk about improving the economic situation of our secondary industry, and also perhaps of all industries in our field of specialization in Canada.

I believe that the present trend should be reversed precisely in order to avoid ending with an economic disaster and a considerable decline which at that time would lead us to such unemployment rates that it would be difficult in the coming years to reverse the situation. We might then find ourselves in the disastrous predicament which some European countries have experienced already.

Nowadays, unlike during the past years, the demands of our industrial workers are very high and, just as Senator Desruisseaux mentioned, our prices are no longer competitive with those of other countries throughout the world. I for one feel that if we are to succeed we must change the trend and in order to do so today, if a corporation suffers from a slow down in its sales, it may result for instance in some 10 per cent of its employees not having anything to do. Then the government is called to the rescue. It works out agreements to keep everybody working; instead of working some 40 hours, the employees are asked to work only 35 hours so that everybody keeps his job. From a humanistic point of view this may be right but then we must bear in mind that the prices of our products go up, our industries ask for subsidies and some form of government help to remain competitive with other countries. What it all boils down to, is that the government ends up paying, either by subsidizing the industry or by handing out unemployment insurance benefits.

[Senator Desruisseaux.]

I say that perhaps we should suffer the brunt of such percentages of employees out of work to whom the government must pay benefits so that they can subsist. However, workers who retain their positions within their firm should not be asked to work 35 instead of 40 hours. On the contrary they should perhaps be required to work 45 hours for the same salary they used to get when they were working 40 hours. It is difficult to ask that from people because nobody likes to be asked to work more. Yet it is useless to keep repeating that we must tighten our belts if we do not take the necessary means and start telling Canadians they must work and produce if we really want to produce and sell abroad in order to meet the price requirements of the international market. That is the only way we can get the cost of our goods to go down and make headway in world markets. That is how, finally, we can get back to work the people who have been living off the government temporarily. And talking about living, unemployment insurance is definitely a means that allows workers and the unemployed to live.

As for me, I feel the current unemployment insurance program should be modified so that help is given to people who really need it and not everybody. It is a known fact that some people work seven to ten months a year, earning from $15,000 to $20,000, then claim and get from $2,000 to $4,000 a year in benefits. Everyone pays in of course, and when a worker becomes unemployed he must get benefits from it. He must, just like everyone else. But we should also consider the fact that on the whole Canadian workers earn less than $10,000 a year and that the vast majority of those Canadians work 52 weeks a year.

Personally, I feel there is some imbalance because the great majority of Canadians who work all year long to earn $8,000, $9,000 or $10,000 pay unemployment benefits to people working only seven, eight or ten months each year to earn $15,000, $20,000 or $25,000.

Some people might say that a system to control all this would involve the setting up of a new bureaucracy. My answer is that this could definitely be done along the same system now used for income tax. There is an even schedule and we could take as an illustration a worker who earns $10,000 a year, or even up to $15,000 if he has dependents. If he received unemployment benefits at the beginning of the year, under his income tax return he would have earned more than his range—and I am speaking of someone who may have a number of dependents, with earnings in the $15,000 range—he would have to repay the UIC benefits received at the beginning of the year. Therefore, any claimant who applies for UIC benefits in November or December and who has earned more than the allowable range should not be entitled to benefits and the commission could tell him he would not be entitled to them before the beginning of the following year. So definitely, in my view, many millions of dollars could be saved. This would put some balance, and the people working all year round would not have to pay for those earning $15,000 to $20,000 a year while working for lesser periods.

I believe we should be less generous now. In our society, we are all afraid of not being considered generous, or humane people. I am the first to wish that all Canadians can have a very good standard of living, that everybody can have everything he wants. But we must be realistic, and in the present circumstances Canadians cannot have everything when we have large annual deficits, which could definitely lead to economic disaster within five or ten years.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other senator wishes to participate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

---

THE SENATE

Thursday, November 10, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

[Translation]

REMEMBRANCE DAY

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, as we all know, tomorrow is Remembrance Day, and many of us will be laying floral tributes before cenotaphs throughout the country.

[English]

This year's services will be of particular poignancy. We will be remembering men and women who gave their lives for freedom and decency. But this year of all years we should remember that they died for a nation—Canada. For the "Van Doos" did not fight for Quebec, and neither did the troops from Ontario, the west, the Atlantic provinces or northern Canada fight for their own particular patch. All of them thought only of Canada as a whole.

So, senators, in those two minutes of silence tomorrow the best tribute we can pay the dead is to reaffirm our dedication to keeping Canada united.

Those we mourn left behind a free and united nation. That was their legacy. Their sacrifice will have been in vain if we do not keep it so.

[Translation]

Long live a united Canada.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I should like to echo the feelings expressed by the Leader of the Government who just paid tribute to those who fought for liberty and democracy on behalf of Canada. I believe, as does the Leader of the Government, that we cannot forget them. It reminds me of a verse by Victor Hugo, and I hope I am quoting him accurately:

Ceux qui pieusement sont morts pour la patrie

Ont droit qu'à leur cercueil la foule vienne et prie.

Entre les plus beaux noms leur nom est le plus beau

Toute gloire près d'eux passe et tombe éphémère.

I associate myself with the Leader of the Government under the circumstances.

[English]

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1978.

THE ESTIMATES

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) REFERRED TO NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures set out in the supplementary estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1978.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, November 15, 1977, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Honourable senators, as has become the practice, before the question on the adjournment motion is put, I shall inform you as well as I can at this time what we should expect in the Senate next week.

Second reading of Bill C-3, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada, and Bill S-2, to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act, will be moved today and the debate on these bills will continue next week. It is most likely that both bills will be referred to committee sometime during the coming week. I have been informed that we shall have another bill for introduction in the Senate in the first instance on Tuesday evening.

In addition, Honourable Senator Lamontagne will call the attention of the Senate to Volume 4 of the Report of the Special Committee on Science Policy. Senator McDonald will call the attention of the Senate to the 23rd Annual Session of the North Atlantic Assembly, held in Paris, France, in September last, and Senator Croll will proceed with his motion for the appointment of a special committee of the Senate to examine and report upon the existing retirement age policies affecting workers in both the public and private sectors and other matters relating thereto.

On Wednesday the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will meet at 9.30 a.m. to continue its study of the budget resolutions respecting income tax, and when the Senate rises there will be a meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to consider supplementary estimates (A) which were tabled today and referred to that committee. The National Finance Committee will meet again on Thursday morning at 9.30 on these estimates.

Motion agreed to.

AIR CANADA BILL, 1977

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Charles McElman moved the second reading of Bill C-3, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, you may recall that the proposed Air Canada Act, 1977, was considered in the other place during the last session as Bill C-17. Although it did not then pass through all stages in that house, it was the subject of extended study and debate, and by unanimous consent was carried forward to the current session at the report stage.

I mention this only by way of explanation as to how a bill of such great interest to parliamentarians has cleared that house and reached the Senate so expeditiously in this session.

The title of Bill C-3, "An Act respecting the reorganization of Air Canada," is properly descriptive. The reorganization in question is long overdue. For years members of the other place, the Senate, the management of Air Canada, and spokesmen in the business and financial communities, have advocated that Air Canada be removed from its subsidiary relationship to Canadian National Railways and permitted to "fly" on its own. This bill, if enacted, will accomplish that purpose.

The general objectives of the bill are, first, to create a financial basis for Air Canada similar to that of other airlines; secondly, to place Air Canada on an operational basis which will allow it to engage in those activities in which other major competing airlines are engaged, while at the same time maintaining effective government control over its activities without interfering in the day-to-day management of the corporation; and, thirdly, to ensure that Air Canada, as a crown corporation, can be required to play a part in the implementation of a national transportation policy without affecting the corporation's commercial objective of profitable operations.

Most Canadians are aware that Air Canada, initially known as Trans-Canada Air Lines, is now celebrating its fortieth anniversary. In its early years as TCA it carried some 20,000-plus passengers annually and employed about 500 persons. By 1975 it had grown from a small domestic airline to become one of the world's 10 largest, serving a broad network of domestic and international routes. During that latter year, Air Canada carried 10.4 million revenue passengers and employed some 20,000 persons.

Now that Air Canada has grown up, it is intended to enable it to operate more efficiently and effectively as a world-scale airline, and on a footing similar to that of the other major airlines with which it must compete.

Let me deal briefly with some of the more important aspects of Bill C-3. Currently, all issued shares of Air Canada are held by the CNR. It is proposed that these would be cancelled. All such shares would in future be held directly by the Minister of Transport on behalf of the Government of Canada. At present the authorized equity capital has a maximum limit of $25 million, although the actual issued capital totals only $5 million. It is difficult to relate that to the fact that the corporation's current balance sheet lists total assets in excess of $1 billion.

The current financing arrangement through the CNR has forced Air Canada to obtain most of its financing in the form of long-term debt. The result is an extreme debt-equity ratio of 97 to 3, which makes it most awkward to compare Air Canada's performance with that of its competitors. The average debt-equity ratio of other major airlines is 60/40.

Since such a debt overload by Air Canada carries an extraordinary liability for fixed interest payments against current operations, it can swing very quickly from a profit to a loss situation, depending upon variations in market and operating conditions.

Lenders in the long-term debt market are understandably cautious of such a debt-equity ratio, unless backed by government guarantees. Since it is intended that Air Canada become a more commercially oriented corporation, it is important that its debt-equity ratio be brought into a more realistic balance. Consequently, under Bill C-3 the authorized capital would be $750 million, and direct government loans or government guaranteed loans in the market would have a ceiling of an additional $750 million. The corporation would also have the authority to borrow in the market without statutory limit on its own credit in addition to the $1.5 billion provided for.

Longer term debt in excess of 18 months would require prior approval by the Minister of Finance. Short-term cash needs could be borrowed without such prior approval.

All of this will enable Air Canada to act with flexibility in arranging its necessary financing in accordance with the markets and in the highly competitive world of air travel.

It has been suggested by the Minister of Transport that some of the corporation's debt to the government and to the CNR will be converted to equity; but a ceiling of $600 million has been placed upon such conversion to ensure that it is possible to bring desirable balance to the debt equity ratio of Air Canada. If the corporation's indebtedness to the CNR were so converted to equity capital, the latter's indebtedness to the government would be adjusted accordingly.

Under this bill the new board of directors would be increased from nine to 15, to be appointed over a period of time by the Governor in Council. The chairman and the president will be appointed by order in council, following consultation with the board. Provision is also made for the establishment of an executive committee and the board will be empowered to delegate duties to it.

A wide range of activities in which Air Canada may engage is set forth specifically in the bill. However, since it is not possible to foresee, even into the near future, what developments will occur in the highly competitive airline business, provision is made for the corporation to engage in additional activities, if it has prior approval from the Governor in Council. I am sure honourable senators will agree that that is a desirable element of government control.

Although it is not the intention that the government should be involved in the day-to-day operations of the corporation, this bill provides that the Governor in Council may issue directives of a general nature to ensure that Air Canada will play its role in national transportation policy. In this latter connection, when Air Canada, as a crown corporation, is required by the Governor in Council to provide services that result in a loss, it is provided that subsidies will be paid to it from the Treasury rather than being borne by the users of the airline.

Currently, the appointed auditors of the Canadian National Railways are also the auditors of Air Canada. That arrangement will cease. This bill makes detailed provision for audit of the corporation's accounts in terms similar to those imposed on all companies incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act. The auditor is to be appointed each year by the Governor in Council.

As honourable senators are aware, Air Canada has enjoyed, during its growing-up period, a privileged or protected position under the Air Canada contract and related provisions of the Aeronautics Act. That protection will disappear. Henceforth, if this bill is approved, Air Canada will be required to operate on two basic criteria: good business practice in open competition and with a clear eye to profitability.

Although no change is immediately planned in those routes which it is currently licensed to operate, the acquiring of other routes in future will require that Air Canada compete with other interested carriers by application to the Canadian Transport Commission. Air Canada really came of age some years ago, and it is proposed by this bill that it now do so in legislative terms as a separate crown corporation. If and when the Senate approves second reading, it will be my intention to move that it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications. In that committee its complex provisions can be scrutinized carefully and appropriate witnesses, such as the Minister of Transport and the President of Air Canada, may be called for questioning.

● (1420)

Honourable senators, I commend Bill C-3 for your approval.

On motion of Senator Smith (Colchester), debate adjourned.

CANADA BUSINESS CORPORATIONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Daniel A. Lang moved the second reading of Bill S-2, to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act.

He said: Honourable senators, initially I would like to say a few words by way of background. What I have to say is interesting because it reflects favourably upon the performance of this chamber and its committees.

It will be recalled that on February 4, 1975 Senator Hayden moved the second reading of Bill C-29, the Canada Business Corporations Bill. At that time he described the provisions of the bill with his usual exactitude and clarity. If honourable senators wish to refresh their memory as to the nature and extent of that legislation, I can do no better than refer them to Senator Hayden's remarks, which are to be found in volume I of the Debates of the Senate, First Session, Thirtieth Parliament, at page 489. I cannot, nor will I try to, emulate Senator Hayden in the dissertation which he gave at that time. He described the bill as an excellent one, and one which marked a notable advance in the position of federally incorporated business corporations.

Of particular interest is the fact that on that same day, Bill C-29 received second reading and was referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. On March 19, 1975, following lengthy study, the bill was reported to the Senate with 27 amendments. The report was adopted, and the bill, including the 27 amendments, received third reading and was referred back to the House of Commons. I am pleased to remind honourable senators that on March 24, 1975, just four days after the bill received third reading in the Senate, Madam Speaker informed the chamber that the House of Commons had agreed to the Senate amendments without further amendment.

That, in my view, is a prime example of the effective work done by this house and its committees, and the minister responsible for the legislation, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and his officials, were most satisfied with what was done here.

It is well over two years since the Canada Business Corporations Act was passed, and experience has now been gained with regard to its administration and effectiveness. By and large there have been few administrative complications. The statute has been well received both by lawyers and accountants who have to deal with it, and also by businessmen. That is really not a self-serving statement, and as evidence I should mention that the number of federal incorporations has increased from 1,800 annually in 1971, under the preceding legislation, to 5,000 annually in 1976 under the statute now in force. In other words, the number has tripled. Nothing could be more concrete proof of the worth of this piece of legislation.

It is also a real pleasure to report that the streamlined procedures made possible by that act of 1975, and the elimination of many anachronistic formalities that so many lawyers were familiar with under the old act, combined with a computerization of the search system, has enabled the corporations branch to deal with approximately three times its previous workload, with shorter delays and, what is indeed good news, no substantial increases in resources. Indeed, it is a very refreshing draft in these times of bureaucratic overkill and mounting costs in our public service. Some provincial governments are now copying the provisions of the Canada Business Corporations Act, and the mechanisms that are embodied in it. The objectives of modernizing our federal corporate law, and of creating a model piece of legislation to increase the uniformity of laws across Canada, are being achieved through that act.

I will come now, if I may, to Bill S-2 itself. Notwithstanding what I have said, it is to be expected that such a completely new act as that of 1975 would require some amending after two years, to eliminate unforeseen conflicts between sections, and also to fill logical gaps in the system that have become apparent during the administrative period of the last two years.

What Bill S-2 does is propose some 78 amendments which are purely technical changes, suitable, really, only for study in committee, and not amenable to a long, explanatory process in this house on second reading. I should say, however, that I have been through these clauses, and I find them all most sensible, objective and reasonable, and I might, in addition, say that they are untainted by the oppressive zeal, the latent paternalism, that has all too often characterized so much of the legislation presented here recently, and, indeed, some of the legislation that has emanated from the self-same department, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

I know that many honourable senators must have cringed when they first picked up Bill S-2 with its almost 200 pages, but I would like to relieve your minds immediately by observing that all of the bill is contained in the first 33 pages of this large volume. The remainder, and by far the bulk of it, is a new French version that is not, as heretofore, a mere translation of the English version, but, to the greatest extent possible, is a statement of the law in French that employs the language and concepts that are familiar to members of the Quebec Bar.

Senator Flynn: Not only of the Quebec Bar.

Senator Lang: Well, any other Bar that uses the French language.

● (1430)

This new French version is as a result of an undertaking given by the Department of Justice and the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs at the time of the passage of Bill C-29 in 1975. Lawyers in the Legislation Section who have worked on this for the last two years, deserve our heartiest commendation. They went through numerous screenings of the draft with experts in both the legal and accounting fields. Any lawyer who has at least a nodding acquaintance with the distinctions between the common law and the civil law systems of this country will acknowledge that their task was an arduous one, and I want to thank them on behalf of you all for their accomplishment.

Senator Flynn: May I put a question to the honourable senator?

Senator Lang: Please do.

Senator Flynn: Will this French version have a retroactive effect?

Senator Lang: I am presuming that there will be no legal distinction between the French version that heretofore existed and the one we are now considering, but I would like to leave that to one who is far more learned than I am in this bill as expressed in his native language.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): May I ask a question of Senator Lang?

Very often, in the interpretation of statutes like this, if there is a conflict between the English and the French version, the courts try to resolve it by seeing that the accommodation can be made. Will it be possible to obtain assurance from the officials, for example, that there really is, in their view, no conflict between the French version and the English version of the bill? In other words, we do not want to have two laws on the statute books on the same point.

Senator Lang: I am afraid I can make no commitment that such assurance will be forthcoming. I think the question will have to be put to those officials who are familiar with both the French version and the English version when they appear before the committee. That is quite beyond my limited unilingual legal expertise.

At the same time that the bill was going through the House of Commons in 1975, the Legal Affairs Committee of that house exacted another undertaking from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. They asked that the act be brought back before the legislature within a reasonably short time because of concern that the very sweeping changes being effected would likely bring about problems for lawyers, businessmen and auditors. They felt that any such problems should be dealt with at the earliest possible opportunity.

This undertaking has been observed by the introduction of Bill S-2, and I am pleased to say that there have been no major substantive objections to the provisions of the 1975 act which have caused any dislocation in our legal business or accounting processes.

The Commons committee was also quite concerned over the broad powers of regulation, granted by the act at that time under section 187, with respect to stock exchange takeover bids. This was a controversial policy issue at the time, and I assume it still is today. However, the government recommends that control in this area continue to be exercised by regulation and, at this time, considers that that is the only practicable way of maintaining the maximum possible uniformity between our federal laws, our provincial security laws, and the by-laws of the various stock exchanges involved.

● (1440)

I recognize that members of both this and the other chamber will be pleased that no substantial problems have arisen under the act of 1975. However, there is one that should be mentioned. One problem is dealt with by Bill S-2, and I suppose this amendment to the 1975 act could be termed a major substantive change. It has to do with the reintroduction in this bill of what was known under the old company law as the "arrangement concept", and which, prior to 1970 or 1968, most lawyers in Ontario and in other provinces were quite familiar with.

This arrangement concept was deliberately omitted from the 1975 act. It was omitted, first, because the departmental officials felt that it was unnecessary and that all major corporate changes could be effected under the provisions of the act—those provisions that dealt with amendments, amalgamations, continuances and dissolutions—and that these should be sufficient.

Secondly, they felt that the sections dealing with the old arrangement technique could possibly be used by some corporations to circumvent the interests of minority shareholders. However, I would say that experience has shown that the ephemeral complexities of the corporate fiction will forever defy the ingenuity of legislative draftsmen to pin them down, define them, or contain them. Ever since the famous case—one that all lawyers know by heart—of Solomon vs. Solomon of some 100 years ago, nobody has ever seen, felt, heard, or touched a corporation, but half the efforts of legislators and taxgatherers today is spent in trying to catch and confine that animal, or extract money from that beast. The notion is so firmly embedded in our communal conscience that we forget that a corporation is merely the aggregate of rules governing the conduct of people engaged in a common pursuit.

In Bill S-2 the arrangement concept is brought back into legislation by the proposed new section 185.1, subsection (3) of which reads:

Where it is not practicable for a corporation that is not insolvent to effect a fundamental change in the nature of an arrangement under any other provision of this Act, the corporation may apply to a court for an order approving an arrangement proposed by the corporation.

So, alas, when our ingenuity runs out, we have to put the problems before our poor judges.

As far as it is possible to protect dissident shareholders under an arrangement technique, this bill does so. It provides that the applicant to the court must prove that no other technique under the act is available to him, and that the dissenting shareholder can maintain his dissent notwithstanding such an application.

Honourable senators, I shall mention only by reference, and just by example, some of the more minor substantive changes.

● (1450)

There is a provision reintroducing restriction on voting rights for certain classes of shares and the power to impose them.

It provides for the continuing reference to par value shares—par value shares that were created before the act of 1975.

It limits the right of a director to indemnity in the case where he incurs costs defending himself and is successful in defending himself, but where that success depended purely upon a technical defence, such as the statute of limitations or some other technical defence of that nature, his absolute right to indemnity disappears.

There is a deletion or a removing of the limitation placed on the courts in evaluating a minority shareholder's interest. That limitation, as it exists at present, is found in the law relating to the expropriation of land, namely, the value of the land being expropriated cannot be enhanced by virtue of the act of expropriation itself. That provision is in the present corporate law, eliminating that part of the evaluation, so that the actual resolution or the act of expropriation of a minority interest cannot be considered in evaluating the amount to be paid to the expropriated shareholder. This change is in conformity with some recent court decisions under provincial acts, and consequently by the elimination of this restriction there is a move toward total uniformity across Canada.

Under the present act there is a power in directors to impose any kind of restriction on the transfer of shares. That has been found to be impractical, so a limitation has been placed upon that power of the directors, and they can now only limit the transferability of shares to comply with nationality restriction of ownership, such as with a broadcasting company or with respect to other ordinances or laws of the country that require such a restriction.

Honourable senators, I must say that there are 73 other amendments in addition to the five I have mentioned, and I do not intend to refer to them this afternoon. It is certainly the task of a committee to look at them. However, like those that I have referred to, they all appear to me to be most reasonable and necessary, and I think the members of this house and the committee will agree with me, by and large, when they have had an opportunity to study them.

In conclusion, I should like to draw your attention to a paper on the amendments contained in this bill which was delivered to our desks yesterday. It is a very useful reference work for honourable senators when dealing with the bill itself. The table of concordance has three minor errors, which I will not detail. If you find it ends up with 75 and not 78 clauses, you will realize that three are missing. The important part is the summary of the amendments, which comprises the bulk of the paper, and which I commend to your attention for study before the committee hearings.

If this bill receives second reading, honourable senators, I intend to move that it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, which, of course, is the committee that, back in 1975, dealt with the act this bill is amending.

Senator Grosart: I wonder if the honourable senator would indicate the exact nature of the errors he has found in the document he referred to.

Senator Lang: After the reference to clause 4 there should be a reference to section 12(3); after clause 14 there should be a reference to section 41(1); after clause 66 there should be a reference to section 235(4).

On motion of Senator Grosart, for Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 15, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 15, 1977

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

CANADA NON-PROFIT CORPORATIONS BILL

FIRST READING

Senator Langlois presented Bill S-3, respecting Canadian non-profit corporations.

Bill read first time.

Senator Langlois moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Langlois tabled:

Copies of the Report of the Anti-Inflation Board, dated October 26, 1977, to the Governor in Council, pursuant to section 17(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, reporting its reference to the Administrator of the said Act of proposed changes in compensation plan between Carleton University and its Security Group employees.

Report by the Tariff Board respecting Fresh and Processed Fruits and Vegetables, Volume 1, Part II, Commodity Reports: Fresh Vegetables, Reference No. 152, pursuant to section 6 of the Tariff Board Act, Chapter T-1, R.S.C., 1970.

Revised Capital Budget of Air Canada for the year ending December 31, 1977, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1977-3077, dated October 27, 1977, approving same.

Report of the Administrator of the Maritime Pollution Claims Fund for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 747 of the Canada Shipping Act, Chapter S-9, as amended by Chapter 27 (2nd Supplement), R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Report of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting compensation plan between the Health Labour Relations Association of British Columbia, Vancouver, British Columbia, and the group of its operating and maintenance engineers, represented by the International Union of Operating Engineers, Local 882. Order dated November 8, 1977.

Reports of the Department of Veterans Affairs and of the Canadian Pension Commission for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 8 of the Department of Veterans Affairs Act, Chapter V-1, and section 4(2) of the Pension Act, Chapter P-7, R.S.C., 1970, including reports of the Pension Review Board, the War Veterans Allowance Board and the Bureau of Pensions Advocates for the same period.

AGRICULTURE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE EXPENSES TABLED

Senator Argue, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, which was authorized by the Senate on November 16, 1976 to examine from time to time any aspect of the agricultural industry in Canada and to incur special expenses in connection with any such examination, tabled, pursuant to rule 84, the expenses incurred by the committee in connection therewith during the Second Session of the Thirtieth Parliament.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit while the Senate is sitting tomorrow, Wednesday, November 16, 1977, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

● (2010)

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Senator Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator McDonald be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Ewasew on the list of senators serving on the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

AIR CANADA BILL, 1977

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS UNTIL LATER THIS DAY

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator McElman, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bosa, for the second reading of the Bill C-3, intituled: "An Act respecting the reorganization of Air Canada".—(Honourable Senator Smith (Colchester)).

Senator Flynn: Stand until later this day.

Order stands.

CANADA BUSINESS CORPORATIONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, November 10, the debate on the motion of Senator Lang for second reading of Bill S-2, to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, there is very little that I can add to what the sponsor of the bill has said with respect to Bill S-2. I listened to most of his speech but had to leave a few minutes before he concluded. However, I read through his entire speech today and I am entirely satisfied that this is the type of legislation which should be dealt with in committee. He reminded us that the act had come into force a little more than two years ago and that now we are dealing with amendments meant to solve some of the problems which have arisen since then. This is entirely normal because the Canada Business Corporations Act was quite a departure from what we had been used to prior to the date of its coming into effect. It is the wish to bring back a few provisions and to correct a few others. These are very technical problems which do not lend themselves to debate, but rather to questioning in committee. Therefore, beyond congratulating Senator Lang for a very able presentation, I do not believe that I can add much at this time before the committee has dealt with the specific problems presented to us by the bill. I would therefore be very happy to see this bill receive second reading now and be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a third time?

Senator Langlois moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

AIR CANADA BILL, 1977

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, November 10, the debate on the motion of Senator McElman for second reading of Bill C-3, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada.

Hon. George I. Smith: Honourable senators, I thank you for your kindness and indulgence in allowing me to speak now, after my late arrival this evening. My only explanation—and it certainly is not an excuse, because there is no excuse for not arriving when one should—is that I was absorbed in a discussion with the Ambassador of the United States to Canada, and did not realize that time was passing by so quickly.

When I arrived I noticed, much to my surprise, that some of my colleagues who played important parts at that meeting had managed to note the time better than I had. In any event, I offer my apologies and I thank you for your indulgence in allowing me to speak now.

Honourable senators, I have a few remarks to make with respect to the Air Canada bill. In fact, I feel rather strongly about some of them, but perhaps it would be better to speak to some of the other points first.

Senator McElman certainly gave a clear explanation of the bill when he moved its second reading. I congratulate him on it. He made no attempt, in any way, to divert our attention from the essential provisions of the bill, even though he knew some of us, such as myself, might find parts of it somewhat objectionable. I assure you, honourable senators, that I am not going to object very strongly, and I shall not detain you an inordinate length of time on this.

I am certainly in complete agreement with what might be classified as the main objective of the bill—that is, to get Air Canada out from under the umbrella of Canadian National Railways. In fact, I am of the opinion that it should have been done a long time ago. Although it was probably a logical arrangement in the 1940s, I believe it has inhibited the activities and, indeed, the growth of Air Canada—I do not mean growth in a physical sense, but growth in being its own corporate self—for some years.

● (2020)

I welcome that particular provision. I think it is a good thing. I must confess that I had not thought of doing it myself sooner. Perhaps it should have been done many years ago. Whatever one might say about a corporation such as Air Canada, it seems to me that any enterprise so large and so important to the country should not be under the direction of another corporation. Air Canada itself means so much to Canadians and to the economy of our country that surely it is entitled to operate completely in its own right, subject only to Parliament. If this bill is passed—and I confidently expect it will—that will be accomplished.

While I am in favour of this provision, I do have to draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that clause 6 will allow the corporation to engage in a much broader scope of activities than is currently the case. It does not require a careful reading of clause 6 to realize that, if passed, it would allow the corporation to extend its operations over a much greater area.

Clause 6(1)(a) authorizes the corporation to "establish and operate the business of an air carrier." The clause, however, rapidly goes on to extend the operations of the corporation into many fields, some of which encompass a very high degree of risk, such as that of operating hotels. There are only a few organizations in the world which are able to operate hotels on a profitable basis. With that in mind, I am not at all sure that we would be well advised to encourage Air Canada to get into the hotel business. I do not know of any business in which one can lose more money more quickly than the hotel business. Although it may be desirable to have Air Canada given this authority—and I am doubtful about that—I should think it would take the most careful consideration by the board of directors before any such authority is exercised.

The establishment of travel agencies, I suppose, falls somewhat naturally under the umbrella of the operations of an organization so wide flung and so vigorous—and I use the word “vigorous” intentionally—as Air Canada.

But I find it very difficult to see the justification for the powers given under subparagraph (g). Clause 6 is headed “Capacities and activities of the Corporation”. Subparagraph (g) states:

—acquire and hold shares or debt obligations of any other body corporate carrying on activities similar or incidental to those of the Corporation and sell or otherwise deal with such shares or debt obligations;—

While the draftsmen may know what limitations are to be placed on that power, I do not. It seems to me that subparagraph (g) gives to Air Canada a wide power which is not subject to parliamentary control. It may be that if we want to make it a completely free corporation to allow it to compete with private corporations, it should have that power. But I have some grave doubts about that power, and we should be careful in committee to make sure that we understand what it means and what it can allow Air Canada to do. In view of what I shall have to say later about some of the other powers given to Air Canada, and if I am right about those other things, then this is more important than you or I might recognize at first glance.

I am sure honourable senators will not be at all surprised if I take some issue with the powers given to the Governor in Council in this statute. I would direct attention particularly to what I think is the extraordinary power given by clause 6(2) on page 3 of the bill:

The Governor in Council may, by order, authorize the Corporation to engage in or carry on any activities not otherwise authorized by this Act.

Let me read it again, honourable senators:

The Governor in Council may, by order, authorize the Corporation to engage in or carry on any activities not otherwise authorized by this Act.

Now that, to me, honourable senators, means one thing, that there is no scope of activities which one can envisage which the Governor in Council cannot give to Air Canada, notwithstanding the fact that this legislation is supposed to deal with Air Canada and is supposed to set out its powers, its obligations and its duties.

I may have seen such a provision somewhere else in the substantial number of years during which I have been reading statutes, but I cannot recall one where the power given was so broad. Let me read it again, a third time, because I want to drive it home. I want to make the point, and it is a point that I realize may be refuted later, because I may be wrong, as to what I believe this subclause does:

The Governor in Council may, by order, authorize the Corporation to engage in or carry on any activities not otherwise authorized by this Act.

To me, honourable senators, that simply means that one day the Governor in Council can say, “Let me see now, Air Canada should be running some railways. The CNR is not doing very well or perhaps CPR or VIA are not doing very well, so let us get Air Canada running the railroads.” Or perhaps it might say, “The shipping on the Great Lakes is not what it ought to be so let us authorize Air Canada to run that.” Or, “We are not satisfied with the way the wheat is being brought down from the Lakehead, so Air Canada should be concerned in that.” I have looked at this with such modest care as I am able to give to it myself, and I cannot think of any activity that you or I can envisage that the Governor in Council cannot authorize Air Canada to engage in under this act, and I cannot think of any provisions more contrary to the principles of parliamentary authority and responsibility to Parliament than those contained in this kind of legislation.

I am sure you realize the particular difficulty it gives me to say this, but it seems to me that the committee to which this bill is referred ought to devote a great deal of its consideration to this very point, with a view to seeing whether the suggestions I make as to the power given by this subclause are correct. It seems to me that any chamber of sober, second thought ought to look with a great deal of askance at it. It has always been my opinion in considering legislation and, in reference to any particular piece of legislation, the power given to the Governor in Council to do things, that that power has to be related to the incidental things necessary to carry out the administration of the legislation. It is foreign to all concepts of powers given to a Governor in Council to allow him to legislate—which is what this amounts to—on subjects which bear no relation to the act and which have the effect of broadening immeasurably and almost without limit the powers of the Governor in Council.

• (2030)

Another comment I should like to make has to do with a question not nearly so fundamental as this but definitely worthy of consideration, and that is the question of appointing the directors. It may well be that the Governor in Council in exercising its powers to appoint directors will make sure of regional representation. To some extent that is true today, although perhaps not to the extent that some of us would like. But it seems to me that the statute should provide that the 15 directors authorized by this act will be selected in such a way as to give regional representation so that all regions of Canada have at least some say in the way Air Canada is and should be operated. I see nothing in this act, nor to my knowledge is there anything in the present act, that makes that mandatory.

Being in some respects a pretty strongly regional person myself, perhaps this means more to me than it does to some others, but I do take the liberty of saying that I understand one of the functions of the Senate to be that senators should represent their regions. I should therefore like to make sure that all regions of Canada—including the one from which I come, which I think has some reason to complain about some things not done by Air Canada—are fully represented on the board of directors. As I have said, I do not see that anywhere in the bill.

If I may just revert to a subject I just left a moment ago, one of the powers given to Air Canada by clause 6(1)(g) is the entitlement to buy shares or lend money to other corporations of like kind. I should have mentioned this when I spoke of what I thought were the unduly wide powers given to the Governor in Council, but having omitted it then I should like to draw it to your attention now.

It seems to me that in the desire to free Air Canada from control of the Canadian National Railways and to let it try its own wings, if I may use such a term, the draftsmen have given it many more powers than it should be given, and that the question of these wide powers, as I have said before, should be carefully reviewed.

One of the fundamental sections of the bill is a good one if considered by itself, but it may not be so good when one looks at the overall picture. I refer to clause 7(1.1) which reads:

In discharging its responsibilities under this Act, the Board—shall have due regard to sound business principles, and in particular the contemplation of profit.

Meaning the board of directors.

I have no objection whatever in seeing—in fact, I have the strongest desire to see—crown corporations having regard to sound business principles and looking at profit as something reasonable to achieve and not as something reprehensible, but there is something that I do not find specifically mentioned here and which, in my opinion, should go along with such a provision. I am of the opinion that in a country like ours, with its tremendous size, all methods of long-range transportation should embrace not only the contemplation of profit but also the contemplation of the development of the country and the service rendered to its various regions.

I know there is a clause in the bill which it might be argued will take care of the latter problem, but I should like honourable senators to ask themselves whether those two principles appear to be dealt with in the bill in such a way as to give overwhelming precedence to sound business principles and profit.

Let me say again that I am in favour of sound business principles in crown corporations, and I suppose that I have raised more objection to those things that seem to me to be not in keeping with that idea than have most people; but when it comes to the question of binding the country together I have great difficulty in placing sound business principles and the contemplation of profit at a higher place in my list of priorities than the use of this transportation system as a development instrument as well as an actual service to the people of Canada. I find myself somewhat unhappy that sound business principles and the contemplation of profit are made mandatory by the bill, while the duties of Air Canada in respect of development and the provision of good service are not mentioned.

[Senator Smith (Colchester).]

● (2040)

I recognize that clauses 8 and 9, which are to be found at the top of page 6 of the bill, may be said to deal with the problem I have raised. However, I see there no obligation whatever on the Governor in Council to give any directions which will ensure that the question of development and the question of service are kept high in the priorities of Air Canada. In fact, so far as I can tell, neither the concept of development nor the concept of service is so much as mentioned in the bill, nor does any guidance seem to be given to the Governor in Council as to the principles upon which he shall give the directions to Air Canada which are authorized by clause 8. Certainly there is no guidance to the public as to what directions might reasonably be expected to be given by the Governor in Council, or what directions might reasonably be requested of the government. In fact, it seems to me, honourable senators, that taking into account the powers given to the Governor in Council under clause 6(2), which you will find on page 3 of the bill, and the powers given under clause 8—and I will read clause 8 in a moment—the Governor in Council may put the corporation into any kind of activity whatever, no matter how far removed it is from the business of running an airline, and no matter how far removed it is from the concept of development and service.

Clause 8 reads as follows:

The Corporation shall, in the exercise of its capacities and the carrying out of its activities, comply with directions of a general nature given to it in writing by the Governor in Council.

There is, however, nothing there that says what those directions shall deal with, either in principle or in detail, or what anybody may reasonably expect those directions to provide, and no restrictions whatever on what they may provide. As far as this clause is concerned, the Governor in Council may direct Air Canada to do anything that one may conceivably contemplate, and Air Canada will have to do it with no redress to anyone.

Honourable senators, I have taken a considerable amount of your time, and you have been very patient with me. I do not feel that the idea of the bill in itself is wrong—that is, I agree with setting Air Canada reasonably free to compete with other airlines in the world. In my view, Air Canada is a good airline, although I must say that when it comes to the service it provides in some parts of the Atlantic region I agree completely with Senator Graham's comment—and I am sorry he is not here—about the inadequacy of that service, and the lack of coordination with the regional carrier, Eastern Provincial Airways.

Without getting into that, however, as I say, I am glad to see Air Canada set free to compete on its own. I am glad to see conferred on it the powers contained in this bill, but I am extremely unhappy at the power of the Governor in Council to simply give this corporation carte blanche to do anything it likes. I am opposed to this for two reasons. One reason is that I do not think Parliament should delegate to anybody the right to give powers to a corporation that are not contemplated in its own legislation. The other reason is that it seems to me that this is an outgrowth of what some of us have been talking about for some time. I refer to the growing determination of draftsmen, obeying the directions of their superiors, to take power from Parliament and give it to the Governor in Council, whoever he may be. Even if—as I suspect may be the case in the near future—he is someone who is very friendly to my way of thinking, I would not like him to have that power. I hear some dissent, but honourable senators who have such confidence in their invincibility have only to reflect on the course of history to know how rudely they may be awakened. However, I do not need to give much attention to that today because I am sure, after mentioning it, everyone will recognize instantly how true the observation is.

The other objection I have is that the combination of the powers in this bill—powers given directly to Air Canada and the power given to the Governor in Council to increase them; that is, to widen its scope of activity—may very well take the corporation into fields which are not appropriate for it.

Senator Greene: Will the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Smith (Colchester): I say to my honourable friend that I am always delighted to receive questions from him because they are always so useful.

Senator Greene: The honourable senator indicated that in the present act there is no specific mandatory provision for regional representation on the board. Despite that lack of specific provision there was, in fact, no matter what government was in office, regional representation on the board. Does he have any reason to believe that the same situation will not prevail despite the lack of specific provision in this bill. I know, from his public career, that he does not tilt at windmills, but he is a pragmatist. Will not the same situation prevail despite the lack of specific wording in the present bill?

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, as I said, I always like to hear from the honourable senator because I know he will make a useful speech in the guise of a question.

Senator Flynn: Useful, but going too far.

Senator Smith (Colchester): It is useful because it gives me the opportunity to say I do not really trust any Governor in Council to do anything right.

An Hon. Senator: You have not answered the question.

Senator Smith: If I have not answered the question effectively, I will say to my honourable friend that I am not at all satisfied that one should entrust to any body of men and women, however well-intentioned they may be, something that ought to be the prerogative of Parliament, namely, ensuring that the selection of the board of directors of such an important institution as Air Canada is, in fact, made by a certain formula.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, it is my intention to move that the debate be adjourned, particularly in view of this notorious clause... As Senator Smith (Colchester) has indicated, we are faced now with this provision:

● (2050)

The Governor in Council may, by order, authorize the Corporation to engage in or carry on any activities not otherwise authorized by this Act.

I am reasonably sure that we have never been faced with a bill containing a clause giving this kind of power. It means that Air Canada can go into the porno business; it can violate all of our international obligations. It is the most absurd thing I have ever seen in a bill. This requires the very careful consideration of the Senate, and I hope we will take a long time in considering and discussing the effect of this kind of clause, which is one that could be put into any bill. It could be put into a bill affecting, for example, the Atomic Energy Commission, giving it power to do anything it wants to do.

Senator Flynn: Air Canada could become Atomic Energy.

Senator Grosart: Under this provision, they could go into the manufacture of atomic weapons. It is as clear as it could possibly be.

As I say, I intend to move the adjournment of the debate so that honourable senators will have an opportunity to read provision, to reflect on it and to discuss it, before the bill is referred to committee.

Senator Lang: May I direct one question to Senator Smith (Colchester) with respect to clause 6(2)?

I notice the wording is, "The Governor in Council may, by order, authorize the Corporation...", rather than the more usual wording, "by Order in Council authorize the Corporation...". Does the honourable senator attach any significance to that distinction?

Senator Flynn: You should know.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I wondered about that myself. I concluded that I would have to wait until committee stage to find out. But I do consider it a departure from the usual nomenclature, and I am very much interested in finding out whether it was intentional or simply a misprint. I suspect—being suspicious of the worst—that there is something to it that one does not readily see.

Senator Flynn: "By Order" is less than "order in council". It means it can be done by telephone.

On motion of Senator Grosart, debate adjourned.

RETIREMENT AGE POLICIES

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. David A. Croll moved, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, October 25, 1977:

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and report upon the existing retirement age policies affecting workers in both the public and private sectors; the social and economic implications of mandatory retirement based on age alone; the feasibility of enabling workers, especially elderly citizens, to continue to make a worthwhile contribution to our society through flexible voluntary retirement plans to the extent of their ability and motivation; the protection for those over sixty-five against age discrimination in all employment areas; and the need for the maximum cooperation of all levels of governments, labour unions, business and the public;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry; and

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place.

He said: Honourable senators, the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel of the Senate suggested that in the interests of clarity I should change the format of my motion. Therefore, with leave of the Senate and pursuant to rule 23, I would ask that my motion be modified to read as follows:

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and report upon

- (a) the existing retirement age policies affecting workers in both the public and private sectors;
- (b) the social and economic implications of mandatory retirement based on age alone;
- (c) the feasibility of enabling workers, especially elderly citizens, to continue to make a worthwhile contribution to our society through flexible voluntary retirement plans to the extent of their ability and motivation;
- (d) the protection for those over sixty-five against age discrimination in all employment areas; and
- (e) the need for the maximum co-operation of all levels of government, labour unions, business and the public in respect of existing and future retirement age policies and retirement plans;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry; and

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Croll: Honourable senators, the concern about retirement is a modern problem. At the turn of the century, few people were able to retire, and most people did not live long enough to worry about it. In those days, only two out of every 10 persons lived to be 65. Today the ratio is 7 out of ten. A man retiring at the age of 65 can expect to live another 13 years, and a woman can expect to live another 17 years, so a sixth of his or her life may be spent in retirement.

I hope women's lib will forgive me if I keep talking about "he." I mean "she" as well.

Many workers have sharp fears about retirement. They are appalled at the forthcoming shift from a regulated life to one of freedom, from a responsible job to a new role without duties, and from an environment filled with daily friendly contact to one of possible loneliness and seclusion. After a lifetime of useful, constructive activity, the thought of entering a purposeless existence is frightening. Many are fearful of aging, and they see retirement as the sudden onset of old age.

The resolution, in the main, deals with retirement age policies, and the social and economic implications of mandatory retirement based on age alone. It should be made clear that this committee is not a crusade of the old for the old. There are two sides to this coin, and there is much at stake in this for the young. It is also well to let the public know that only 56 per cent of the members of the Senate draw old age security. It is a much younger Senate than most people give it credit for.

The most persuasive arguments in favour of compulsory retirement pertain to the scarcity of jobs available and to the frustrations of younger people who are seeking advancement. Well, what brings it on? It is longer life span, inadequate pensions and high inflation. We hear voices from one end of the land to the other—clear voices—saying that the right to work to the extent of one's capacity is a fundamental human right at any age.

● (2100)

To indicate to you the importance of this subject I placed the motion on the order paper on October 25. Then I deliberately waited a little while. I had to do some research to find out a great deal more than I knew about it at the time, and I thought it would be a good thing if some honourable senators also had an opportunity to look into the matter. However, there were some people in the other place who nosed it out; it seemed to be of value to their constituents. On October 28 notice was given, and on November 7, in the private members' hour, a member of the other place, the Honourable Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West), placed the following resolution on the order paper:

That in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of enacting legislative proposals to raise the compulsory retirement age from 65 to 70 for any person aged 65 or more who does not so wish to retire and is prepared to give up his/her private pension plan or annuity.

There was a very good debate in the other place, in which all parties participated. They all approved of it. The NDP was a bit vague about the matter, as they are on some of these things. However, the others were well prepared for the debate and, in the main, Mr. Lambert and some of his supporters asked for a committee to be appointed to study the matter. You will find this at page 649 of the Commons Hansard of November 7. Of course, the hour expired and the motion was talked out. The reason I call this to your attention is to show the importance and timeliness of the problem.

I found, on examining the House of Commons private bills, a pretty large number of which they have the opportunity to put on the order paper, that eleven of them had to do with the question of the aged. I could not find out exactly what they had in mind because the bills were not ready, but the four that I was able to locate dealt with the question of age, and they will be presented in the other place in due course.

Senator Choquette: What is the average age of retirement?

Senator Croll: I will come to that in a little while.

I have outlined the problem, and one of the important things I wanted to get across to people was that we in this Senate are best suited to make such an inquiry. I could not locate any government inquiries on this subject. The only one I could find was by the Canadian Council of Social Development, which was made recently and was very useful.

I suggest, as forcibly as I can, that we in this house have a track record, and a good track record. It was in 1963, 14 years ago, that the Special Committee of the Senate on Aging, consisting of 20 members, eight of whom are still members of the Senate, made the first investigatory study in depth. So, honourable senators, the very first inquiry was made by the Senate. We heard from federal and provincial representatives, and from every sort of organization; and we had briefs from people who could not appear.

In 1966, three years later, we presented the report. It was a very good report, and a very lucky report. It fell into the mood of the time and responded to the needs. You don't turn your nose up at the opportunity to be lucky as well as good at the same time. We made 92 realistic recommendations.

In what respect was the report lucky? It was lucky in that we had at that time at the head of the Department of National Health and Welfare the Honourable Allan MacEachen. He understood what the needs of the elderly were. He came from a part of the country that was rich in culture and humanity, but always a little short of money; they were born poor and they died poor, yet they lived rich lives. We recommended that the pension age be reduced from 70 to 65, and that the pensions be augmented. Mr. MacEachen accepted that.

We were additionally lucky because the government had money in the till. The government did two things when it had money in the till recently. One was, of course, to raise the family allowance. The other was to give assistance and augment old age security. Both those things were highly commendable.

However, there was another benefit. The hearings, which extended over a period of three years and were well covered by the press, had an educational effect on the public. Canadians became more and more aware of the aging problem, and all parties joined in and, in the main, welcomed what was recommended.

On Tuesday, October 22, 1974, eight years later, I spoke to an inquiry. I remember it particularly tickled my friend sitting across the way, as he will recall. I called the attention of the Senate to "the anatomy of a special Senate committee report, and in particular to (a) its evaluation, (b) its beneficial results, and (c) as a follow-up, to a suggested future course of action for the Senate." I indicated that the report had been very successful. Much had been done on it. I had researchers in the Library ascertain what had been done on each one of the recommendations, and this is what I said as reported at page 147 of Senate Hansard of October 22, 1974:

● (2110)

Let me give you the box score—and I shall put it in the parlance of baseball rather than hockey, which is kind of dangerous around this place. In any event, it will be understood. It is as follows: Ninety-two recommendations—92 times at bat; 25 home runs; 54 singles, doubles or triples. Thirteen times struck out, but swinging.

Senator Langlois was smartening up that day, and asked, "How many stolen bases?" I could not answer that one. However, I am endeavouring to tell you that we know something about this problem. Allow me to read to you from the report for a while, and I shall have to do so rather extensively in order to make out the case. This appears at page vi of the Foreword:

Aging is a normal process that goes hand in hand with living. It is not a disease; neither is it an inborn handicap. What we see as problems of aging are the difficulties more likely to be encountered by people who have passed their 65th birthday. For those who are seeking work, we are convinced that, generally speaking problems related to age descend into the forties.

I quote another observation made at page 4 of the report:

Old people are not nearly as distinct and homogeneous a group as is sometimes imagined. Many of their needs and interests are very like those of other members of society, while in such obvious respects as income, health, cultural activities and social behaviour they vary widely among themselves. Even in the matter of age gerontologists are coming to distinguish between the young-old, the middle-aged old, and the old-old, and to recognize that these categories cannot be defined altogether in terms of years, but must take account of psychological and sociological factors.

Now, I believe that there is contained within my motion the next great social issue in this country for which, in my opinion, we should all prepare. The issue is a very clear one; what we lack is answers. Should we do away with compulsory retirement, which is now fixed at age 65? Should it be raised to age 70? Should it be flexible? Should it be voluntary? Should it be based on age and, if based on age, is that not discriminatory? Should it not be based on ability and capacity?

We in the Senate normally take a second sober look. In this instance we take the first sober look, because no one in this country has dealt with this problem up to the present time. The Government of the United States has recently done away with compulsory retirement in the federal service, with some reservation for private enterprise, particularly in the educational field. The State of California has done away with it entirely. We must bear in mind that those aged over 65 years comprise our largest single minority group, and it is growing. It is now nearly 10 per cent of the population, and society has declared that its members are old at 65. I believe that old people should have a choice, not to fill time but to use time before they die. People are not born equal, they do not act equal and they do not die equal. The immediate transition from usefulness to uselessness, from activity to a statistic, is much too much for human capacity to accept.

I remind you that during the sixties there was a revolt of the young against work. They wanted to do their own thing, so they said. Today—and we must face up to it—we are facing a revolt of the old for work, and they may even popularize the work ethic.

In recent times in this country we have been vigilant in attempting to stamp out discrimination and, in my opinion, we have had some success. Much has been done at various levels of government to ensure that certain basic rights are respected. By and large, this legislation has worked well, thanks to the common sense and goodwill of the vast majority of Canadians. The thrust of early human rights legislation was to protect against discrimination based on race and creed. More recently we have seen efforts being made to outlaw sex discrimination. That aspect of the human rights movement is still in the process of evolution, and a good deal remains to be done. The last great area awaiting to be tackled is discrimination based on age, and that is what we are dealing with today. Here we have hardly begun to move and this is the area which, in my opinion, most merits our attention today.

This is the opening gun of an idea of which the time has come, because the fact is that for a very long time age discrimination has been built into our society in many ways. One of these—and this is the main object of my motion—is the mandatory retirement age as applied to workers in both the public and private sectors. I should like permission to include in the record as an appendix the following tables: Table 1, "Retirement Age in Selected Countries"; Table 2, "Life Expectancy at Birth in Selected Countries"; and Table 3, "Flexibility of Retirement Age."

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For tables see appendix, pp. 131-132.)

Senator McIlraith: What are the sources of the tables?

[Senator Croll.]

Senator Croll: They are all from authorized agencies, and are not my own figures. The tables indicate from where I obtained them.

Senator Grosart: Would the honourable senator indicate the sources of these tables?

Senator Croll: Table 1, "Retirement Age in Selected Countries," is adopted from "The Retirement Test—an International Study," Social Security Bulletin (July 1974). Table 2, "Life Expectancy at Birth in Selected Countries," comes from the 11th Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada. Table 3, "Flexibility of Retirement Age," has as its source the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development. These sources are recognized as authorities on the subject.

The issue is not a simple one, because we are dealing with human beings in all their variety of ability and motivation. Some people look forward to retirement; others cannot wait and take early retirement; and still others are not ready to retire at any given age.

● (2120)

I should, perhaps, declare my own interest at this point. I am in the latter category, for, as long as I can make a useful contribution, I shall continue to work. I sincerely respect the views and rights of those in the other two categories, and would not wish to see those rights abrogated or abridged to the slightest degree. Clearly, what is required is some freedom of choice for the people who reach retirement age. At the present time the law states that you must retire at such and such an age. I should like to see some flexible arrangement which would take into account the differences between people.

The problem is not a simple one. We cannot turn our backs on it. The problem is there, and it is causing hardship and anxiety to many older people. They are entitled to have someone look into the problem to attempt to come up with some answers. It should be our function to look into the matter and attempt to arrive at some useful conclusions. Labour unions, businesses and social agencies should also look into these matters. Finally, the people themselves should be asked for their views.

Compulsory retirement goes back to the days of Bismarck. Perhaps it meant something then, but it is about time we had a look at it. To give an example, a person's life expectancy is far greater today than it was when compulsory retirement was first written into the law books. Then it was 49 years of age; today it is 71 years of age. Life expectancy has increased by 22 years, and we are still stuck with compulsory retirement at age 65. I would imagine that in those days the age of 65 was looked upon as a very advanced age; however, today it is not. If one looks at life expectancy tables—and I have filed them—it is clear that men and women at the age of 65 have many years ahead of them. We just cannot automatically write them off at age 65. I know there is a great deal of dissatisfaction with the idea of forced retirement, so I suggest that we look into the problem.

For some time now demographers have been telling us that the population is aging. We Canadians are, presumably, a little grey at the temples. This fact entails social and economic consequences of considerable magnitude. It affects the whole range of social programs from education to old age pension. It also affects the labour force, pension plans and the very structure of our society. This country will have to respond in a meaningful way to the growing age of its population. Those aged 65 and over constitute the largest minority in the country; they comprise almost 10 per cent of the population.

I am well aware that the question of retirement age policies is only a small corner of a much larger social problem, but I think this is where we should begin. Let us take a look at this problem which will, sooner or later, affect the lives of the majority of Canadians. Some facts require putting on the record so that people will know what we are talking about.

Three-quarters of the Canadian population living today will still be here in the year 2000, the actuaries tell us, and 40 per cent will be here in the year 2025. Meanwhile, the birth rate is declining, continuing the trend that began in the 1960s after being at a high of more than 28 per thousand for more than 20 years. By 1970 it was down to 17.5, and it has declined each year from then to 15.4 in 1974.

What this tells us is that the proportion of those under age 65 available to support those over age 65, through public or private pensions, will become dangerously lower as the years march on. One of the most logical ways of easing these economic pressures is to abandon the concept of retirement at age 65 and adopt more flexible arrangements.

One of the most serious though often overlooked objections to the fixed retirement age of 65 is that it lays heavy psychological burdens on people attaining that age, irrespective of their physical and mental capacities. It has for so long been regarded as the gateway to old age, that for many people the 65th birthday is a traumatic event, and its aftermath is a crippling of the will and motivation of an otherwise healthy and capable adult who suddenly feels old.

What is increasingly clear is that the rigidities of any fixed retirement age may become an undesirable burden for both governments and individuals. We need to know more about the present and future impact of changing retirement age policies. Along with the developing trends toward enlightened human rights legislation in this country, we must address ourselves to the problem of ending the ultimate form of discrimination—that is, discrimination by age. I already indicated that the United States has dealt with this problem.

Through a system of enforced retirement at age 65, we tend to reinforce two major fallacies, those being that work is undesirable and something to flee from, and that after the age of 65 people are incapable of useful contributions to the economy and should, therefore, be removed to a quiet place where they can draw a pension until they die. Both viewpoints are absurd in human and economic terms.

We must recognize that there are those who can no longer run against time, but the question is: How many? I attempted to find out how many people would be affected. You must accept my figures on this. They are the best I can come up with. Last year 60,000 men and 20,000 women reached the age of 65 and were, presumably, out of the labour force. What we do not know is how many of those people wanted to continue working. Was it 5 per cent, 10 per cent, 15 per cent or 25 per cent? In this regard, one must bear in mind that 50 per cent of those aged 65 are heads of families living below the poverty line, and they have to work. There are many questions, and we don't know where to turn to for the answers. There is the question of what effect this will have on pensions, what effect this will have on the young. Pensions will become more expensive. Would there be a reduction in jobs available? Would the upward mobility of the young be slowed down? These are the types of questions with which we are faced.

• (2130)

Mandatory retirement has become a human rights issue. Retired people are slipping into a lower and lower standard of living. They are frustrated; they are lonely; they have feelings of uselessness. Society has declared that age 65 is the gateway to old age. Shouldn't that view be examined in the light of modern times and longevity?

It is far too complicated an issue to rely on common wisdom. People do get old eventually, but we need to know more about their needs and desires as they get older. It is hard to argue convincingly that some people magically lose all competence at a given chronological age while others, like ourselves, are almost ageless. There are many who feel no automatic loss of ability or capacity at the age of 65.

Gordon Fairweather, head of the new Canadian Human Rights Commission, stated, and I quote:

From now on a lot of people who profess to believe in human rights are going to be put to the test.

The Ontario Human Rights Commission has recommended that mandatory retirement ages be outlawed by the province, and the Manitoba Human Rights Commission has made a similar recommendation. One or two other provinces are dealing with the question. The Quebec Pension Plan allows contributors to claim full retirement benefits at age 65 even if they continue working. Until that change, a pensioner who earned more than a stipulated amount lost a portion of the retirement benefits, and that is currently the case in Ontario, and in every other region of the country.

The questions are many, and the answers simply are not there as yet. We have to ask ourselves the following questions: Will raising or doing away entirely with mandatory retirement ages limit or hurt employment or promotion opportunities for those entering the job market and, if so, will that in turn stifle an individual's creativeness and initiative?

If change and progress are usually indicated by the up-and-coming young workers, will the abolition of mandatory retirement ages stifle our academic and scientific communities, and government, and how will that affect future generations?

What kinds of benefits will be derived by individuals and society if the mandatory retirement age is raised or done away with completely?

I need not tell honourable senators that there is no preface to old age. We are ill-prepared. There is no manual of instructions, no guidelines. Old age happens to someone else.

We need to know how many will be affected. We need to inform ourselves as to the social and economic effects of such a step. As politicians we should be in the forefront, dealing with subjects and ideas which have not yet fully registered with a sufficient portion of the population to make them problems. Before this becomes a greater problem, there is an opportunity for the Senate to involve itself. It is not too late. We have some time. We can use it. From my point of view—and I hope it is a point of view endorsed by the Senate—this committee, if established, will be a challenging committee, an interesting committee. It will provide us with a vehicle by which to help those people in need of our help—people who, by themselves, are helpless. They are not a very vocal group; they are not a very powerful group. But they are people who provided their services to their country in the best way they knew how. They played it according to the rules, and the rules, they now feel, are letting them down, and I think they are right. I ask the Senate to undertake this very important study and to continue to devote itself to people, as it has in the past, letting the public know that we in the Senate are not only prepared to render a service but actually do so.

On motion of Senator Inman, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

---

APPENDIX

(See p. 128)

TABLE 1

RETIREMENT AGE IN SELECTED COUNTRIES

Country	Normal Retirement Age 1974 <sup>(1)</sup>	Country	Normal Retirement Age 1974 <sup>(1)</sup>
Australia	65 (60)	Israel	65 (60)
Austria	65 (60)	Italy	60 (55)
Belgium	65 (60)	Japan	60 (55)
Bulgaria	60 (55)	Luxembourg	65 (60)
Canada	65 <sup>(2)</sup>	Netherlands	65
Czechoslovakia	60 (53-57)	New Zealand	60 or 65
Denmark	67 (62)	Norway	67 <sup>(2)</sup>
Finland	65	Poland	65 (60)
France	60	Portugal	65 (62)
Germany D.R. of	65 (60)	Rumania	60 (55) <sup>(3)</sup>
Germany F.R. of	65 (60)	Spain	65
Great Britain	65 (60)	Sweden	67
Greece	62 (57)	Switzerland	65 (62)
Hungary	60 (55)	U.S.A.	65
Iceland	67	U.S.S.R.	60 (55)
Ireland	65 <sup>(2)</sup>	Yugoslavia	60 (55)

SOURCE: Adapted from E. K. Kirkpatrick, "The Retirement Test—an International Study," Social Security Bulletin (July 1974), and from Pilcher, Ramsey and Swihard, "Some Correlates of Normal Pensionable Age," International Social Security Review 21 (March 1968): 409.

<sup>(1)</sup> Figures in brackets show female retirement age where this is different.

<sup>(2)</sup> Reduced since 1966 from aged 70.

<sup>(3)</sup> Reduced since 1966 from aged 72.

TABLE 2

LIFE EXPECTANCY AT BIRTH IN SELECTED COUNTRIES <sup>(a)</sup>

	Year	Life Expectancy at Birth
		Males	Females
Sweden	1967	71.9	76.5
Norway	1966-70	71.1	76.8
Iceland	1961-65	70.8	76.2
Netherlands	1970	70.7	76.5
Denmark	1969-70	70.8	75.7
	1958-63	68.7	74.1
Canada	1971	69.3	76.4
	(1966)	(68.8)	(75.2)
France	1970	68.6	76.1
Japan	1968	69.1	74.3
England and Wales	1968-70	68.6	74.9
Australia	1960-62	67.9	74.2
United States	1971	67.4	74.9
Federal Republic of Germany	1968-70	67.2	73.4

SOURCE: Economic Council of Canada, 11th Annual Review (Ottawa, 1974), p. 91, Tables 4-10.

<sup>(a)</sup> Accidental and violent deaths are included; data are for the most recent years.

TABLE 3
FLEXIBILITY OF RETIREMENT AGE
I—PENSION SYSTEMS IN MEMBER COUNTRIES, BY TYPE, COVERAGE, NORMAL AGE WHEN BENEFITS PAID AND EARLY RETIREMENT QUALIFICATIONS

Country	Type		Coverage				Normal Age when Benefits Paid		Early Retirement Qualifications				Voluntary Choice with Reduced Pensions (Period of Anticipation)
	Universal Pension	Social Insurance	Both	Residents	Gainfully Occupied		Male	Female	Long Period of Insurance	Unemployment for One Year	Tiring of Unhealthy Employment	Prolonged Illness
					Social Insurance	Separate Systems
Austria		x				x	65	60	x	x		x
Belgium		x				x	65	60					5 years
Canada			x	x			65 <sup>1</sup>	65 <sup>1</sup>
Denmark			x	x			67	62				x
France		x				x	60	60
Germany		x				x	65	65		x
Greece		x				x	62	57			x		2 years
Iceland	x			x			67	67
Ireland		x		x		x	70	70
Italy		x					60	55	x		x
Japan		x		x			60	55
Luxembourg		x				x	65	65	x
Netherlands		x		x			65	65
Norway			x	x			70	70
Portugal		x				x	65	65
Spain		x				x	66	65			x
Sweden			x	x			67	65					4 years
Switzerland		x		x			66	65
Turkey		x				x	60	55				x
United Kingdom		x		x			65	60
United States		x				x	65	65					3 years

1970

II—REQUIREMENT TO RETIRE TO QUALIFY FOR PENSION

Country	M	Age <sup>1</sup>	F	Requirement to retire	Where requirement substantial
Austria	65		60	substantial	Pensions reduced by concurrent wages over 1,000 Schillings a month. Only a small amount of concurrent wages allowed.
Belgium	65		60	substantial
Canada
Universal	65	(1970)	65	none	Pensions reduced by concurrent wages over $1,500 per year, and by 50% of wages between $900 and $1,500 a year, up to age 70.
Social insurance	65		65	substantial
Denmark
Universal	67		62	none	Since universal pensions, apart from the minimum rate, until 1970 are payable subject to an income test, retirement is at present—and will be until 1970—necessary for their receipt.
Social insurance	67		62	none
France	60		60	none	Pension suspended entirely if concurrent wages reach twice the amount of benefit.
Germany	65		65	none
Greece	62		57	substantial	Pension reduced by one-fifth for persons not retiring.
Iceland	67		67	none
Ireland	70		70	none	Benefits under universal scheme reduced if pensioner has other income.
Italy	60		55	none
Japan	60		55	substantial	Pensions reduced concurrent earnings over £7.10s. a week up to age 70 for men and 65 for women.
Luxembourg	65		65	none
Netherlands	65		65	none	Pensions reduced by concurrent earnings over $2,880 a year, and by 50% of earnings between $1,680 and $2,880 up to age 72.
Norway	70		70	none
Portugal	65		65	mandatory to age 70	Pensions reduced concurrent earnings over $2,880 a year, and by 50% of earnings between $1,680 and $2,880 up to age 72.
Spain	65		65	mandatory
Sweden	67		67	none	Pensions reduced concurrent earnings over £7.10s. a week up to age 70 for men and 65 for women.
Switzerland	65		62	none
Turkey	60		55	mandatory (from insured employment)	Pensions reduced by concurrent earnings over $2,880 a year, and by 50% of earnings between $1,680 and $2,880 up to age 72.
United Kingdom	65		60	substantial
United States	65		65	substantial

1. Age at which pension benefits normally begin.

Source: Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 16, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Senator Macdonald, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Bélisle be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Yuzyk on the list of senators serving on the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO ENGAGE SERVICES

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I guess things move along here without very much initiative from individuals sometimes. I see on my desk a motion which, I suppose, is placed before me because of the honour you did me in electing me Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, an honour which I greatly appreciate and for which I express my thanks and appreciation, but which I have not yet learned to carry out properly. I guess this is part of my initiation.

I gather it is now my duty to move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e):

That the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purposes of its examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as may be referred to it.

Motion agreed to.

ALASKA HIGHWAY PIPELINE

INTERPRETATION OF AGREEMENT—QUESTIONS

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government along somewhat similar lines to the question I raised a few days ago about the Alaska Highway pipeline. I raise this matter again because of additional manifestations of disagreement as to the interpretation in Canada and in the United States of the AlCan agreement, the most recent manifestation being the assertion by Teamsters in Alaska that they ought to be involved in the construction of the pipeline in Canada.

I would ask the leader whether any negotiations or consultations are taking place between Canada and the United States respecting the interpretation of certain clauses in the construction agreement, so that Canadians generally, and Canadian suppliers in particular, can have a clear understanding as to what to be prepared for.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, while I am in no position to provide information additional to that provided the other day when I answered the honourable senator's earlier question, inevitably the process of developing this Arctic natural gas pipeline will involve continuing negotiations between the two countries on various details of the construction agreement. However, I will take the question as notice and attempt to provide further information as soon as possible.

Senator Olson: When he researches the answer, I wonder if the honourable leader would also bear in mind that the application made to the National Energy Board in Canada, which was approved, contains a certain percentage of Canadian content. If that content is not met, will that approval still be valid?

Senator Perrault: As I say, I will attempt to provide more detailed information over the next few days. However, honourable senators may be aware of reports which appeared in the media only this week that the Canadian content is expected to be substantially higher than originally anticipated when the agreement was signed. This is certainly good news to all Canadian provinces if, in fact, this is the situation.

Senator Greene: Another supplementary, honourable senators, if I may be permitted. There are reports emanating from Washington to the effect that Canadian pipemakers are not capable of manufacturing the size and structure of pipe that would be most effective in the construction of the pipeline. Would the honourable leader look into the matter of whether this allegation is true or whether, in fact, Canadian pipemakers are perfectly competent to manufacture the size and type of pipe that might be best used in the construction of the pipeline?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, whether the reports have any validity or not, Canadian companies are able to match the expertise to be found in any other nation in the world when it comes to building pipelines.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: It is the intention of the government to make sure that the highly competent and able Canadian companies which have earned a rightful world reputation for quality will be given a full opportunity to provide their products for this huge project.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, I have another supplementary for the Leader of the Government. Would the leader, in preparing his reply to the questions that have been put to him in connection with the Alaska Highway pipeline, also direct himself to the question of pipe specifications? It will only be when these specifications have been established that we can start discussing when the pipeline will be built and what bids can be put forward. I will not go into details now, but I think the leader's statement should include as much information as possible on the specifications being discussed by the two groups negotiating on behalf of the two governments.

AIR CANADA BILL, 1977

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator McElman for second reading of Bill C-3, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, it is my intention to move further adjournment of the debate on this bill. Perhaps I should explain the reason. It is that, among other things, some of us on this side have been seeking a legal opinion as to the effect of clause 6(2) and clause 8, to verify our concern, the concern expressed here yesterday, about the possible effect of these clauses if they remain in the bill. I therefore move the adjournment of the debate.

● (1410)

On motion of Senator Grosart, debate adjourned.

SCIENCE POLICY

VOLUME 4 OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, October 25, 1977:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy, appointed in the last session of Parliament and authorized in that session to consider and report on Canadian government and other expenditures on scientific activities and matters related thereto, entitled: A Science Policy for Canada, Volume 4, Progress and Unfinished Business, tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, 25th October, 1977.

He said: Honourable senators, the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy has ceased to exist, so that in a sense my speech will be a post-mortem examination.

On this occasion I should like to express my deep gratitude to the vice-chairman of the committee, Senator Cameron; to the chairman of the steering committee, Senator Grosart, and to those other members of the committee who have actively participated in its activity since 1968 or during the last few years.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Lamontagne: I should also like to express my gratitude to the committee staff, more particularly to Mr. Philip Pocock and Mr. Jacques Ostiguy, for their dedication and discretion throughout those years.

I cannot pay better homage to my colleagues and to the staff than that offered by two ministers at the beginning and at the end of our second, more recent inquiry. In December 1975 when we began that inquiry, Mr. Drury, then Minister of State for Science and Technology, made the following statement which is included in our report:

I have been most impressed by the record of performance of your committee . . . No one can doubt the thoroughness with which you approached your task. I think it is fair to say that no other investigation of science policy anywhere in the world has equalled that carried out by your committee. Your report has constituted a significant background to all discussions of science policy matters, and its influence will continue to be felt not only in Canada but, I suspect, also internationally.

In April 1977, at the end of our inquiry, Mr. Faulkner, who then succeeded Mr. Drury as Minister of State for Science and Technology, made the following statement:

This is my first meeting with the committee which, if I may say so, has been one of the outstanding success stories of parliamentary committees. I do not say that gratuitously. I happen to believe that not only has the committee made a profound impact on the development of science policy with the government . . . but outside . . . I think it has been viewed . . . as a landmark of political awareness . . . of the role of science and technology in Canada.

I should now like to present a summary of our fourth and last volume, which was tabled at the beginning of this session.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, this document entitled Progress and Unfinished Business is the fourth and last volume of the Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy.

To understand its object and content, one must go back to the time when the committee started its activities. The findings of our first inquiry are found in Volume I, published in 1970. At that time, we came to realize that, compared with other industrialized countries, the efforts Canada made towards research and development were quite inadequate. We came to realize also that the sharing of these efforts had given Canada a unique pattern which lacked realism. Contrary to the situation in most other industrialized countries, Canada's efforts were concentrated in government laboratories, cut off from the real world and not likely to foster much innovation.

On the other hand, the industry's contribution remained quite marginal, which explained the poor record of the Canadian economy when it came to innovations. Moreover, we discovered that the science policy of the Canadian government was in fact determined by circumstances, the result of isolated and inconsistent decisions by various departments and agencies, their outlooks often much too clouded by their own missions to give the necessary attention to these complex decisions. In other words, we found a mess in a political sector which the government later described as greatly affecting the welfare of the Canadian public and the future of the Canadian society as a whole.

Volumes 2 and 3 published by the committee in 1972 and 1973 contained a whole series of specific recommendations and general suggestions which could have remedied the situation had they been implemented energetically and quickly.

The committee was quite pleased with the first reaction of the government to its proposals. After 1970, much more reliable statistics were compiled and published on Canadian science efforts. We had deplored the weakness or even the absence of central bodies entrusted with the care of formulating and evaluating an overall science policy. In 1968 the Science Council became a crown corporation, empowered to hire its own staff. Our first inquiry had proved that the scientific and engineering community was broken up into about a hundred various associations throughout Canada, and that those solitudes made dialogue on the science policy almost impossible. At our suggestion, in January 1970 the Association of the Scientific, Engineering and Technical Community of Canada was founded, now commonly known as the SCITEC. In June of 1971, the government announced the setting up of a Ministry of State in charge of Science and Technology, with a very limited mandate as a first step towards filling the gap at the top echelon.

In Volume 2 we had recommended that the government transfer contractually to industry whatever intramural research and development programs were in progress, and the new ones whenever possible. In February 1972, shortly after publication of that volume, the government announced its policy of assignment, and though it was limited to new programs, nevertheless it was taking a step in the right direction.

Volume 3 was published in September 1973. In February 1974 the Honourable Jeanne Sauvé announced that the government had decided to implement several of the major recommendations made by the committee.

● (1420)

[English]

The statement made by Mrs. Sauvé in February 1974, in her capacity as Minister of State for Science and Technology, promised substantial improvements in the formulation of science policy and its priorities, a meaningful central machinery for the review and assessment of proposed science expenditures, and a visible science budget. With this solid basis we then anticipated that MOSST would become a dynamic agent of change and that action on our other recommendations would soon follow.

However, a year and a half later—that is, in the summer of 1975—it became obvious that most of the promises made by Mrs. Sauvé had not yet been fulfilled by her successor. Moreover, a quick look at the size and distribution of the national R&D effort showed that the major deficiencies which the committee had detected in 1970 still existed.

In July 1975, we decided to seek authority to inquire into that situation and to ask why there had been no improvement over all those years. Was it because the committee's recommendations had been rejected by the government, or because they had been implemented badly or too late?

Departments and other government agencies were invited to prepare briefs, and in December 1975 the committee launched its second, more specific, inquiry. It was probably the first time in our parliamentary history that a committee was authorized to go back to the scene of its first investigation to ascertain in a detailed and systematic way to what extent and how its initial recommendations had been implemented. We now recognize that this second assault on bureaucratic resistance has already proved most useful.

The statistical tables presented in chapter 1 of the last volume of our report show that in real terms no significant improvement has taken place since 1970 in the size and distribution of the national and government research and development effort. Canadian R&D intensity continues to lag far behind that of most other industrialized countries. This stagnation, coupled with the lack of mobility of researchers, is creating an imminent crisis in the government and university sectors that is seriously threatening our national research capability. In fact, we may lose a whole new generation of researchers in Canada. This emerging crisis is reviewed in chapter 2 of the fourth volume of our report.

The data also reveal that government laboratories continue to dominate the Canadian scientific scene, that changes in departmental and agency R&D budgets seem to be guided by the wrong priorities, and that the basic weakness of the industrial sector still persists in terms of its research and development effort and its innovative performance.

As a result, the Canadian technological gap that we had deplored in 1970 is widening. This weakness is particularly evident in the manufacturing sector and it constitutes an important factor accounting for the dramatic rise in our trade deficit in end products from $3.6 billion in 1971 to $10.2 billion in 1976. This persistent weakness of the industrial sector in terms of research and development effort is described in chapter 3.

As the committee launched its second inquiry, the government initiated a new period of activity and implemented other corrective measures inspired by our earlier recommendations. However, the impact of those decisions has not yet been felt.

Most of the promises made by Mrs. Sauvé in February, 1974 have now been fulfilled. A special budgetary procedure for the approval of proposed science expenditures by departments and other government agencies has been developed, and MOSST has been given the responsibility for reviewing and assessing those proposals before they are finally approved. For the first time, a separate and visible science budget has been published for the fiscal year 1977-78. Although this document is still imperfect, the ministry has promised to improve it next year.

In June 1977, Parliament approved the creation of two new granting councils, one for the physical sciences and engineering and one for the social sciences and the humanities, along the lines we had recommended back in 1972. Other proposals made in 1972 were also implemented recently. Twenty industrial task forces were created in 1976 by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and were asked to prepare plans designed to improve the technological performance and the innovative capacity of specific sectors of manufacturing industries. Unfortunately, those plans are not yet available.

In the spring of 1977, the following measures were initiated: the make-or-buy policy was extended to all government intramural scientific activities, thus providing substantial additional support to industry and universities. A detailed study was launched to develop a program to increase the mobility of scientific personnel and to encourage older researchers to take other jobs in the Public Service or in the private sector. A similar study has been undertaken by the Science Council in the academic sector.

The various grants programs designed to encourage industrial R&D have been integrated into a more flexible and less confusing multi-purpose program. The government is financing a special program of futures studies which is being carried out by the Institute for Research on Public Policy, and has established mechanisms to plan and coordinate such studies within the Public Service.

Other less important recommendations have also been implemented recently. Those recent decisions, probably prompted by our second inquiry, are also described in our report as delayed progress. When their full impact is felt, the Canadian situation with respect to science, technology and innovation will improve significantly.

It is regrettable that five years had to elapse—the wasted years, as we call them—and that another inquiry had to be launched before the government decided to act on a broad front. But there is still important unfinished business, which is described in this volume and summed up at the end of each chapter in 15 specific recommendations. For those who have not yet had the time or the opportunity to read that volume, I will list the specific recommendations as follows:

● (1430)

1. Government departments and agencies with a sufficient science budget should have a science adviser acting as liaison between top management and research services as well as between the department or agency and the Ministry of State for Science and Technology.

2. A government directive should be issued requesting departments and agencies to submit their science expenditure proposals directly to MOSST at a date which permits examination and analysis by the ministry prior to their submission to the Treasury Board.

3. The Ministry of State for Science and Technology should improve its annual publication, entitled Federal Science Programs, to provide more detailed information about the distribution and the rationale of the science budget, the highlights of current success stories and of new scientific programs being launched.

4. The ministry should prepare a science policy framework, as promised in 1974, including a five-year plan to serve as a basis for the annual review and assessment of the science budget. This plan should include priorities and a target of 1.5 per cent of gross national product for the national science effort to be attained by 1982.

5. The budget of the granting councils should increase by 12 per cent annually during the next five years, as it did in the fiscal year 1977-1978, to compensate for inflation and to support a greater research effort in the university sector.

6. R&D grants to universities should include the indirect cost of projects.

7. The extended make-or-buy policy, especially in the area of basic and applied research, should apply to the university sector as quickly as possible. NRC, the National Research Council, should be transformed into a multi-purpose national academy where most of the government intramural basic research and long-term applied research activities would be concentrated.

8. The Interdepartmental Committee on Industrial Policies and Strategies, chaired by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, should be asked, as a matter of high priority, to report regularly to cabinet on the negative implications of decisions and policies of departments and agencies on the innovative process and the industrial R&D effort.

9. Great importance must be attached to the industrial task forces or study groups being asked to develop sectoral strategies for manufacturing industries, including reorganization plans to improve R&D and innovative capacity, and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce should set up an office of Industrial Reorganization to coordinate and support the work of these groups and to implement their proposals.

10. The new and broader make-or-buy policy must be applied quickly, and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce should be given a meaningful role in its implementation. In the awarding of R&D contracts, provincial research organizations should be given the same priority as other agents of the service sector, such as engineering firms.

11. The intramural scientific activities remaining within the government, and designed to serve manufacturing industries, should be consolidated into a single complex of laboratories with strong industrial representation on its board and committees and responsible to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

12. R&D contracts to industry should not be seen as substitutes for grants and tax incentives, and, in consequence, the real value of direct financial assistance offered by the government in 1972 should be restored quickly, both in the form of grants and appropriate tax deductions for increased R&D expenditures over a base period.

13. The role of Canada Patents and Development Limited should be extended to include assistance to the private inventor, and a series of awards for Canadian innovators and inventors should be instituted.

14. A Canadian Innovation Bank should be created by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as a lending and investing institution to support the launching of technological innovations, especially in new or existing small or medium-sized firms.

15. To accomplish all these important tasks effectively, the industrial mission and the commercial mission of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce should be separated. A deputy minister of industry should be appointed, and the department should be given much greater internal stability at the ministerial and top management level than it has had in recent years.

Finally, I would like to raise two points that are very important in relation to the future development of a coherent science policy for Canada. The first is related to the internal stability of the two ministries most directly concerned with that policy, namely, the Ministry of State for Science and Technology and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The second point is related to the future involvement of parliamentarians with science policy.

The Ministry of State for Science and Technology was set up in the fall of 1971, and quite naturally several months were required to get it organized; but then, in May 1975, a major reorganization was undertaken that lasted until March 1976. Moreover, in the last five years that ministry has had five ministers, three secretaries or deputy ministers, and a rapid turnover at other levels of top management, and cannot be expected to accomplish its complex and delicate mission with such a degree of internal instability. The recent appointment of a part-time minister, who is also Minister of Public Works, will not improve this situation.

Similarly, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has gone through a major reorganization, begun in 1973 but still unfinished in 1976 when we heard the representatives of that department. Since 1972, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has had five ministers, four deputy ministers, and also, like MOSST, a rapid turnover at other levels of top management.

It is not surprising that we are still waiting for the industrial strategy that Mr. Pépin had promised in 1972. Without a greater internal departmental stability it will be impossible to develop effective policies designed to promote technological development and innovations, and to strengthen our manufacturing industries.

The continuing involvement of parliamentarians with science technology and innovations has become imperative. In recent years, the Senate special committee, with its limited means, has proved to be most useful. Moreover, our second inquiry has shown the great value of a continuing operation. We fear, however, that the time has come for us to cease to operate as a special committee. In recent years attempts have been made in the House of Commons to establish a standing committee on science policy, but they have not been successful. Eventually, perhaps, we could have a joint committee of both houses. For now, however, we recommend that the Senate establish its own standing committee. Over the years the Senate has received a great deal of credit for providing a public forum on issues raised by science and technology, and for contributing to the development of a more coherent science policy.

● (1440)

This task, in our view, must now be organized on a continuing basis; otherwise, Canada will become one of the few countries in the western world where parliamentarians will not be directly and systematically involved on a continuing basis with the vital issues of science policy.

It is with a very detached attitude that I support this unanimous recommendation of the special committee for a standing committee on science policy. If the Senate accepts that recommendation, I shall be quite ready to serve as a member of that committee, but I think my usefulness as chairman of any future committee dealing with science policy is over.

[Translation]

Senator Greene: Would the honourable senator allow me a question?

Senator Lamontagne: Of course.

Senator Greene: When you speak of federal research under the National Research Council, do you talk only of industrial research? I am thinking of departments such as agriculture which is mainly devoted to research. Are you saying that agricultural research would be better if conducted by the National Research Council, or that a department such as the Department of Agriculture, which is mainly a department of research in agriculture, should continue to do research?

Senator Lamontagne: We certainly favour that applied research continue to be conducted in the Department of Agriculture, since it is directly related to it. What we recommend now is that pure or fundamental research being done in various departments—very often making them forget their proper political mission—be concentrated within the National Research Council. In this way, various departments would achieve their useful purpose and accomplish their mission more efficiently than in the past.

[English]

On motion of Senator Cameron, debate adjourned.

NORTH ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY

TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL SESSION, PARIS, FRANCE—
DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald rose pursuant to notice of Wednesday, November 9, 1977:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-third Annual Session of the North Atlantic Assembly, held in Paris, France, from 18th to 24th September, 1977, and in particular to the discussions and proceedings of the Session and the participation therein of the delegation from Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, the inquiry I am speaking to today is similar to those that I have had many opportunities to speak to on previous occasions.

As this is the first opportunity I have had to address the house since this new session began, I too should like to extend my congratulations to you, Madam Speaker, for the charming and efficient way that you have presided over this chamber, and for the leadership you have shown in the diplomatic community of Ottawa. Your work has been appreciated by all of us here and by our visiting friends from many countries.

All of us here realize that the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition have formidable loads to carry. The responsibilities of the Leader of the Government in the Senate are onerous and difficult, but in my view the Leader of the Opposition has an even more onerous and difficult job. Most senators are familiar with my views on the division of manpower in this chamber. I know of no body, elected or appointed, that can operate as efficiently as it ought to without strong representation on both sides of a question. How that can be accomplished with the present membership of the official opposition is beyond me.

I know it is most difficult for any Prime Minister, regardless of his political party, to appoint members from an opposition party to this place. However, this difficulty could be overcome by amending our Constitution in such a way that the membership of the official opposition in the Senate would never drop below a certain percentage point. I don't know what that would be, but I repeat that the opposition should be strengthened if it is to carry out its responsibilities.

Honourable senators, I want to say a word of thanks to the staff of the Senate. We have a good staff, and I am pleased to note today that one of our Hansard reporters is a young woman. If my memory is correct, she is the first lady reporter to serve on Hansard. I welcome her to the Senate, and I hope there will be others who follow her.

Honourable senators, I only want to say a few words about Canada's participation in the Twenty-third Annual Session of the North Atlantic Assembly, which was held in Paris, France, from September 18 to 24 of this year.

There were 17 Canadian delegates, but Canada is entitled to only 12 votes in the Assembly. This number is based on our population and our contribution to NATO. Normally we would send 12 delegates, but we can send additional representatives if the North Atlantic Assembly has elected them to positions on one of its standing committees. Several Canadians now serve as chairman of committees or rapporteurs of committees or subcommittees. So I am pleased to note that our total delegation is up to 17, and I am even more pleased to note that we have now arrived at a target I had set several years ago in the Senate, that of having five senators attend these annual meetings. This has been accomplished not by increasing our allotment in the division between the Commons and the Senate, but we still continue to have three delegates from the Senate, and we have two people in positions of rapporteurs of committees, Senator Yuzyk and myself.

● (1450)

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator McDonald: Of course, there is another Canadian who travels with us. I refer to Paul Langlois from the other place, who is the Treasurer of the North Atlantic Assembly, and he goes as a member of the staff of the North Atlantic Assembly from Brussels.

Over the last several years we have had Colonel Bowie as our secretary, and I take this opportunity to thank him for the excellent job he has done. I can think of no one who performs his allotted tasks and responsibilities better than Colonel Bowie. I know of no one who has travelled with Colonel Bowie, either abroad or in Canada, who has ever complained of his activities and work. He deserves the thanks of us all.

Honourable senators, I would like now to review with you what has happened in central Europe, and I shall confine my remarks to NATO in central Europe only. I know we have other responsibilities on the northern flank and the southern flank, but it is not possible to deal with all of these areas in one speech.

So, what has happened in the past year on the central front in Europe? There have been improvements, and I will refer to some of them on both sides—that is, the NATO side and the Warsaw Pact side—but I am afraid that I have to say that the situation that prevails today in Europe, as far as NATO is concerned, is far from satisfactory. In my view, the majority of the member nations of NATO are not making as large a contribution as they can and as they must if we are going to maintain peace, at least in that part of the world.

I am sure that all of us were pleased when last spring the defence ministers, at a meeting in Brussels, agreed to increase their defence spending by three per cent during the next five years. But I have great doubts whether several nations who are members of NATO can or will meet this increased expense, but without it, and without other changes which I will refer to later in my remarks, I cannot see the position of NATO improving in the immediate future.

One of the main problems that we in the western world face is the fact that many of our military forces today are volunteer forces, and when you have a volunteer armed force you have to compete with the industrial wage of your nation for manpower. This means that many countries, including Canada, spend over 80 per cent of their defence budget on pensions and salaries, and less than 20 per cent is left for research, development and procurement of new arms. This is not a problem to our potential adversary. Our potential adversary has conscription, and its total share of the defence budget spent on manpower is not over 80 per cent; it is less than 20 per cent.

Senator Flynn: They pay less.

Senator McDonald: Even if we spent roughly the same percentage of our gross national product on defence, how can we hope to match a situation where 80 per cent, or more than 80 per cent, of our defence budget goes in salaries and pensions, while less than 20 per cent of the enemy's defence budget goes in salaries and wages? These are facts.

I mentioned a moment ago that I believed the member nations of NATO must make larger contributions. Despite the fact that in the last few years Canada has improved her position substantially—and I am not going to relate those improvements because we are well aware of the new equipment that has been purchased, ordered, or is about to be ordered for the Canadian armed forces—I do want to point out that there is only one country in the North Atlantic Assembly that spends less of its gross national product on defence than Canada, and that is Luxembourg. When you compare defence expenditures by percentages of gross national product you are really not using a fair measurement, because we know that the gross national product of some NATO members is next to nil, and any percentage of nil is still nil. On the other hand, some members of NATO are among the more wealthy nations in the world, Canada being one of them, and 2.4 per cent of Canada's gross national product is a considerable amount of money. But when we compare our gross national product to that of Portugal, we can easily see that 2.4 per cent of our gross national product means one thing while 6.4 per cent of Portugal's gross national product means another. So, I do not believe that this formula for calculating a nation's effort is a fair one, but it is the one that is used in discussions in the North Atlantic Assembly, and it is sometimes difficult for Canadians to get the credit to which I believe we are entitled. I also believe that we can afford to spend more than 2.4 per cent of our gross national product, not to fight a war but to create conditions under which war is very unlikely.

There have been some improvements on both sides—in NATO and in the Warsaw Pact—and I would like to refer to some of those that we can see. I think we have to classify them as short-term improvements and long-term improvements, especially as far as NATO is concerned.

At a meeting of the Defence Planning Committee last spring, the defence ministers felt that for the short term we needed immediate improvement in anti-armour. The reason for this is the fact that there are in the neighbourhood of 23,000 or 24,000 Russian-Warsaw Pact tanks sitting across that imaginary line between East and West. On our side of that line there are about 9,000 tanks, and 24 to 9 is not very good odds. It is obvious that in the immediate future our anti-armour must be improved. I shall be saying more about that later on.

● (1500)

We must improve our readiness, simply because we are convinced that the Soviet Union could launch an attack on Western Europe with little or no warning. If they are going to launch a major attack worldwide there is bound to be a longer warning period, because we would be aware of where their navies are, and what has happened to their shipping. However, I suggest to you—and many Europeans are convinced of this—that the Soviet Union could make a major ground strike into Western Europe with little or no warning, so our ability to project what is going on behind the border between East and West must be improved, and improved rapidly.

There is another improvement that must be made almost immediately. The suggestion is made that our stocks and re-supply facilities are not sufficient, and that the transportation to move those supplies into the battle area is not sufficient. Again there are proposals to rectify this, and it is my hope that the Defence Planning Committee will at its next meeting, which will be held next month, adopt the proposals I have just referred to, and I have every reason to believe that it will.

Those are the proposals that have been made to deal with the short-term problems. What about the long-term problems? Not only do we need to improve our anti-armour position today, but there must be a long-range program. There are new weapons in the planning stage that could offset this disparity between 24,000 and 9,000 tanks, and I will refer to those later.

With respect to reinforcements, we have to improve on the time element in moving troops from their homeland to the front. It is much easier for our adversaries to move their reinforcements, even from the heartland of the Soviet Union into East Germany, than it is to take reserves from North America to Europe. Surely the experience of those exercises during which we have moved very large numbers of men from North America into Europe has taught us that the time lag is too great, that the numbers of aircraft needed are great, and that we do not have nearly enough. There has been a proposal that our civilian aircraft ought to be modified so that in times of war they can be used to transport men and materials across the Atlantic.

We know now that, because of the tremendous strides in the build-up of the Russian navy, our marine posture in the Western World has to be strengthened. Some of us are aware of Canada's proposals for strengthening her marine posture. We know now that our aircraft in Europe have to be replaced with new aircraft, and we are making a move in that direction, as are many other countries within NATO.

Communications are dreadful. Many of our forces from one country cannot talk to their neighbouring forces fighting the same enemy; one country cannot talk to another. Surely we should have learned in the last World War that any conflict today involves the land, sea and air, yet not only are our communications lacking in that regard but, as I said a moment ago, our communications are lacking between one country and another.

Developments in electronic warfare make it imperative that we have new radar systems almost immediately. I will refer to that later on.

It is now thought that consumer logistics available in Europe from civilian sources must be mobilized, and there must be a plan so that they can be mobilized to deliver men and materials to the front. We must have new methods and new procedures to mobilize reserves. I would like to see my own country with a far stronger militia than it has today.

The new advances in the theatre of nuclear warfare may in the long-run determine whether we have peace or war. I mentioned earlier some of the developments that can offset this disparity between the numbers of tanks in the East and the West, the number of artillery in the East and the West and the numbers of aircraft in the East and the West. They are all out of balance. But we do have some tricks up our sleeve, although some people are hesitant to support the development of some of these new weapons. I have said over and over again, and I say it again today, that I believe the more weapons you have in your arsenal, the more prepared you are to fight if you have to, and the less chance there is that you will have to. I repeat, NATO does not want to fight a war; NATO wants to maintain peace.

You know, it reminds me of that advertisement on television by an oil filter company, Fram, in which a mechanic takes an oil filter in his hand and says, "You can pay me now or pay me later," meaning, "You either buy a new filter for $3 now, or you don't buy it and pay me $500 for a new motor later." That is what I believe NATO is attempting to do, and must do. We must buy new oil filters, and buy a lot of them. If we fail to do so we will pay the price of war, and we won't be able to measure that by any percentage of our gross national product.

What are some of these new weapons? There is the neutron weapon. Some people call it the neutron bomb, but that is a misnomer. The neutron weapon can be used as a bomb; it can be fired from a tank gun; it can be fired from artillery; it could be rocketed off from an aircraft; it could be a ground-to-ground missile. What is a neutron weapon? A neutron weapon is a dud nuclear weapon. When I say "dud," let me explain that the neutron weapon does not explode as a nuclear weapon does; consequently, it does not have destructive power over the huge area that a nuclear weapon does. However, it has the killing power of a nuclear weapon in a smaller area. The radiation from a neutron weapon dissipates in hours, whereas from a nuclear weapon, as we all know, it takes weeks, months or God knows how long. I believe that the neutron weapon should be developed by the United States and deployed in Europe. A Russian, I am sure, would scratch his head a long time before he advanced into the mouth of a neutron weapon.

● (1510)

We also have the cruise missile, potentially one of the greatest weapons that man has ever developed. The cruise missile has a range of from 2,000 to 3,000 kilometers, it flies at a subsonic speed of 600 or 700 miles an hour, it flies at a low level of about 100 feet, and it is accurate to within 30 feet of its target at 3,000 kilometers. It is small, being about 200 inches long and 21 inches wide. There is no known defence against a cruise missile. I believe that if cruise missiles are developed—and they are going to be developed—and are deployed in Europe—and I hope they will be deployed in Europe—they will be part of our answer to those 24,000 tanks I was talking about.

I do not believe that Westerners, whether they live in North America or Europe, are prepared to pay the cost in tax dollars to match tank for tank, airplane for airplane, ship for ship or gun for gun, with the Soviet Union, but I am convinced that we have the technology on the North American continent to develop these other weapons for much less money, place them in the field, and maintain a deterrent that will prevent war.

There are other developments that have happened in the past year which are helpful to NATO. The fact that the Portuguese have brought considerable stability to their country in the last year has helped a great deal. A year ago, it will be recalled, we were all very concerned about where Portugal would end up. I believe she is in the process of ending up with a democratic government favourable to the West, and as she is now out of Africa she will have more men and money to share with her NATO partners in the defence of Western Europe.

I believe that the activities in Spain toward developing a democratic government are encouraging. I hope the day will come in the near future when the process of political evolution in Spain will make it possible for her to become a member of NATO. My main reason for so hoping is that it will increase the area in which we can manoeuvre if called upon to defend ourselves. The growth in Congressional support in the United States for interoperability and standardization is positive, but it has some weakness which I will refer to later.

What about the Warsaw Pact? What have they been doing in the past year? During the past year they have continued their program of switching virtually all their military forces from a defensive force to an offensive force. There are virtually no land, sea or air weapons in the Soviet Union's arsenal today which could be considered strictly defensive weapons. They are weapons of attack, and it necessitates changes on our side when a potential enemy moves from a defensive to an offensive posture.

Soviet operational doctrine today envisages that the Warsaw Pact nations could advance into Western Europe, a distance of 30 kilometers, in the first 24 hours if they used conventional weapons only. If they used strategic nuclear weapons, they believe they can advance 50 kilometers in the first 24 hours. Their strategy is to have eight or 10 break-throughs on the line dividing East from West, and they believe they can make an advance of 600 kilometers in the first 10 or 14 days.

The reason for saying this is their strategy is that, as I pointed out a moment ago, they have moved from a defensive posture to an offensive posture, and one need only look at some of the new weapons that are in their arsenal. There is the new Russian tank, the T-74, which is, without doubt, one of the finest tanks in the world. When we look at its capability and speed alone, we do not wonder that they talk about advancing 30 kilometers in the first 24 hours. Their progress in the aircraft industry has been phenomenal, as it has been in respect of missiles.

Senator Rowe: Would the honourable senator permit a question in regard to tanks? He mentioned that the Russians have 24,000 tanks deployed within easy access of Western Europe, against 9,000 tanks of the NATO forces. How would the honourable senator equate those? I realize that some of the 24,000 are new tanks, such as the T-74 that he mentioned, but I take it that a lot of them are of the old standard type. How would the 24,000 tanks equate in performance with our 9,000?

Senator McDonald: To put it bluntly, too damn well. The Soviet Union has the capacity today to produce about 3,000 tanks a year. In eight years they could build 24,000. I suggest that there is nothing on the Western front, or that could be used on the Western front in the event of attack, that is less than eight years old. The Russian tanks are good, modern weapons. That is true also of their aircraft and artillery. They have a modern, up-to-date army, equipped with some of the most sophisticated weapons in the world.

However, these facts which I have related bring up two questions. The first is that NATO does not want to fight a war. NATO wants to be in a position where she is strong enough that potential enemies will not take her on. This is our ambition. That is why I am a great advocate of the neutron weapon and the cruise missile. That is why I do not believe we should try to match them tank for tank or gun for gun, as I mentioned earlier, but that we should have these modern weapons, the product of our superior technology, which I believe can prevent a war in Europe.

There have also been some developments in the last year that are in favour of the Warsaw Pact nations. What are they? The friction between Greece and Turkey is as great today as it was a year ago. There is no solution in sight. When we have two members of NATO hating one another probably more than anyone else, that is a detriment to us and a plus factor for the Soviet Union. I believe that the United States arms embargo on Turkey has hurt Turkey's potential to defend herself or to help the rest of us in the Western World.

● (1520)

The developments in southern Africa have attracted much of our attention away from this great problem in central Europe. I referred earlier to the expansion of the Soviet merchant marine. They have a merchant fleet now in every ocean of the world.

Another potential help to the Warsaw Pact has been the flow of western technology into the Soviet Union because of our trade policies. Undoubtedly we have been helpful to them because of this trade.

The second question that comes to my mind, when I review what has happened in the past year, is: Do we have the strategy, or have we developed the strategy, to meet this military force, which is the most powerful, outside of the Western World, that the world has ever known? A lot of us recall, or have read, of the strategies used in the First World War. Some of our allies never learned a damn thing between the First and Second World Wars, and that is why we got chased out of Europe in ten days in 1940. We were fighting a 1916 war, and the aggressor was fighting a 1940 war, and he trimmed the hell out of us. Sometimes I wonder if we are not trying to develop our forces today to do the things we did from 1939 to 1945. I wonder if our strategy has improved or been developed to the point where we can meet these 24,000 tanks, for example, and deal with them. We must recall that when the Germans moved from their own border to the English Channel they did not have 24,000 tanks; they had 400 tanks, that moved at about 15 miles per hour. We are now facing 24,000 tanks that will move at 45 or 50 miles per hour. So our strategies must be changed.

I sometimes think that it is possible to strangle Western Europe without ever firing a shot. Where does the life blood of Western Europe come from? We can talk about oil alone, for example. There is a 90-day supply of oil in Western Europe. That oil must come out of the Middle East, through the Indian Ocean into the Atlantic Ocean, and thence into Western Europe. Where do their minerals come from that supply their industrial plants? By and large, they come out of southern Africa. The British, because of economic conditions, have had to withdraw their navy from those areas of the world. Of course, the United States has a fleet in that area, but in my view NATO should have a fleet there also. What is the sense of having all of this equipment sitting in Europe if somebody shuts off the oil, or shuts off the materials needed to keep industry going? The Indian Ocean is 4,000 miles square, and we have little or no defensive forces in that area.

I have another concern. No power can successfully advance into another country unless it controls the air. The last World War taught us that. Unless you have control of the air, your armies and navies can go nowhere. But what is the situation we face? Certainly we have a lot of airplanes in Western Europe, but they fly off great masses of concrete miles long. No one can tell me that there is an air base in Western Europe that is not targeted now by the Soviet Union and her Warsaw Pact friends. It seems to me that if they are going to advance into Western Europe, every air base in Western Europe capable of handling those modern aircraft will be obliterated in seconds. You would not even get the aircraft off the ground, let alone back on.

This means that we have to move into an entirely different concept with regard to our air forces. The British have designed the only vertical take-off aircraft in our arsenal, the Harrier. The United States Marines have bought some of them. Now they are building an advanced version of the Harrier at McDonnell-Douglas in California. But knowing these facts, or these possibilities, it seems to me that until such time as we can land an airplane in an area the size of this chamber, and run it around behind a bush, we are not going to keep it very long. Further, have we developed a strategy to deal with these problems? I doubt it.

One of the answers to all of the problems confronting us is interoperability and standardization, about which I could talk for days. If we spent less of this money in research and development, and more on purchasing modern arms we would be so much better off. But we have made virtually no progress in this regard. There have been hundreds of speeches made, but we are still in the same situation we were in a year ago, and that is that for every dollar's worth of equipment North America purchases in Europe, Europe purchases ten dollars worth in North America. This is one of the reasons why the Europeans cannot defend themselves, and until such time as their industrial output is comparable to, and compatible with, that of North America this imbalance will continue.

The problem at the moment is that in Western Europe there is no organization that has the power to unite defence industries there to the extent that they are united in North America, and until such time as that happens I have serious doubts that we can proceed to any length with interoperability and standardization.

There is just one example of this that I want to go over with you. When the Germans commenced designing the new Leopard II tank, many people thought that this was to be tank of the future for the allied forces, but it was not very long after the Germans commenced designing this new tank that the Americans started a project called the XM-1, which was to build a new American tank. The next decision was that the Germans would go ahead and design the Leopard in Europe, and the Americans would go ahead and design the XM-1 in the United States, and there would be a sort of shoot-off with the winner taking all. I do not like to criticize the United States, because we have no better friend on earth, but in this area I think they are wrong.

● (1530)

What happened when they brought the Leopard tank to the United States and put it through its tests? The United States Department of Defence refused to make the test results available. They have never been published, but two conflicting reports have leaked out. One is to the effect that the Leopard tank is far better than the XM-1, and the other is to the effect that the XM-1 is far better. I don't know which report to believe. In any event, we are going to have both tanks. In November of 1976 the Chrysler Corporation was given the contract to go ahead with the production of the XM-1.

Some hope was expressed that there might be interoperability between the XM-1 and the Leopard II. For instance, why couldn't they use the same fuel, the same guns, the same ammunition, the same tracks, and the same power plants? But this hope went up the chimney because the Leopard has a diesel engine and burns diesel fuel, and the XM-1 has a turbine engine and burns aviation fuel. Furthermore, the American XM-1 will have a 105-millimetre gun, and the Leopard II will have a 120-millimetre gun. So the ammunition requirements are different.

The end result is that we are not only going to have these two tanks by the late eighties and nineties, but we will have six different types of tanks in our arsenal in Western Europe. There will be the XM-1 with a 105-millimetre gun and a gas turbine engine; the Leopard II with a 120-millimetre gun with smooth bore and diesel engine; the Leopard I with the 105-millimetre gun and a diesel engine; the Chieftan, which is a British tank, with a 120-millimetre, rifle bore, gun and a diesel engine; and the French AMX30 with a 105-millimetre gun and a diesel engine. This is not what we are going to have tomorrow; this is what we are going to have 10 years from now. We are still going to be facing this problem.

I can go on and talk about the Roland missile, which is a surface-to-air missile developed by France and Germany, and purchased by the United States. But the United States just did not purchase it. After they signed that contract with France and Germany, the Americans then spent $256 million re-engineering the Roland missile. This indicates how much it costs today to develop armaments. The Americans say, "Well, sure we spent $256 million redesigning our French-German missile, but we still saved $400 to $600 million," because their estimate of taking it from concept to production would have cost $800 million. Why should the Americans be spending $800 million to do something that the French and the Germans are doing, and probably Britain also.

We have come to the stage where we must say, "You operate in that area, and you operate in that area. We will get more bang for our buck, and we can defend ourselves without increasing defence expenditures beyond what the taxpayer is prepared to pay."

I have talked for too long, but I want to wind up by saying that NATO spends about $27 billion per year on conventional weapons development, production and procurement. I emphasize that amount—it is $27 billion. It seems to me that with proper co-operation between all the member nations of NATO the results of the expenditure of $27 billion could scare the hell out of most of our potential enemies, if not all of them, but when some of it is being wasted indiscriminately, as I think it has been on the Roland missile, then it is not effective.

When the nuclear capability of the West far exceeded that of the East we did not really have to worry about war, but since there has been virtually the same nuclear capability on both sides, and the Soviet Union and her satellites started this build-up of conventional weapons, we have been out of bounds. We have always wanted to cross the river. We have convinced ourselves that we had the same capabilities as they had, and that we could turn them back or convince them never to commence a war. It is as if we have been trying to cross a river that is a mile wide, and nations, either independently or through bilateral or little ad hoc arrangements, have built a dozen bridges out into that river, but not one of them has reached the other side. The structures were washed away because the resources of the individual or co-operating countries were not great enough to complete them. I am convinced that if we pool our efforts, and co-operate with each other in joint ventures, we can build that mile-long bridge and so reach the other side.

On motion of Senator Godfrey, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, November 17, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR IN GALLERY

DR. NOEL MURPHY—MAYOR OF CORNERBROOK,
NEWFOUNDLAND

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, before we begin our regular business I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the presence in the visitors' gallery of a very distinguished Canadian, the Mayor of the City of Cornerbrook, Newfoundland, Dr. Noel Murphy.

Dr. Murphy, while being an outstanding medical specialist, has also had a multi-faceted career in a number of activities of one kind and another, including being, for a number of years, the Leader of Her Majesty's Opposition in the House of Assembly in Newfoundland.

I am sure that all honourable senators will be happy to welcome Dr. Murphy, who was last week re-elected mayor of the second city of Newfoundland, and who served as mayor of that city for some years four or five years ago.

Dr. Murphy is accompanied by Mrs. Murphy, whom we are all happy to see here.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of Report of the Anti-Inflation Board, dated November 4, 1977, to the Governor in Council, pursuant to section 17(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, reporting its reference to the Administrator of the said Act of proposed changes in compensation plan between Philips Electronics Limited and the employees represented by the United Auto Workers, Local 27.

Copies of Report of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, regarding the reference on Dominion Dairies Limited, Toronto, Ontario and proposed price increase, dated November 7, 1977.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

REPORT OF COMMITTEE EXPENSES TABLED

Senator Lafond, Acting Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, which was authorized by the Senate on November 3, 1976 to incur special expenses in connection with its permanent reference relating to the review and scrutiny of statutory instruments, tabled, pursuant to rule 84, a report of the said expenses incurred during the Second Session of the Thirtieth Parliament.

FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Senator Lafond, Acting Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, presented the following report:

Thursday, November 17, 1977

The Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments presents its first report, as follows:

Your committee recommends that its quorum be fixed at seven (7) members, provided that both houses are represented whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, and that the joint chairmen be authorized to hold meetings and receive evidence so long as four (4) members are present, provided that both houses are represented;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such expert staff and such stenographic and clerical staff as may be required; and

Your committee further recommends that it be empowered to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate.

Respectfully submitted,
Paul C. Lafond
Acting Joint Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Lafond: With leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that the report be adopted now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, November 22, 1977, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

● (1410)

Honourable senators, before the question is put, I should like to indicate briefly what we can expect for next week.

In the Senate we shall continue the second reading debate on Bill C-3, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada, and Bill S-3, respecting Canadian non-profit corporations. It is most likely that both bills will go to committee next week. In addition, as honourable senators are aware, there are a number of other items on the order paper with which we shall have to deal next week.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will meet at 9.30 a.m. on Wednesday to continue its study of the budget resolutions respecting income tax. That committee will probably also meet next week on Bill S-2, to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act, but the date and time have yet to be decided.

I am informed that the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science will hold a meeting some time next week to hear evidence respecting its study into such experiences in prenatal life and early childhood as may cause personality disorders or criminal behaviour in later life. Other committee meetings will be scheduled as additional items are referred to committee.

Motion agreed to.

NUCLEAR SAFEGUARDS

CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT—QUESTION

Senator Lafond: Honourable senators, I should like to inquire of the Leader of the Government whether it is possible to have tabled in the Senate the text of the agreement signed yesterday, or the day before, between Canada and the United States on nuclear safeguards?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I shall ascertain whether copies of the agreement are available, and, if so, I will be pleased to table the text.

WEST COAST OIL PORTS

SUSPENSION OF INQUIRY—QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the government leader whether it is true that the federal government has suspended the work of Dr. Andrew Thompson's west coast oil ports inquiry, and, if so, for what reason, in view of the fact that there is a great deal left to know about the environmental risks of landing oil from large oil tankers either at Kitimat or in the Vancouver harbour area?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I will take that question as notice. At the same time, I can confirm that the work of the committee of inquiry has been adjourned until a possible later date.

[Senator Langlois.]

AIR CANADA BILL, 1977

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator McElman for the second reading of Bill C-3, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I moved the adjournment of the debate on two successive days for the particular purpose of allowing myself, and perhaps others, some additional time for that sober second thought which is said to be characteristic of the Senate.

I did so, quite frankly, because I was shocked by the information given to us by Senator Smith (Colchester) in his interpretation of certain provisions of the bill now before us, and by the implications which he suggested might be in the wording of two clauses, and perhaps more than two. For that reason I spent some time during the past two or three days trying to find out whether there was some possible explanation of or justification for the extraordinary powers asked for in this bill. I consulted with legal experts. There has also been a computer search for precedents. Unfortunately, the distinguished government computer broke down yesterday afternoon and again this morning. Therefore, I am unable to say with certainty that there are no precedents. The computer did not turn up any applicable precedents for the wording which Senator Smith (Colchester) brought to our attention the other day.

Surely, I said to myself, there must be some explanation, there must be a justification, there must be something somewhere that would explain Senator Smith's interpretation of this provision. I thought that it might be in some ministerial statement, but I have been unable to find justification in that respect. I thought that it might be in the Interpretation Act or in the general rules governing the interpretation of statutes, but I was unable to determine that. I thought it might be explained by some other clause in the bill, but again I was unable to determine that.

I was unable to find any possible justification for this extraordinary and unprecedented attempt—and I hope it is only an attempt—to extend the powers of the Executive and its intrusion upon the rights and privileges of Parliament. The more I read the bill, the more convinced I became that this is once again a golden opportunity for the Senate to take a stand on a matter of great public importance.

I say that not in a partisan way. Regardless of the political stripe of the government seeking these powers, I would oppose them. I do not say that this intrusion, as I have called it, on the rights and privileges of Parliament is intentional. The evidence appears to be that it may have been unintentional. It may have been bad draftsmanship, or it may have been a last-minute thought parachuted into the bill.

Whatever the causality is, it seems certain to me that this appears to be an occasion on which the Senate has a glorious opportunity to amend and improve a bad bill, which is one of the functions on which we so often pride ourselves in the Senate.

This bill deals with the reorganization of Air Canada. I agree wholeheartedly with Senator Smith that the reorganization of Air Canada is long overdue, and I am sure most senators will agree with that. The degree of independence this will give—particularly from Canadian National Railways' management—is in the public interest. I commend the government on their decision to continue Air Canada as a profit-oriented organization, which it has always been. I am sure those in authority in Air Canada are equally happy that this reorganization bill is before us.

In the recent past Air Canada has had some problems. There have been allegations—some would say more than allegations—of an inadvertent venture into operations that, if not illegal, were certainly said to have been beyond the authority given to the corporation under the enabling statute.

We may find that there is a possible excuse for some of the excessive provisions in the bill in that they are a genuine and honest attempt to keep Air Canada out of that kind of trouble. I think the most amazing near attempt at justification of these extraordinary powers, without specific reference to clause 6(2), which is the one to which I take main objection, is in the minister's words; "Well, Air Canada has had this problem of getting into illegal operations, and we think it is absolutely necessary now that the ministry, by order in council, be given the authority to say to Air Canada, 'Now, if you want to go into any operation or activity—'" which is the word generally used in the bill, "'—and you think it is illegal, come and see us and we will make it legal.'" That, I think, is a fair interpretation of the intent of this clause.

• (1420)

I am sure that honourable senators will have noticed that, leaving aside the earlier clauses of the bill, which are the usual ones, clause 6, first of all, deals with the capacities and activities of the corporation, and this is more or less in the usual form that we would expect in the case of the authority given to a crown corporation, or the incorporation of a private company. The corporation may—and I will run through these quickly—establish and operate the business of an air carrier; go into the hotel business; go into the business of operating surface vehicles; operate and maintain aircraft; organize and conduct tours; operate computer and teleprocessing systems; make provision for pension plans, insurance plans, and so on; and, of course, it has the usual investment authority.

The final paragraph in clause 6(1) reads:

(i) do such other things as are necessary or incidental to the carrying out of its activities.

Again, that is a normal authority given to a company, particularly one in the public service area. It has the power to do such things as are necessary or incidental to the carrying out of its activities, and I make no objection to that.

I am going to skip subclause (2) for the moment.

Subclause (3) constitutes the corporation for certain purposes as a natural person.

Clause 4 is a negative clause. It prohibits the corporation from entering into certain activities without ministerial approval, and I have no objection to that.

Then we return to clause 6(2), and there we find the extraordinary statement which Senator Smith (Colchester) read to us, and which I think I repeated on the same day. Clause 6(2) says:

(2) The Governor in Council may, by order, authorize the Corporation to engage in or carry on any activities not otherwise authorized by this Act.

The very phrase "not otherwise authorized by this Act" is most unusual. I have found two previous examples of the use of that phrase, but they were very incidental and not in this context. Surely in this context here this can only mean that Air Canada may, with cabinet or ministerial approval, by order in council, enter into any activity whatsoever that the minister approves. Some might say, "What is wrong with that?" Well, of course, there are many businesses and many individuals who would be greatly concerned if they did not know, and they would most certainly want to know, what business activities, other than those authorized by the bill if it becomes an act, might be engaged in by this very rich and very successful crown corporation.

One of the extraordinary things about it is that this clause actually authorizes the minister to authorize the corporation to go into activities that are unnecessary for and not incidental to its objects, although they are not called objects in the bill. Surely this must be an error in draftsmanship. Perhaps it was parachuted in at the last minute to make sure that the minister, in the event that Air Canada became involved in illegal activities, would be able to make such activities legal.

Having given Air Canada the authorization to do whatever is necessary and incidental to the carrying out of its activities, it then says that the minister may go beyond that, that the minister may take the position that Parliament intended such-and-such to be a description of the activities of Air Canada.

Having laid down the activities that Air Canada can engage in, the bill then says that the minister may allow it to engage in other activities, even if they are not necessary. This paragraph must mean that the minister may also give Air Canada the authority to do what is not necessary and what is in no way incidental to the carrying out of its activities.

Whether this is a drafting error, an over-reach of good intentions, or whatever it may be, surely it represents an example of the type of tidying up which should be carried out by the Senate. To my mind this provides an excellent opportunity for the Senate to demonstrate its usefulness and determination to correct these types of errors.

There was very little discussion on this particular point in the other place. The discussion seemed to circle around it, concentrating on other authorizations which seemed, to some, objectionable. There was no direct attack on this particular subclause. I can only suggest as the reason the fact that there was a good deal of concentration on such aspects of the bill as profitability of the corporation, and so forth.

An Hon. Senator: Do you mean to say that Joe was asleep?

Senator Grosart: Perhaps he was having a midsummer night's dream of being on the government side. That is a possibility. Certainly, Senator Smith (Colchester) was not asleep, and I think all of us in the Senate should be grateful to him for bringing this to our attention.

I wish to make a brief mention of clause 8, the other clause to which Senator Smith takes considerable objection. It has the same impact as clause 6. It states:

The Corporation shall, in the exercise of its capacities and the carrying out of its activities, comply with directions of a general nature given to it in writing by the Governor in Council.

The best excuse I can offer for that is that it must, again, be a drafting error. Who is going to define what constitutes "directions of a general nature" and what constitutes directions of an ungeneral nature?

I would not have been surprised if the wording had been "comply with directions of a specific nature." It merely says, "of a general nature."

We are told that the intent of this is to put the government in a position to insist that Air Canada, in spite of its requirement to operate as a profitable corporation, run feeder lines that are not in themselves commercially viable. If that is so, surely there are better ways of achieving that desirable objective than this omnibus type of negative requirement. Here we have a corporation set up as a crown corporation under the Financial Administration Act now being given, more or less, the status of its competitors, and the enabling legislation then says that, in the carrying out of its activities, it must "comply with directions of a general nature given to it in writing by the Governor in Council."

● (1430)

In other words, the minister may not only say that he will give permission to do things that are absolutely unnecessary to Air Canada's function, but he may also give directions to do things that may be unnecessary.

I am not objecting to the purpose that this may be designed to achieve. I am objecting to the clumsy way it is done and the implications on the relations in the future between Air Canada and the Government of Canada. I suggest that this is a matter that should have careful consideration in the Senate. I hope it will be consideration of a non-partisan nature. It so happens that the issue has been raised on this side, but I think that no honourable senator will allow his judgment, in whatever final decision the Senate may make, to be biased by that fact. We had evidence in the last session that that kind of bias does not exist here, and I am sure it will not exist when we come to deal in an operational way with this bill.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Benidickson: Honourable senators, may I ask Senator Grosart a question? I happened to listen to his interview on CTV this morning at seven o'clock.

Senator Grosart: Thank you for mentioning the time.

[Senator Grosart.]

Senator Benidickson: I congratulate him for it. I thought he was generous in saying that while faulty, particularly in respect of clause 6(2), this bill might be subject to change by the government itself seeing better light. I was very curious on hearing him say that the opposition had made a computer search for precedents for this type of legislation—that is, clause 6(2). I have to reply on 32 years of parliamentary experience.

I am sympathetic to his criticism of clause 6(2), and I think this is an opportunity for the Senate and one of its committees to consider this matter very carefully. Do we have the ability now to search legislation mechanically, so that we do not have to rely on our memories, to ascertain whether the Governor in Council in the past has ever been given this type of authority?

Senator Grosart: I did not name the specific computer that was used in this case. I merely say that the Senate is fortunate in having an excellent Law Clerk, to whom we are perfectly entitled to refer questions such as this. I can ask the Law Clerk if there are any precedents for this, and if there are he will find them. That is, I am quite sure honourable senators will agree, part of his function here.

Senator Benidickson: My impression was that you referred this specific clause to a computer.

Senator Grosart: Yes, I asked the Law Clerk specifically if he could find any precedent for the use of this particular phrase, and he did find two, but there was agreement that they are not relevant here. I was looking for precedents. There are two precedents—and, if I may say so before directly answering the question, they are both bad precedents—for this very wide extension of the power of ministerial discretion. One is in the Canadian National Railways Act and the other is in the Petro-Canada Act, but in both cases the extension of ministerial discretion related to powers to which those corporations were already confined. That is why this particular use of that clause is unprecedented.

As to the computer, our Law Clerk reported to me that he had, in the course of his research, referred the question to a computer within the government service.

Senator Benidickson: Our Law Clerk?

Senator Grosart: Yes, our Law Clerk. I might say that if Senator Benidickson has not referred matters to him, he has missed a golden opportunity to obtain very valuable assistance, if he needed it, from time to time.

The Law Clerk told me that part of his research concerned this computer input. It entailed putting this wording into the computer, and he reported to me, in general terms, the results. I would not want to say that what I have said about its being unprecedented should be in any way attributed to him. That is my interpretation of the report he gave to me on his researches to date.

Senator Benidickson: Honourable senators, I thought that this clause was rather remarkable and without many precedents, but I did not know that there was any such computer that I heard my honourable friend refer to on television this morning. He made it rather clear that the opposition had engaged the services of a computer and had found that this wording was unprecedented. I, myself, have to rely on what is sometimes a very poor memory, but it goes back over 32 years in Parliament.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, if Senator Grosart will accept another question I will ask him if, in his investigations in preparing himself for his remarks today, he considered the use of the words that head clause 6: "Capacities and Activities of the Corporation." I do not recall encountering those particular words before in a description of the objects of a corporation. Are they normally used now in legislation? Why are they substituted for a term such as "Objects"?

My second question is: If those words are to be so used should not the word "activities" in clause 6(1)(i) have a capital "A", because it refers to the activities authorized? Otherwise, even clause 6(1)(i) becomes objectionable in that it will empower the corporation to "do such other things as are necessary or incidental to the carrying out of its activities," whether those activities be authorized or not.

I am just wondering whether the honourable senator had addressed his mind to these two questions.

Senator Grosart: I can say to Senator van Roggen that I was surprised at that heading. I thought it more important to research other things than the use of that particular heading, but it did throw up the question as to why there are no objects given to the corporation. I do not know the answer. Normally, a corporation, particularly a crown corporation, is given objects. There have been cases where we have had a preliminary philosophical discussion on what the government expected from a corporation, but I do not recall the use of that phrase, "Capacities and Activities of the Corporation." I think it is just another indication that the overreaching of this bill comes from a set of specific circumstances that the government felt was important to deal with. They have overreached in doing so, and that is the case we are making.

I am not quite clear as to the honourable senator's second question.

Senator van Roggen: My point is that if "activities" is to be a defined term, such as "objects" would be, then "activities," as used in clause 6(1)(i), should have a capital "A" so that the corporation is confined to those particular activities, and not just any activities it may be engaging in, whether authorized or unauthorized.

Senator Grosart: I take it, Senator van Roggen, that you are referring to the marginal note, "Capacities and activities of the Corporation." I am not an authority on drafting, and any answer I give might add to the bad draftsmanship we already have before us.

Senator Goldenberg: Will Senator Grosart allow me a question—and I preface it by saying that I sympathize with the question he has raised?

● (1440)

In the earlier part of his remarks, Senator Grosart said—and I do not think he intended to convey the meaning that I took from it—that Air Canada had engaged in illegal operations. Did the honourable senator not mean unauthorized operations rather than illegal operations? I suppose if Air Canada engaged in promoting gambling or, as Senator Grosart mentioned the other day, porno, it would be illegal.

Senator Flynn: Not necessarily.

Senator Goldenberg: I am asking Senator Grosart whether he would not say "unauthorized" rather than "illegal", in fairness to Air Canada.

Senator Flynn: You did not mean that yourself.

Senator Benidickson: Let Senator Grosart speak.

Senator Grosart: If I were as good a lawyer as Senator Goldenberg I might be able to answer that question. As a layman, I assume that anything outside the law is illegal. I may be wrong in that. If it is unauthorized by a statute it is, therefore, beyond the legal authority, the legal power, given a corporation by that statute. As a layman, I would say any action contrary to a statute prohibiting, either by implication or otherwise, a certain act is what I would call illegal. If "unauthorized" is a better word I would agree with it, but that rather points up the argument I was making, because "authorized" is the word used in the bill. In discussing this the minister used the word "illegal," and my criticism was that the minister is now put in a position to authorize illegal activities.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I rise at this point, not to address myself specifically to the merits or demerits of the point of view raised by my honourable friend, Senator Grosart, but to say that, although the point may be well taken, I think it has been prematurely raised at this stage, because we are now on second reading when we are called upon to consider the principle of the bill.

When my honourable friend refers to possible errors in draftsmanship, I think he will agree with me that this is neither the time nor the place to endeavour to correct, or even to consider, such possible errors. There is a time and place for that, and that is in committee when this bill is referred to a committee, which I understand the sponsor (Senator McEIman) intends to do.

I think that fact was recognized by Senator Grosart when he limited his remarks to that aspect instead of moving a motion in amendment, which I am sure he knows would be out of order at this stage. I do not have to cite precedents. In this case, my intuition told me that such an amendment was to be expected at this stage. That was after Senator Grosart's remarks on Tuesday night and his further remarks yesterday, when he said he was asking for a further adjournment of the debate because he wanted legal counsel's advice. That was a clear indication that he was going to oppose clauses 6 and 8 as presently drafted. That is why I think that we on this side, at any rate as far as I am concerned, were right in assuming that such an amendment would be moved at this stage.

However, even though such an amendment has not been moved, I think it is opportune to draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that now is not the time or place to consider such a motion. I believe it would be unfair to honourable senators to ask them, at this point in time, to give an opinion on draftsmanship before they have had a chance to hear those who drafted the bill, and to hear witnesses and find out whether or not there is any justification for this drafting of the bill.

I do not say that in opposition to the point of view expressed by Senator Grosart. It is a point of view that might well be taken, but I would not dare to make up my mind until I have heard evidence from the experts who are called upon to prepare legislation such as this.

That is all I wish to say at this stage. I leave it to honourable senators to consider the argument of Senator Grosart at the proper time and place, which is when the bill is before the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I believe I am entitled to speak again on a matter on which I think I may have been misinterpreted.

My quick answer to the Deputy Leader of the Government is that I never said anything about an amendment at this stage. It is a pipe dream of his. He is tilting at windmills.

Senator Langlois: I never said you had such an intention.

Senator Grosart: Of course you did.

Senator Langlois: I said we expected it from what you said the other day.

Senator Grosart: It may be another case of great expectations.

I assure honourable senators that I have not made up my mind whether anybody should proceed in this, that or some other manner. I am not saying I might not be convinced that that is the proper way to proceed. I do not know at this time. Others will make that decision. Presumably the decision will be largely that of the Leader of the Opposition, but I do not know at this moment. I have not the faintest idea what his decision might be.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, for Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

CANADA NON-PROFIT CORPORATIONS BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. George J. McIlraith moved the second reading of Bill S-3, respecting Canadian non-profit corporations.

He said: Honourable senators, there are some 15,000 non-profit organizations carrying on business in Canada. Of that number, some 3,000 are federal non-profit corporations; and of those 3,000, approximately 2,000 are incorporated under the Canada Corporations Act or its predecessor act, the Companies Act; 1,000 are incorporated under the Boards of Trade Act; and a couple of dozen are incorporated under special acts of Parliament.

A bill to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act is now before the Senate, and in his introduction of that bill

[Senator Langlois.]

Senator Lang drew our attention to the Canada Business Corporations Act as passed in 1975, to the amending clauses in the bill he was presenting—dealing mainly with administrative changes and changes in the light of experience with that excellent act rather than with major points of principle—and also to a new French language version of that act and the need for it. I do not propose to repeat anything he said in his excellent speech on that occasion. However, I would like to take a few moments in which to give some of the background of the legislation which brings about the present bill.

● (1450)

As honourable senators know, the Canada Corporations Act was the usual vehicle for incorporation of what were called non-share-capital companies. In 1970 proposals were brought forward for the Canada Business Corporations Act, and that was done by way of a draft bill, which was circulated, discussed and so on, and that led to the introduction of the bill on which such good work was done by the Senate committee which examined it, and which resulted in the legislation. However, at that time it was pointed out by those preparing those proposals, and the proposals themselves indicated, that there would be two acts replacing the Canada Corporations Act. One would be the Canada Business Corporations Act, which is now the law, and the other would be legislation dealing with the non-share-capital corporations.

In consequence of that, Professor Peter Cumming of Osgoode Hall Law School was retained to prepare proposals for the legislation that is now before us. Although his proposals were presented in 1973, before the Canada Business Corporations Act was passed, it was the intention to present the bill now before us immediately after that act became law. That was not done because of the general dissatisfaction that was expressed with the French language version of the Canada Business Corporations Act as it was passed, which version is being replaced by the amending bill, Bill S-2, now before the Senate. In consequence of that, it is now possible to bring forward this non-profit corporations legislation with the French language version having received similar treatment to that of the Canada Business Corporations Act.

This bill does not revolutionize the federal law relating to non-profit corporations but, like the Canada Business Corporations Act, it does attempt to clear away a great many conceptual myths, to eliminate unnecessary formalities, and render compliance with and administration of the law more efficient. For example, it presupposes incorporation as of right, rather than as a matter of grace from the crown, as was inherent in the old letters patent method of incorporation.

The new legislation does many things by way of improving, or, indeed, providing and improving, legislative provisions concerning disclosure, in the case of charitable corporations, to the public or, in the case of membership corporations, to the members. It proceeds, of course, on the new conceptual basis of referring to these corporations as non-profit corporations instead of non-share-capital corporations, and it divides them into two categories, one category being the non-profit charitable corporations, the other being the membership corporations. The distinction is important, because when we come to matters such as accountability, distribution of any assets on windup, or similar provisions, it will be seen that the charitable corporations, in many cases, derive part of their funds, or are funded in one way or another, from the public treasury as well as from private sources, and there is answerability to the public for them, whereas membership corporations embody the activities of the members of the corporations and, really, are not to the same extent the concern of the public at large, but are to a greater extent the concern of the members only. For that reason, the bill proceeds in this way.

This measure attempts to create a system that assures that public contributors will be treated fairly, that permits members to participate effectively in the administration of a corporation's affairs and, equally important, enables corporate managers to achieve the purposes of such corporations effectively. Thus, like the Canada Business Corporations Act, this bill, although quite lengthy, is, in my opinion, more clear, comprehensive and practical than the present legislation.

The third major change is that the proposed law is made to apply to all federal non-profit corporations, including those incorporated under the existing Canada Corporations Act, all non-profit special act corporations, and all corporations subject to the Boards of Trade Act. There are many of the latter type of corporations. Bill S-3 parallels in all its substantive provisions very closely the Canada Business Corporations Act, and any departure from the provisions in that act is only to the extent necessary to fulfil the objectives of the non-profit corporations. In other words, there is no departure in principle anywhere other than is made necessary by reason of the nature of the corporation.

Perhaps I can sum it up by saying that this bill attempts to create a system that enables the non-profit corporations to operate in a way consistent with their different objectives and purposes, and consistent with the Canada Business Corporations Act. It is, I believe, a wholly desirable improvement, and the timing of it is very fortunate indeed.

If and when the bill receives second reading, I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Honourable senators, I commend this bill to your favourable consideration.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, could the sponsor of the bill tell us if hereafter non-profit corporations will be precluded from seeking a charter from Parliament? There are non-profit corporations which have such charters. Owners think they are of special value because they are parliamentary charters. I think it should always be the right of the citizen to come to Parliament for a charter, but will that be difficult when application can be made for letters patent?

● (1500)

Senator McIlraith: In reply to the honourable senator's question, it is always the right of any group to apply to Parliament for any legislation. I cannot speak for Parliament by saying what Parliament will or will not do in the event of such applications. Perhaps it would be relevant if I drew the attention of honourable senators to one or two provisions of the bill.

The bill presupposes that all non-profit corporations incorporated under the existing legislation must apply within five years to continue under the new act. If they fail to apply, they are deemed to be dissolved.

There is provision with respect to those corporations incorporated under the Boards of Trade Act, because there always arises the problem that they cover a geographical area and there is a delineation of territory involved. That is now transferred to the director administering the act. Interestingly enough, there is a very good provision, which seems to occur throughout the bill, regarding an appeal from that discretionary exercise, or from another discretionary exercise, to the courts.

With respect to corporations incorporated by special statute, there is not the corresponding provision that they are deemed to be dissolved if they fail to apply. They may apply. There is, however, a provision that the Governor in Council may exempt any of such existing corporations from the need to apply, or the consequences in that respect.

Perhaps it might be useful if I placed on record clause 241 of the bill, which reads:

After this Act comes into force no body corporate may be incorporated or its incorporation continued under Part II of the Canada Corporations Act or under the Boards of Trade Act.

That does not, of course, answer the honourable senator's question, but it does deal with the other two points. I have mentioned the manner in which statutory corporations are dealt with.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, for Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 22, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 22, 1977

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that messages had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the names of Messrs. Murta, Corriveau, Loisel (Saint-Henri) and Langlois had been substituted for those of Messrs. Baldwin, Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier), Leblanc (Laurier) and Pinard, and that the names of Messrs. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier), Leblanc (Laurier) and Pinard had been substituted for those of Messrs. Corriveau, Loisel (Saint-Henri) and Langlois on the list of members appointed to serve on the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Canadian Saltfish Corporation, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 32 of the Saltfish Act, Chapter 37 (1st Supplement), and section 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Statement showing Classification of Loans in Canadian Currency of the Chartered Banks of Canada as at September 30, 1977, pursuant to section 119(1) of the Bank Act, Chapter B-1, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Northern Canada Power Commission, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 24 of the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, Chapter N-21, and section 75(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Reports of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting certain compensation plans, as follows:

1. Carleton University, Ottawa, Ontario and the group of its employees represented by Graphic Arts International Union, Local 224. Order dated November 16, 1977.

2. Treasury Board of Canada, Ottawa, Ontario and the group of its firefighters, represented by the Public Service Alliance of Canada. Order dated November 17, 1977.

Report of the Tax Review Board for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 17 of the Tax Review Board Act, Chapter 11, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

Copies of contracts, pursuant to section 20(3) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, Chapter R-9, R.S.C., 1970, entered into between the Government of Canada and

1. The Government of the Province of Alberta (English Text).
2. The Municipalities of Stony Plain and Fort Saskatchewan, in the Province of Alberta (English Text).
3. The Municipality of Kelowna, in the Province of British Columbia (English Text).

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit while the Senate is sitting tomorrow, Wednesday, November 23, 1977, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMENDATION OF INITIATIVE TAKEN BY PRESIDENT OF EGYPT AND PRIME MINISTER OF ISRAEL

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Buckwold:

That this House commend the President of Egypt and the Prime Minister of Israel for their efforts toward establishing a friendly relationship between their two countries and express the hope that this initiative will lead to a lasting peace in the Middle East.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

ALASKA HIGHWAY PIPELINE

INTERPRETATION OF AGREEMENT—QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on Wednesday, November 16 questions were asked by Honourable Senators Olson, Greene and van Roggen concerning interpretation of the pipeline agreement between Canada and the United States. I would like now to respond, at least in part, to these questions.

The pipeline agreement between Canada and the United States provides that the construction and operation of the pipeline should advance the national, economic and energy interests and maximize related industrial benefits of both countries and that the supply of goods and services to the project should be on generally competitive terms. The Canadian government does not consider that any misunderstanding of these objectives exists between the two parties to the agreement, and at present, therefore, no negotiations are taking place. If specific problems do arise, either Canada or the United States can have recourse to the consultation procedure established under Article VII of the agreement.

● (2010)

Although the pipeline company's application to the National Energy Board did contain a certain percentage of Canadian content, the board's decision, which may be superseded by legislation to be introduced during the course of this session, dealt with this question in terms of optimizing, so far as practicable, the level of Canadian content with respect to the origin of products, services and their constituent components. The board also recommended that Canadians have a fair and competitive opportunity to participate in all facets of the project. To this end, the board further stipulated that the company should submit to the NEB for its approval a report specifying the proposed contractual and purchasing arrangements for procuring goods and services for the project. The legislation would be designed to preserve the intent of the NEB decision in this respect. Consultations are now in progress between government officials and the Foothills Pipeline Company concerning the company's procurement plans.

Discussions are also under way with the U.S.A. on pipe specifications. The first meeting of the Canada-U.S.A. technical study group took place in Ottawa on November 16, and further meetings are scheduled. Without going into the detail of these intergovernmental discussions, I can state that all pipe under consideration for Canadian sections of the pipeline can be manufactured in Canada; the pipe which best meets the safety and technical requirements can be fabricated by more than one Canadian producer. I would also draw attention to the fact that the Canada-U.S.A. pipeline agreement clearly states that the final decision on pipe specifications for the Canadian section of the pipeline will be made by Canadian regulatory authorities.

THE SENATE

HEATING OF OFFICES—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a question was asked relating to the heating levels maintained in government buildings. Without belabouring the reply—

Senator Flynn: Do you mean the heating systems?

Senator Perrault: —requested by Senator Forsey, who, unfortunately, is not with us this evening—

Senator Flynn: Yes, because of that.

Senator Perrault: —the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced in the House of Commons on February 6, 1975, that the federal government had embarked on its own "In-house Energy Conservation Program," consisting of programs devised and agreed upon by the Departments of Energy, Mines and Resources, Public Works, Supply and Services, and the Treasury Board. It was also announced that the Department of Public Works, with the consultation and support of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, was promulgating revised guidelines for the operation of general office and similar space in federal buildings, which include the following: Maximum heating temperature, working hours, 70 degrees Fahrenheit; silent hours, 65 degrees Fahrenheit. For some reason, these temperatures are given in Fahrenheit.

Senator Flynn: What is meant by "silent hours"?

Senator Perrault: It may well mean when there is no debate in progress.

The guidelines continue: Minimum cooling temperature, working hours, 77 degrees Fahrenheit; silent hours, 65 degrees Fahrenheit.

Senator Greene: It is never silent when Jacques is around.

Senator Perrault: The Secretary of the Treasury Board wrote to all deputy heads of departments and heads of agencies on May 27, 1976, advising them of the cabinet's decision concerning the responsibilities of departments and agencies in implementing the government's in-house energy conservation program and, in summarizing major elements of the program, directed that:

—The Department of Public Works' guidelines for energy-efficient building operation are to be implemented immediately in all federally-owned and operated office accommodation—

The Department of Public Works has implemented the guidelines for maximum heating temperatures in the Centre Block.

Honourable senators, I know I am taking some time this evening—

Senator Flynn: I wonder if I might put a question to the Leader of the Government at this point. Do these guidelines provide for the same level of temperature in this house as in the other place?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, because of the super-heated oratory in the other place these days, I hardly think the furnace temperature levels would have to be very high.

WEST COAST OIL PORTS

SUSPENSION OF INQUIRY—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on November 17, Senator Austin inquired about the work of Dr. Andrew Thompson's west coast oil ports inquiry. The question asked whether or not that inquiry had been suspended and, if so, for what reason, in view of the fact—to quote Senator Austin—“that there is a great deal left to know about the environmental risks of landing oil from large oil tankers either at Kitimat or in the Vancouver harbour area.”

The reply is as follows: The west coast oil ports inquiry has been “recessed” rather than suspended. The reasons for this recess were recently outlined by Dr. Thompson, these being primarily that since the withdrawal of the Trans-Mountain Pipe Line Limited proposal, there were no active applications before the federal government for the construction of an oil terminal on Canada's west coast. Secondly, perhaps as a result of the first, industry participation at the hearings was considered inadequate.

Dr. Thompson will review the evidence before him and hear further from the participants before the end of this year. He will then submit a statement of proceedings to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment and the Minister of Transport by the end of March 1978. Dr. Thompson will only consider the evidence and information he will have received on the first two phases of the planned six-phase inquiry in writing his statement. He will also submit recommendations as to whether or not the inquiry should continue and, if the latter, the plan and schedule for the continuation of the inquiry.

ALASKA HIGHWAY PIPELINE

INTERPRETATION OF AGREEMENT—SUPPLEMENTARY QUESTIONS

Senator Manning: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask the Leader of the Government a supplementary question in light of the answers he gave to Senator Olson's questions on the Alaska Highway pipeline?

He made reference, if I understood him correctly, to a requirement that the company responsible for the construction would submit to the National Energy Board particulars regarding Canadian content in terms of material, labour, and so forth. Is it the intention of the government to require the National Energy Board to become the regulatory body in matters of this kind?

If that is the intention, it would be a radical departure from the provisions of the National Energy Board Act with respect to the type of regulation the board is designed to enforce. It seems to me, without knowing the details, that it would be more appropriate for a department of government to deal with such a subject as Canadian content, especially when two nations are involved in matters that may arise under that head.

[Senator Perrault.]

Senator Perrault: I know all honourable senators appreciate the observations made by Senator Manning on this matter. It is a subject about which he possesses a good deal of knowledge. In replying to his question, I can only refer to the supplemental information provided by the responsible minister. The minister stated in a recent reply in the other place that the board also requires that the pipeline companies submit for its approval a report setting out proposed contractual purchasing arrangements for providing goods and services for the project.

The reply goes on to state that although the board's decision may be overtaken by legislation to be introduced this session, the legislation will be designed to preserve the intent of the board's decision in this respect and provide an effective monitoring of the pipeline companies' procurement policy. So this is a matter which could well be the subject of legislation in the current session of Parliament.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I wish to express my appreciation to the Leader of the Government for the detail in which he answered the questions I asked a few days ago respecting this matter, but I am a little concerned about that part of his reply that used the word “economic” in terms of procurement policies.

● (2020)

I appreciate the leader's comment that legislation may supersede any commitment made to the National Energy Board respecting Canadian content, but I ask him if it is the intention of the government to include in the legislation a provision as specific as the statement made by the company to the National Energy Board when it said, I think, that the Canadian content would be 91.3 per cent and gave some kind of an undertaking to that effect; or is the legislation to contain a provision, as mentioned in the other part of his answer, that procurement policies, including those respecting labour, will be open and subject to economic conditions?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, concern has been expressed about the possibility that Canadian suppliers will not have an opportunity to compete on a fair economic basis with suppliers from the United States. May I say that the government is very much aware of the need to protect Canadian suppliers against imports of foreign low-cost or subsidized steel. This pipeline agreement not only provides for the supply of goods and services on generally competitive terms, but also specifically states that the construction and operation of the pipeline should advance the national economic and energy interests and maximize related industrial benefits in each country.

As has been stated on other occasions both in this chamber and elsewhere, and again this evening by me, the government does not consider there is any contradiction between these two provisions of the agreement. There is a determination to make sure that Canadian companies and Canadian steel provisioners are going to be given a full competitive opportunity to provide their products for this pipeline, and that is clearly understood.

Senator Olson: As a further supplementary question, may I ask the Leader of the Government to say, at some time later if necessary, whether there will be any preference given to Canadian suppliers, particularly to suppliers who will have to set in place a production capability to supply some of the material other than pipe between now and when the construction begins? If substantial expenditures of capital are needed to set up the producing capability between now and then, it would be unfair, of course, if those manufacturers are undercut by some economic basis that is unknown to them when they make the capital expenditures.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, further information will be sought on this important question, and I would much prefer to take as notice the request for clarification made by Senator Olson. The information sought by the honourable senator is important. I hope to make a statement within a few days.

Senator Greene: Would the honourable Leader of the Government permit a further supplementary question? Inasmuch as he has adverted to legislation in the matter, I wonder whether he could inform this honourable Senate whether or not there is to be any priority in respect of labour? I think the government has made its intention clear that there will be priority for native labour for the residents of the north, but it is also national policy, if I understand it, to provide work for those regions of Canada which are most depressed. Will persons from those areas of Canada where unemployment is the highest, namely, largely the eastern provinces and the Province du Québec, be given a priority in respect of labour after that possibly given to the native people of the north?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, there have been some reports in the media regarding the use on this project of American pipe and the employment of American workers. There have been certain statements attributed in the media to certain labour officials in the United States.

Whether these reports are accurate remains to be seen, but, so far as economic benefit and economic advantage are concerned, Canadian workers are very much included in that definition. The words "economic benefit and economic advantage" do not relate solely to the materials which will be part of this project.

There is a determination on the part of the Government of Canada to have Canadian labour fully involved in this pipeline project. And again I go to a statement made by the minister on this subject, when these reports were first made public about the employment of American pipe and American workers:

The Canadian government does not consider that there is any misunderstanding between the two parties to the Agreement on the Agreement's stated objective of advancing the national economic interests and maximizing related industrial benefits of each country.

Benefits include the workers of Canada!

If any specific misunderstandings or problems do arise, there is a provision in the Agreement, Article VII, for consultation between the two countries, and Canada will take advantage of this provision, if it becomes necessary.

Having said this, honourable senators, I will endeavour to include in my later statement on the subject more particular reference to the position of Canadian workers in relation to the proposed project. I will endeavour to provide that information as quickly as possible.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON CONCENTRATION OF CORPORATE POWER

PUBLICATION OF REPORT—QUESTION

Senator Benidickson: Honourable senators, I have a question to ask the Leader of the Government with respect to the royal commission dealing with corporate mergers and monopolies. I have not given the leader any notice of this question, but my concern about this matter is great.

May I preface my question briefly by recalling to the memory of all senators that on Wednesday, March 26, 1976, the Senate met at 10 o'clock in the morning to adjourn for the Easter recess. I had read an early morning newspaper and was rather exercised by the news that there might be a merger between Argus Corporation Limited and Power Corporation of Canada Limited, or that Argus might be taken over by Power Corporation. In the few hours available I prepared a notice of inquiry and presented it to the Senate when it met that morning. During the Easter recess the cabinet took notice of my inquiry and appointed a royal commission.

I realize that that happened some time ago. In the meantime the chairman of the commission, Mr. Robert Bryce, for whom I have deep affection and the highest regard, felt obliged to resign because of ill health. I have been very concerned about this since, and it still is a concern to me. Could the Leader of the Government report to the Senate on what events have developed since the chairman resigned, and indicate when we might receive a report from that royal commission?

• (2030)

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I should like to take that question as notice. However, the latest information made available to me, which was approximately one month ago, was to the effect that the report had been written and it was hoped to meet a deadline of December 31 of this year. However, there could be some extension of that date and, if so, I shall report to the Senate.

Senator Benidickson: Is the report to have only the endorsement of the two commissioners other than Mr. Bryce?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that information will be obtained.

THE LATE JOHN FITZGERALD KENNEDY

ANNIVERSARY OF ASSASSINATION OF FORMER PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Senator Greene: Honourable senators, may I respectfully ask the Senate to note that today marks the 14th anniversary of the assassination of that great friend of Canada's, and great post-World War II leader, the late John Fitzgerald Kennedy, former President of the United States.

AIR CANADA BILL, 1977

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, November 17, the debate on the motion of Senator McElman for second reading of Bill C-3, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I adjourned this debate because I could not resist the temptation to scold my friend Senator Langlois a little.

Senator Langlois: It is a bad habit.

Senator Flynn: It is a long time since I last did it, but I felt it was a splendid opportunity to do so with a smile and as a joke.

Senator Smith (Colchester) and Senator Grosart have drawn the attention of the Senate to the scope of clause 6(2) of the Air Canada bill which authorizes the Governor in Council to allow this corporation to engage in just about any sort of activity. I think it is obvious to all senators that this is quite astonishing and unacceptable. Having said that, I could not help smiling when Senator Langlois told us:

In this case, my intuition told me that such an amendment was to be expected at this stage. That was after Senator Grosart's remarks on Tuesday night and his further remarks yesterday, when he said he was asking for a further adjournment of the debate because he wanted legal counsel's advice. That was a clear indication that he was going to oppose clauses 6 and 8 as presently drafted. That is why I think that we on this side, at any rate as far as I am concerned,—

I wish to underline "we on this side," because I do not know to which colleagues he was referring; probably not to Senator Hayden, perhaps not even to the sponsor of this bill, Senator McElman.

—were right in assuming that such amendment would be moved at this stage.

Well, this reminds me somewhat of Senator Langlois's usual concern each time the opposition succeeds in demonstrating the inadequacies in a bill. He is always afraid the government will make a mistake, but he should not be. He may have feared this on occasions, but there is no point now and I can tell Senator Langlois that he can sleep soundly because there is no danger of this.

The second thing that amused me about the comments of Senator Langlois is when he indicated that we are at the second reading stage and that our comments were irrelevant since we are studying the principle of the bill.

Well, I would like to tell Senator Langlois that even though we are studying the principle of the bill, we can of course draw the attention of the Senate to some weaknesses in the bill so that the committee to which it is referred will know the aspects we are concerned about. We are paving the way. To put it better, I could add, as lawyer Lepotiron, LLB, used to say—is it not so, Senator Fournier?—that in fact this clause concerns the principle of the bill. Do we want to create a corporation which will deal with air transportation or which will sell potato chips? In fact, this is what the bill suggests; the Governor in Council can authorize the corporation to do anything it wishes. I suggest that this concerns the principle of the bill. As for the answer to this question, if there is any, we shall have a better opportunity to find it at the committee stage. I am in complete agreement on this point. It is not a matter of voting against the principle of the bill. It is simply a matter of a choice between two possibilities; either we will get a satisfactory explanation—and I do not expect that—or the government will accept an amendment. Under these circumstances, I have no objection to the bill being referred to a committee and to my friend, Senator Langlois, having a good night's sleep.

[Senator Greene.]

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I am very happy to see that my friend Senator Flynn—

Senator Flynn: One moment, please. I do not object to the intervention of my colleague but, as he already took the floor at the second reading stage, he can only correct me, if my remarks are not consistent with what he said.

Senator Langlois: It concerns a misunderstanding—

Senator Flynn: This is a point of debate.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I refer to Standing Order 28 which allows a senator to take the floor a second time to correct a misunderstanding over his comments. This is my only objective tonight.

I am pleased to see that my honourable friend began his remarks by saying that he likes to attack me but, apparently, he does not like to get a reply, as he just indicated.

All I said the other night was that I believed, as we had reached the second stage reading of this bill, the study of the principle of the bill, that Senator Smith (Colchester) and Senator Grosart had both said that they agreed with the principle of the bill. They made a mistake in starting a long debate about the wording of that bill. This is what both honourable senators have alleged.

I even mentioned that I was pleased they had drawn the attention of the house on that matter. I hope that in committee we shall study that matter again and discuss only the points which we can improve. That is all I said. I do not know why Senator Flynn takes this opportunity to start a debate, but I understand his attitude. He did it to tease me and I simply take it as such. But when he does, he should give me the opportunity to reply.

Senator Flynn: I agree, but you used our rules to reply and it was not justified because I did not misquote you. I did not misunderstand you. The point remains the same, even after what you said.

● (2040)

[English]

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, if no other senator wishes to participate, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Before taking my seat, I should say that there is another noteworthy anniversary being recognized today, and that is the 36th wedding anniversary of Mrs. McElman and myself.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Senator McElman debate adjourned.

CANADA NON-PROFIT CORPORATIONS BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, November 17, the debate on the motion of Senator McIlraith for the second reading of Bill S-3, respecting Canadian non-profit corporations.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I regret that Senator McIlraith, the sponsor of this bill, is not present this evening. I understand that he is suffering from a severe cold. If he feels I am inaccurate in anything I say, he will be able to rise on a point of order and correct me.

Bill S-3 is a measure that has been promised us ever since the passage of the Canada Business Corporations Act in 1975. At that time it was intended that there be this particular piece of legislation, and I remember that it was dealt with by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Senator McIlraith's explanation of the bill was excellent. He said its intent is to eliminate unnecessary formalities, thus making it easier for Canadians to comply and rendering the administration of the law more efficient. This is refreshing indeed. Certainly we all, especially those on this side of the house, approve of streamlining legislation, but it remains to be seen if that is what will be achieved in this instance. That is something we will ascertain when we study the bill clause by clause in committee, and when we hear departmental officials explain the wonders they have wrought.

The provisions of the bill are very technical and, of course, everyone agrees that they can more properly be considered in committee. Suffice it to say that given the imposing number of federally incorporated non-profit organizations carrying on business in Canada—I think Senator McIlraith mentioned there are 3,000 of them—it seems appropriate that there should be separate legislation governing them, especially since they differ significantly in nature from the ordinary profit-seeking corporations.

By the way, I think that the income tax legislation of some years ago made special provision for non-profit corporations in order to bring them under some measure of control because there had been some abuse—and there is no doubt about that. So the principle of governing corporations of this kind by separate legislation is sound. For this reason it is important that in committee we look at all the provisions of this bill in depth. When it is claimed that this government is doing something to streamline legislation in order to make it easier to understand and follow, and to eliminate unnecessary formalities, I suggest that that should be accepted with some skepticism.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Langlois moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

RETIREMENT AGE POLICIES

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, November 15, the debate on the motion of Senator Croll:

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and report upon

(a) the existing retirement age policies affecting workers in both the public and private sectors;

(b) the social and economic implications of mandatory retirement based on age alone;

(c) the feasibility of enabling workers, especially elderly citizens, to continue to make a worthwhile contribution to our society through flexible voluntary retirement plans to the extent of their ability and motivation;

(d) the protection for those over sixty-five against age discrimination in all employment areas; and

(e) the need for the maximum co-operation of all levels of government, labour unions, business and the public in respect of existing and future retirement age policies and retirement plans;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry; and

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place.

Hon. F. Elsie Inman: Honourable senators, I wish to congratulate Senator Croll and to support his motion to establish a special committee of the Senate to inquire into and report upon existing retirement age policies in Canada.

Compulsory retirement at age 65 began under Bismarck, Germany's famed Iron Chancellor. An arch-conservative, pressed hard by liberal foes, he adopted the modern world's first comprehensive program of social insurance in a determined effort to stave off something that seemed worse to him—socialism. In 1889, following a series of health-insurance measures, he pushed through the Reichstag an Old Age and Survivors Pension Act, and this made it necessary to determine for the first time exactly when old age began. Bismarck opted for 65, knowing full well that life expectancy in the Germany of the 1880s ranged between 40 and 50 years. Obviously, few workers would live to collect benefits under Bismarck's program.

Before the turn of the century, other governments followed Bismarck's idea. The Danish government, for one, made a special study of the problem of replacing income lost because of old age, and in 1891 it established a program of government pensions for all the needy over 60 years of age. Two men, a Mr. Townsend and a Mr. Myer, attempted in the 1890s to induce the United States to follow the example of Germany and Denmark, but they failed in their effort. England passed its program of retirement at age 65 in 1909, and in the dark days of the 1930s the United States of America decided to pass similar legislation for economic and political reasons peculiar to that country. It was also during the thirties that Canada, because of serious economic conditions, passed legislation to provide for retirement at age 65.

● (2050)

Mr. Kris Kristjanson, Vice-President, Corporate Planning and Personnel, for Great-West Life Assurance Company of Winnipeg, had this to say on the subject of retirement:

The notion of retirement at 65 was established in Canada and the United States in the 1930s when economic and social circumstances were different. At that time, people were considered relatively old at 65; and there was also a need to make room for younger people in the work force.

It does not seem fair, or even right, that people must terminate their employment for the sole reason that they have reached a specific age. Life expectancy today is much greater than in the 19th century. More and more people face retirement without knowing what to make of their lives after having pursued an active career. Such people, if allowed to work, could continue to make their talents produce benefits for society and themselves.

Various studies indicate that most people would, if given the choice, still opt for retirement at 65, but some people have no hobbies or interests in life other than their careers. These people will feel wanted and productive only if they can continue to work. Many who retire unwillingly become prematurely ill. The strain of retirement is too much for these individuals. A worker should therefore be judged by his ability to work rather than by his age.

It is now thought by many that retirement should come about as naturally as other events of life. It should not be forced upon people who may not be ready for it and who do not wish to give up their active working lives.

It is interesting to note the number of people who have become famous in old age. I should like to name a few. Dr. John Dewey, America's foremost philosopher, retired from teaching at Columbia University at 70. He then wrote, lectured and published more than 300 books, essays and articles. Sir Winston Churchill at 78 again became Prime Minister of Great Britain. He had a good philosophy of life, driving ambition, intense pride, a variety of interests and limitless enthusiasm. The challenge of adversity only increased his vitality. Arturo Toscanini at 85 could memorize the complete score of an opera in a few days and never forget it. Titian painted one of his famous masterpieces at 98—"The Battle of Lepant." George Bernard Shaw wrote "St. Joan", one of his best plays, at 70. Michelangelo still painted masterpieces at 89. Goethe completed Faust at 82. Adeline De Watt Reynolds, a grandmother, graduated from the University of California at 68, and at 80 she began her movie career. Dr. Lillian J. Martin, a professor of psychology at Stanford University, retired at 65; she then became a famous perontologist and founder of the San Francisco Old Age Counselling Clinic. She died at 92, after devoting 27 active years to aiding persons to salvage their old age.

[Senator Inman.]

It is true that governments have through the years instituted programs that have improved the quality of life for senior citizens, but living costs have risen rapidly in the past several years, causing economic hardship for those living on small fixed incomes and those living on pensions. Indexing helps a few but does not solve the basic problem.

The admission of error in establishing an across the board retirement age of 65 has already been recognized by the United States of America, and it is felt that Canada should also make a study of retirement age. Perhaps the legislation here has not created the jobs anticipated, since the movement through the system is not that well organized. Many jobs vacated require years of training for adequate replacement.

The sociological impact of early retirement has resulted in overcrowding of care facilities for these people who are not ready for retirement. This is aggravated further when they are not only physically and mentally capable of carrying on, but also have the desire to do so.

There is a great loss of experienced manpower, from top executives down to skilled and semi-skilled labour, where the wisdom and experience of a lifetime have been arbitrarily cut off at the sixty-fifth birthday, causing great anxiety and upheaval.

Happy retirees from any job or endeavour are preferable to unhappy ones, who add to the burden and cause unproductive costs in the economic and industrial sense when national productivity is one of the greatest needs to turn the tide of inflation. This unproductive spending winds up in the tax dollar at all levels in the end.

The elimination of the compulsory aspect of retirement should not equally eliminate the continued right to retire with full earned benefits if the person elects to continue in the work force. However, safeguards will continue to be needed to protect older workers from exploitation.

The time has come to translate into social policy what we know to be a fact of life. Everyone needs to be needed, both before 65 and afterwards. The year 1977 will be as good a year as any to start revising our current misapprehensions about the sunset years.

For these reasons I would be in favour of allowing individuals to work beyond the age of 65.

I am pleased to second Senator Croll's motion, and I commend him for bringing this matter to the attention of the Senate. I hope honourable senators will support Senator Croll's motion.

On motion of Senator Perrault, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

---

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 23, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of Report entitled "The Management of Canada's Nuclear Wastes," dated August 31, 1977, issued by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Public Accounts of Canada, Volumes II and III, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 55(1) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Report of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting compensation plan between Reed Limited, Toronto, Ontario and the group of its light equipment operators, represented by the Printing Specialties and Paper Products Union, Local 466. Order dated November 18, 1977.

Report on the Administration of the Western Grain Stabilization Act, together with the Report on the state of the Stabilization Account for the year 1976, pursuant to section 45 of the said Act, Chapter 87, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76.

Report of the Master of the Royal Canadian Mint, including accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

COMPETITION POLICY

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO EXAMINE AND REPORT UPON COMPETITION LEGISLATION

Senator Hayden, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine and report upon the subject matter of the Bill C-13, intituled: "An Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and to amend the Bank Act and other Acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof," in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO ENGAGE SERVICES

Senator Hayden, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be empowered to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purposes of its examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as may be referred to it.

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

REGIONAL REPRESENTATION—QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, in view of the growing discussion in Canada about the importance of the Senate as a focus for provincial expression, and even possibly as a more active chamber in representing provincial and/or regional interests, could the Leader of the Government tell us how many of our present membership have served as elected members of provincial legislatures, and how many of those served as a premier of a province?

Senator Perrault: I want to thank the honourable senator for providing written notice of this question within the hour.

Senator Flynn: The library will provide the information.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, because of time limitation I have not been able to obtain a detailed breakdown of the requested information, but it can be said most emphatically that the Senate contains a very broad representation from the regions of Canada. Over 20 per cent of the members of this chamber have had previous experience in a legislature of Canada. At least five former provincial premiers are numbered among our colleagues as well as a number of former leaders of provincial parties and leaders of provincial oppositions. There are a number of former provincial cabinet ministers among our membership. So it can be said that the Senate is broadly representative of the regions of Canada, many of its members possessing extensive experience in the legislatures of this country, and others possessing experience in the other chamber. I have just been reminded that there are many former elected representatives of municipalities within our ranks. Indeed there are.

Senator Flynn: And a former deputy minister.

Senator Perrault: The Senate of Canada takes second place to no other body in this nation in its ability to represent the regional interests to be found in this country.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, would the Leader of the Government consider expanding his answer to Senator Austin's question to include information as to senators who, as he had just mentioned, have been leaders of provincial parties and members of legislatures, and also those who have played prominent roles in municipal governments?

• (1410)

Senator Perrault: It may be of interest to honourable senators, and perhaps to the public, to have a detailed resumé of this type of background in this chamber. If honourable senators are in accord with the suggestion, I would be pleased to get that information together and place it in the printed record of the Senate.

Senator Flynn: Do you think it is necessary?

Senator Greene: This is not about you, Jacques.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, may I suggest that the Leader of the Government also provide information with respect to the members of this chamber who were former ministers of the federal government, representing their respective provinces, because there are a number of them here who came from different regions of the country and served in the cabinet of Canada. It should be part of the statistics.

Senator Perrault: That suggestion is a good one. We can certainly do it by categories without getting into naming individuals. It would be useful information.

Senator Flynn: It might result in discriminating against the few.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION FUND

PAYMENTS—QUESTION

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I would ask the Leader of the Government if he would ascertain whether or not, and when, a payment will be made out of the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. I ask the question now, because it may take him a few days to get the answer, and also in view of the fact that there have been very satisfactory international sales as far as volume is concerned, but certainly not as far as price is concerned. Also, it would be useful for some of the producers to know now, in planning their financial arrangements for the coming season, whether or not there will be a payment out of that fund from the last season.

Senator Perrault: That information will be provided just as quickly as it becomes available.

[Translation]

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, may I welcome most heartedly in the gallery the members of the "Club optimiste" from the City of Laval, in the province of Quebec.

[English]

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, may I express a personal welcome to the representatives of the City of Laval? In 1967, when I was the Mayor of Saskatoon, the City of Laval became our twin, des jumelles, and it was my privilege to visit that lovely community and have their representatives visit us. It was a stimulating experience, which I hope can take place again. I am very glad to see them here.

[Translation]

Senator Rizzuto: As I am also a resident of the City of Laval, I am pleased to welcome them here, particularly as I was chairman of this club in 1969-70. I am still a member of the club. I welcome them here in Ottawa. We shall always be pleased to see them again in Ottawa, perhaps next year.

[English]

AIR CANADA BILL, 1977

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator McElman for second reading of Bill C-3, respecting reorganization of Air Canada.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator McElman speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, I wish first of all to thank those who have participated so constructively in the debate on second reading of Bill C-3, and most particularly Senator Smith (Colchester).

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator McElman: Senator Smith expressed concerns that, at least on surface, would strike a responsive note in the minds of many senators. He also made more than passing reference to clause 6(2) of the bill, which deals with the power that would be given the Governor in Council in relation to this proposed act. Although most of the questions raised can be most satisfactorily dealt with only in the appropriate committee of the Senate through questioning of Air Canada and departmental officials, I should like to make some reference to them at this time. Senator Smith (Colchester) and Senator Lang expressed some concern over the use in clause 6(2) of the term "by order" rather than the more usual wording "by order in council." I am informed that in drafting terms the use of "by order" is simply a device to eliminate redundancy, and that it is not unusual wording. It is also clear that the Governor in Council can act only by order in council. The use of the term "by order" is not exclusive to clause 6(2), as might have been indicated. The same terminology is found in clauses 6(4), 11(1), 12(1)(b) and throughout the bill, as it is in other legislation.

Senator Smith also expressed doubt that Air Canada should be involved in the business of operating hotels. Clause 6(1)(b) provides only that it may own and operate hotels and other accommodation, not that it shall. In this connection I should like to make two points. First, the present Air Canada Act, in section 13(1)(j), authorizes the corporation:

to purchase, lease or otherwise acquire or provide, hold, use, enjoy and operate such hotels in Canada as are deemed expedient for the purposes of the Corporation;

So, honourable senators, the provision of clause 6(1)(b) in this bill simply carries forward the earlier authorization of Parliament in this regard.

Secondly, allow me to remind the house that a basic purpose of this bill is to permit Air Canada to effectively compete with those world-scale airlines with which it must compete. If the board of directors deems it advisable, in order to maintain its competitive viability, to own, lease and operate hotels, it should have that flexibility and that should be a board decision, not a parliamentary decision. The very real competitors of Air Canada are much involved in the hotel business, and I do not think they can all be wrong. TWA, Trans World Airlines, owns the Hilton Hotels; Swiss Air owns at least 11 hotels, as well as restaurants and travel agencies, and it engages in numerous other activities; British Airways owns 45 hotels; Pan American owns Intercontinental Hotels; American Airlines owns Americana Hotels and Flagship International Catering and Hotels; KLM has interests in KLM Aerocarto; Lufthansa is affiliated with several hotel groups. Eastern Airlines owns Dorado Beach Hotel Corporation and is affiliated with Rockresorts; Braniff owns Braniff International Hotels and Braniff International Resort Properties. Then, of course, there is Canadian Pacific Airlines and one need not enumerate the very broad range of activities available to it under the umbrella of the CPR and that extraordinarily successful multinational, CPI, Canadian Pacific Investments.

Like other senators, I believe that Air Canada should be permitted to compete in world air travel and become involved competitively in the hotel or accommodation business if its board of directors so decides.

Mention has been made by the Honourable Senator Smith (Colchester) of clause 7(1.1), which reads:

In discharging its responsibilities under this Act, the Board shall have due regard to sound business principles, and in particular the contemplation of profit.

● (1420)

Senator Smith expressed the view that too much emphasis might be given by the board to those requirements of "sound business principles" and "the contemplation of profit" to the detriment of the development of the nation and satisfactory service to the lesser populated areas and regions of Canada.

I should point out to Senator Smith that this very subclause was inserted in the bill in the other place at the insistence of a leading spokesman of his party, and was accepted with much reluctance by the minister.

Having said that, I must confess that I share Senator Smith's uneasiness over the fact that these are placed upon the board as specific requirements in the bill. However, one can take some comfort from clauses 8 and 9.

[Senator McElman.]

Clause 8 provides that the Governor in Council may give "directions of a general nature" in writing, with which Air Canada must comply. This will enable the Governor in Council to direct that an acceptable level of services be provided to the Atlantic region, for example, within the context of a national transportation policy. The purpose of clause 8 becomes even more clear when read in conjunction with clause 9.

Clause 9 provides for the calculation and payment of losses that Air Canada may suffer in consequence of carrying out the directions of the Governor in Council that are given under clause 8.

Senator Grosart was critical of the drafting terminology of clause 8 of the bill. He expressed a preference for terminology that would require Air Canada to comply with "directions of a specific nature," rather than the bill's terminology, "directions of a general nature."

When this bill was first introduced in the other place it provided that Air Canada shall comply with "directives". There was no stipulation that such directives be either "specific" or "general". The minister, realizing that this would permit interference by this or future administrations in the day-to-day operations of Air Canada, brought forward a government amendment to add the words "of a general nature." The bill was thus improved, making it clear that the Governor in Council would give policy directives only within the context of national transportation policy as referred to in clause 9(1).

Honourable senators, it is only through clauses 8 and 9 that the government of the day will be enabled to require Air Canada to play its proper role in the development of the nation, and in providing an acceptable level of services to all regions of the country, which is our common desire.

I share the concern expressed by Senator Smith that all regions should be properly represented on the board of directors of Air Canada. However, I do not favour writing such representation into the bill, as was suggested. Such minimums usually become maximums. I have every confidence that the able representatives of Atlantic Canada, in both houses, will ensure that their region is well and properly represented on the board.

It is the stated purpose of the administration to make the appointments of the additional six directors over a period of time, with particular attention to regional representation. Honourable senators from all regions of the nation should be prepared to express their views in committee on this aspect of the bill.

Senator Smith also expressed grave doubts that Air Canada, under clause 6(1)(g), should be authorized to:

—acquire and hold shares or debt obligations of any other body corporate carrying on activities similar or incidental to those of the Corporation and sell or otherwise deal with such shares or debt obligations;

Again, this is a power that is vested in the corporation under section 13(1)(e) of the current Air Canada Act. It is merely carried forward in this bill. By way of an aside, the powers contained in this clause are of a lesser nature than those that Parliament provided to the CNR under section 31 of the Canadian National Railways Act.

I want to stress that the authority granted by clause 6(1)(g) is made conditional by clause 6(4), in that Air Canada will be unable to acquire the shares of another company, sufficient to gain control of it as a subsidiary, without obtaining the approval of the Governor in Council. Similarly, prior approval by the Governor in Council would be required for the sale of the shares of any company that may be acquired by Air Canada, thereby providing a reasonable and desirable measure of policy control in such matters by the administration.

Lastly, I come to that part of Bill C-3 that has caused the greatest concern to honourable senators, and I refer, of course, to clause 6(2), which reads as follows:

(2) The Governor in Council may, by order, authorize the Corporation to engage in or carry on any activities not otherwise authorized by this Act.

I confess, with some shame and a good bit of humility, that in my initial reading of this bill I skimmed over that clause, thinking it the normal one making provision for unforeseen related and incidental activities or objectives that could be approved by order of the Governor in Council. However, the terminology is not the usual or accepted version, and I believe that we are all indebted to Senator Smith (Colchester) for his alertness in noting that fact and drawing it forcefully to the attention of the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator McElman: Senator Smith expressed precisely and with clarity the concern felt by many senators with this clause. Unfortunately, that clarity was clouded somewhat by Senator Grosart's intervention in this debate. I regret having to refer to his remarks in his absence, but at pages 145 and 146 of Hansard of November 17 Senator Grosart stated repeatedly that clause 6(2) would give those extraordinary powers to the minister. That simply is not so. Most senators express concern at some time or another over the broad powers that are sometimes given to ministers in the making and promulgating of regulations. That is the extension of ministerial authority. But that has nothing whatsoever to do with clause 6(2) of this bill. That clause deals not with ministerial authority or powers but with what appears to be the delegation by Parliament of extraordinary powers to the Governor in Council—in other words, the administration of the day.

So let us not be misled to believe that clause 6(2) has anything to do with ministerial powers. I am sure that all will agree that the Governor in Council must be given powers by Parliament, on occasion, to broaden the scope of legislation to meet unforeseen circumstances in the administration of the affairs of government. However, those powers must be discreetly given by Parliament and must relate to the recognized objects and purposes of the legislation to which they attach.

From discussions that I, as sponsor of Bill C-3 in the Senate, have had with officials, and from reading the record of debate in the other place, I am convinced that the purpose of clause

6(2) is to serve as a brake on Air Canada to prevent it from undertaking activities not otherwise specifically provided for in this bill, without first obtaining authority to do so from the Governor in Council. At the same time, this clause would permit the Governor in Council to approve activities not specifically spelled out in the bill but which the Governor in Council believes Air Canada should be permitted to undertake, properly, in competition with other world-scale airlines.

● (1430)

That is all very acceptable in its intent. Unfortunately, the intent does not appear to have been clearly and precisely expressed in the terminology of clause 6(2). On the surface, at least, it would appear that the Governor in Council could approve any imaginable type of activity on the part of Air Canada, no matter how extreme or unrelated to the normal activities of an airline, without any further reference to Parliament. If that is the case, honourable senators, it would be unacceptable to Parliament.

It is in that light that I again thank the Honourable Senator Smith for focusing the attention of the Senate on this apparent fault in draftsmanship. In committee honourable senators will wish to hear witnesses on this clause in particular, and will wish as well to inquire into other aspects of the bill. In order to have the bill before the committee quickly, I ask you to vote for second reading now.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a third time?

Senator McElman moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

Motion agreed to.

RETIREMENT AGE POLICIES

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Croll:

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and report upon

(a) the existing retirement age policies affecting workers in both the public and private sectors;

(b) the social and economic implications of mandatory retirement based on age alone;

(c) the feasibility of enabling workers, especially elderly citizens, to continue to make a worthwhile contribution to our society through flexible voluntary retirement plans to the extent of their ability and motivation;

(d) the protection for those over sixty-five against age discrimination in all employment areas; and

(e) the need for the maximum co-operation of all levels of government, labour unions, business and the public in respect of existing and future retirement age policies and retirement plans;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry; and

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I want to speak in wholehearted support of the motion proposed by the Honourable Senator Croll. The subject of the motion is important, and certainly deserves serious examination and study by the members of this chamber.

As Senator Croll proved, when he was chairman of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty in Canada, the subject of compulsory retirement will receive the pragmatic, careful and conscientious attention of all the members of the committee who will be studying this subject.

A great many Canadians have found it puzzling that a person, who is capable one day of holding down an important job, often one involving enormous responsibility, can within just a few hours—that “magic” moment when he or she becomes 65 years of age—be unfit to carry on. It is obvious that in our society ability does not necessarily decline with age. Some individuals in society are “old” when they are in their forties; some are quite “young” even though they are in their eighties or nineties.

Senator Croll—and he is over 70, I am given to understand—is himself a spirited and remarkable example of this latter fact, and so are many other senators.

He has pointed out in a number of his interviews that 60,000 men and 20,000 women left the labour force at the age of 65 last year. Doubtless, many of them welcomed retirement; it is equally certain that there were a goodly number—people of experience who felt they had much more to give—who resented that enforced retirement. I know that other honourable senators feel as I do, that Senator Croll and his committee will probably find a flexible solution to this paradox. They will at least have recommendations to make, and these will be important.

The United States Congress has recently undertaken a similar retirement age study. There are those who would like to retire at the age of 60, or even earlier. Many reasons and motives are given for establishing what people believe to be the ideal retirement age. A large number of young people in Canada are currently out of work, and it will certainly be argued that if people are allowed to work beyond the age of 65 it will penalize younger people who wish to work. The committee will most assuredly want to look at that aspect of the compulsory retirement issue.

[Senator McElman.]

There are many aspects to this very human issue, and it is the type of issue which the Senate should examine and with which it should concern itself. I am confident that a special committee, chaired by Senator Croll, will, if the motion receives the support of honourable senators, bring credit upon the Senate through its work.

I have two suggestions to make with respect to the wording of the motion. The present motion gives the committee power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate. The actual wording is to be found in the final paragraph, which reads:

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place.

I suggest that the motion be modified by deleting the words “sittings and” from the phrase “to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate,” so that the committee would not have the blanket power to meet during sittings of the Senate. Of course, should the situation arise when witnesses are only available when the Senate happens to be sitting, the Senate may then be asked by the chairman of the committee for permission to hold a special meeting of the committee while the Senate is sitting. There could be circumstances which necessitate meetings of the committee while the Senate is sitting and, under those circumstances, permission could be granted.

As honourable senators are aware, in practice the Senate does not grant blanket permission to any committee to meet during sittings of the Senate. There are always problems involved in scheduling committee meetings when the Senate is sitting, but these problems can be overcome in the manner I have described.

Senator Rowe: Will the Leader of the Government permit a question?

Senator Perrault: Certainly.

Senator Rowe: Would this mean a modification of the motion proposed by Senator Croll?

Senator Perrault: Yes, it is a suggestion to which Senator Croll may wish to address himself when he concludes the debate. He may wish to accept the proposal I have made, which may be described as a “limitation” of the right of the committee to meet during Senate sittings.

Senator Flynn: It will then be too late to move an amendment.

Senator Perrault: With leave of the Senate, he can withdraw those particular words.

Senator Flynn: And if he does not?

Senator Croll: He will.

Senator Flynn: Are you so sure of yourself?

Senator Perrault: I have supreme faith in the wisdom of the committee chairman.

Senator Flynn: He would have to have supreme faith in you.

Senator Perrault: I hope that faith is not misplaced.

Senator Flynn: It could be.

Senator Perrault: I should like to mention a second proposal. It occurs to me that in order to make it clear that the permission to travel, which is contained in the motion, relates to travel within Canada, the words "in Canada" should be added at the end. Should honourable senators feel that for some pressing reason there is a need for this or any other committee to travel outside the boundaries of Canada, to the United States or any other country, then permission should be sought from all honourable senators for such foreign travel.

Honourable senators, in advancing these proposals, I wish Senator Croll and his committee every success in their important work.

● (1440)

Senator Manning: Honourable senators, I do not intend to take up the time of the house by discussing this motion in any detail, but there is one clause that I would like to draw to the attention of the mover in the hope that it might be revised before the motion is finally adopted. I think it is rather a dangerous clause in that it could, if taken literally, lead to some serious complications. I refer to clause (d), which reads as follows:

(d) the protection for those over sixty-five against age discrimination in all employment areas;

I am not certain I fully understand what is intended by that, but it seems to me to imply that there could be no judgment in respect of age exercised by the employer, whether in the public or the private sector, with regard to an applicant for a position. After a little consideration, I think most honourable senators will agree that that could lead to some very undesirable situations.

There might very well be a vacancy, either in the Public Service or somewhere in the private sector, for which a person over 65, or over 70 for that matter, applied. Although the applicant at the time of making the application might possess all the necessary qualifications to fill that vacancy satisfactorily, the position could well be one of those where the succession factor becomes important.

The only way, in either the public or private sector, to get good senior management people is by having them in certain positions gaining experience over a number of years which will qualify them to assume greater responsibilities in later times. An employer might wish to engage a person with the intention of promoting him to a more senior position in a few years' time. While an applicant who is 65 or more years of age might be capable of doing everything required by the position, if the advancement is not to occur for five years or so he might quite reasonably be expected to be unqualified for, or physically incapable of filling, that more senior position. In those circumstances, and if this clause is to be taken literally, we would be preventing an employer from hiring a man with the intention of preparing him, through experience, to fill a more responsible position three, five or ten years down the road. It seems to me that that is a factor we should recognize.

A man coming in at the age of 35 or 40, with perhaps 30 or 40 years of health ahead of him, can be trained by his employer and, barring something going wrong with his health or some accident, he will be there to fill the senior position that was in mind for him. This cannot apply to a man who is aged 65 or 70. No matter how well qualified he might be, he must be eliminated because of his age.

All I am suggesting is that we should not put into a proposal, which I think has a lot of merit, something which could create serious practical problems, as would be the case if a provision of this kind were adopted and became a statutory requirement, binding on employers in both the public and the private sectors.

Senator Rowe: Before Senator Croll closes the debate—

Senator Flynn: He does not close the debate.

Senator Rowe: I presume it is the intention, or the hope, that there will be a vote this afternoon. I do not know that; I am assuming it. However, does the mover of a motion have the right to amend his own motion?

Senator Langlois: Yes.

Senator Rowe: In that case, I presume that before we vote Senator Croll will be moving an amendment to the very last clause in his motion, in accordance with the suggestion of the Leader of the Government that the words "sittings and" be deleted. Certainly I, and I am sure the leader and others, would like those words removed. We would not want to give such blanket permission to any committee.

● (1450)

Senator Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of this debate.

Senator Hicks: Before the debate is adjourned, would the mover of this motion permit me to make a brief intervention?

Senator Flynn: He yields to you.

Senator Hicks: I think this has to do with what Senator Manning spoke about. Certainly he raised issues that would be of concern to any thoughtful person who is studying this, but I suggest, with the greatest of respect, that Senator Manning has prejudged the question. The motion is:

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and report upon . . .

(d) the protection for those over sixty-five against age discrimination—

Surely it is quite proper for a Senate committee to suggest that such persons need no protection, or that any protection accorded them should be subject to exactly the kind of limitations and qualifications that Senator Manning so properly referred to.

Senator Manning: Honourable senators, perhaps I may be permitted to clarify my comments by saying that I quite agree with Senator Hicks, but all I was talking about is the impression that will be given the public of Canada if a committee of this house is set up whose specific terms of reference include a provision of this kind. It will be interpreted, and perhaps improperly interpreted, as a suggestion that there should be no discrimination in the hiring of people because of age. My point is that age is a matter in which you have to give the employer discretionary powers.

On the motion of Senator Macdonald, debate adjourned.

SCIENCE POLICY

VOLUME 4 OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Lamontagne, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy, appointed in the last session of Parliament and authorized in that session to consider and report on Canadian government and other expenditures on scientific activities and matters related thereto, entitled: A Science Policy for Canada, Volume 4, Progress and Unfinished Business, tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, 25th October 1977.—(Honourable Senator Cameron).

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, because of the unavoidable absence of Senator Cameron I ask leave to resume the debate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, may I first pay a personal tribute to Senator Lamontagne and Senator Grosart for their work on the Science Policy Committee. There are other senators, of course, who made substantial contributions to the work of the committee, but the reason I am specifically naming Senator Lamontagne and Senator Grosart—and I am sure the members of the committee will unanimously agree—is that they were the two spark plugs of the committee. Senator Lamontagne was the committee's chairman, and Senator Grosart was the chairman of the steering committee. Senator Grosart also represented the Conservatives in a very effective and completely non-partisan fashion. We had disagreements on the committee while I was a member, but I certainly could not detect even a hint that any of them was inspired by partisan political considerations.

I was not a member of the committee that laboured so long, faithfully and effectively from 1967 to 1972 to produce the first three volumes of the report, and I was certainly not knowledgeable on the subject. For that reason, I did not take their conclusions as gospel, and was inclined to approach the matter of science policy in Canada with a somewhat more open mind than those who had listened to years of previous testimony and who had been active in the preparation of, and had concurred in, the original report.

As the hearings proceeded, I had certain concerns and reservations about the original report. I thought, for example, that the original target set out in the report that research and development (R & D) in Canada should amount eventually to 2½ per cent of gross national product was unrealistically high. One of the main reasons I thought that was because, in my opinion, not sufficient weight had been given to the amount of R & D available in Canada from the parents of foreign subsidiaries operating here. Let's face it, our manufacturing industry has greater foreign control than any other developed country. There is not much point re-inventing a better wheel in Canada if it has already been invented by a parent company in the United States, and the invention is available to the Canadian subsidiary at a modest price.

While having a Canadian subsidiary's R & D carried on in the United States by its parent has obvious disadvantages—and I do not want to appear to minimize them—it has obvious advantages too. An American parent with ten or twenty times more sales than its Canadian subsidiary can obviously afford to spend many times more money on R & D as its Canadian subsidiary, and can make all the results of this R & D available to its Canadian subsidiary for a fair and relatively modest fee.

As a lawyer, and a director of a number of my clients' Canadian subsidiaries before I became a senator, I came across this situation often. Canadian-owned companies in certain industries just could not compete because they were not sufficiently large to be able to do as much R & D as was available to the Canadian subsidiaries of multinationals. Some Canadian-controlled industries, however, like the steel industry, are sufficiently large and progressive, and are capable of doing a sufficient amount of their own R & D so that they can compete very well indeed. Our steel industry is universally acknowledged to be one of the most efficient in the world, and I understand it is far more efficient in many ways than the United States industry. Many Canadian-owned companies, in order to survive and prosper, make arrangements with large foreign companies to use the R & D developed by those companies for a reasonable fee.

I can think of a company that was completely controlled in Canada that found itself falling farther and farther behind in its production efficiency, and could be justly described as being technologically bankrupt. It got itself a new president who decided that the only thing to do was to enter into an agreement with a large United States company with many times its sales volume so that its R & D and know-how would be available to the Canadian company. The Canadian company has prospered greatly since and control has remained in Canada, which probably would not have been possible if it had not been able to make the arrangements to import much of its R & D. It has even greatly increased its own R & D because it found that that was necessary in order to take full advantage of the R & D that it imported.

Importation of foreign R & D is not all that bad, as Japan can very well testify to, and, in fact, it can be of great benefit to the economy as a whole even if it does result in a lower proportion of R & D to GNP being performed in Canada than would otherwise be the case.

This aspect of the matter is referred to in the report only casually in several places. However, I believe this may have been one of the reasons why the committee was persuaded that its original target that R & D should represent 2½ per cent of our gross national product was unrealistic. In the present report this target has been reduced to 1½ per cent, with which I concur.

During the hearings, I am sure that some of the members of the committee got sick and tired of my saying repeatedly that either the government could not or should not ram R & D down industries' throats. Fairly early on in our hearings, I heard that a Mr. Gordon Sharwood had been retained by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to make an evaluation of the department's industrial support programs. Many of these are R & D oriented, such as the Program for the Advancement of Industrial Technology (PAIT), Defence Industry Productivity Program (DIP), Industry Research & Development Incentives Act (IRDIA), and the Agricultural & Food Products Market Development Assistance Program (AGMAP).

It seemed to me that what Mr. Sharwood was doing should be of great interest to the committee, and that it would be invaluable to the committee if it could obtain and consider his report. When Mr. Jamieson, the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, appeared before the committee on May 12, 1976, I questioned him about this report which had then been completed in draft form. Mr. Jamieson spoke highly of the report, and said he would make it public in final form before the summer recess if he could get the printing and translation completed in that time. In fact, the report was issued in final form under date of June 1, 1976 but, in spite of repeated requests, was not released to Senator Lamontagne until August 2, 1977, just two days before the meeting of the committee at which the final draft of the committee's report was approved and, of course, too late to be considered by the committee.

I might say as an aside at this point that I am a member of the joint Senate and House of Commons committee which will be considering the government's green paper on freedom of information. The co-chairman of that committee agrees with me that the appropriate officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce should be hauled before the committee to explain why they denied the Science Policy Committee access to the Sharwood report for 14 months after the minister said we could have it.

Recently I obtained from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce a copy of the Sharwood report. It is 99 pages long and it all makes very interesting reading and, whether one agrees with Mr. Sharwood's conclusions or not, some of his findings of fact are interesting and should have been considered by our committee. I believe it is appropriate to bring some of those findings to the attention of the Senate.

● (1500)

The first thing that sticks out is that the bulk of grants by the department goes to a very few large firms, and are concentrated in certain industries. For example, in the period from 1970 to 1975 10 firms received 40 per cent of the money, and the top 20 firms received 60 per cent of the money. Bell and its related firms, for example, obtained $42 million over that period. Mr. Sharwood points out at page 83:

There is doubt whether these grants have really affected the behaviour of large corporations and such large company presidents who were consulted and who have been the beneficiaries of such grants indicate that they would have carried on the programs without the assistance.

This certainly could not be said about the Defence Industry Productivity Program. At page 85, Mr. Sharwood points out that in 1975 grants amounted to $48 million, of which $24.7 million, or 51 per cent, went to De Havilland, and nearly $10 million went to Canadair and Pratt & Whitney Aircraft, for a total of 72 per cent to these three companies.

At page 86, Mr. Sharwood states:

In assessing the industry it is clear it is basically an export industry and that it has very little relation either to Canadian defence in terms of maintaining capability or in terms of supplying the Canadian armed forces. What has been spawned by DIP is in fact a foreign flower flourishing on Canadian soil which sells to foreign governments on a subsidized basis and the subsidy is justified on the basis that other governments do the same thing. This gives rise to the question as to why this particular industry should be so subsidized and others should not.

Let us now consider the situation with respect to De Havilland. I think it can be properly stated that the department did ram R & D down De Havilland's throat with respect to the development of the Dash 7. I am advised that so far the government has advanced $90 million for the development of this aircraft, and the company a very reluctant $30 million.

Several years ago, Hawker Siddeley, which then owned De Havilland, refused to put any more of their money into the development of the Dash 7, and wanted to close it down because their surveys had indicated that the present market just was not big enough for that kind of an aircraft. The government then decided to purchase the company so that the development of the Dash 7 would be continued. At the present time, the company has firm orders for only four aircraft, and there are options outstanding for another 16. The company has priced the aircraft on the basis that the R & D and tooling costs will be amortized over 250 aircraft, and the company is tooled to produce four a month. On this basis of four a month, it would take five years to recover the investment, and obviously it will never be recovered on the basis of the one-a-month production presently planned.

Let us look at Canadair. The government was forced to buy this company from General Dynamics because the parent company was going to close it down and sell off its real estate, which was estimated to be worth the $38 million that the government paid for the company. That company has now apparently turned the corner through the development of the Challenger, the world's first wide-bodied business jet. Frederick R. Kearns, in a recent interview reported in Executive magazine, stated, "the aircraft was crying out to be built." The company was just as accurate in its assessment of the potential market as was Hawker Siddeley. Hawker Siddeley recognized that there was a very limited demand for the Dash 7, and refused to proceed any further. Canadair, even while it was controlled by General Dynamics, recognized that there was a great demand for the Challenger. But General Dynamics had other priorities for its money and would not let the company go ahead. After the government purchased Canadair, it went ahead with its plans. De Havilland has sold four Dash 7s, and needs to sell 250 to break even. Canadair has sold 110 Challengers, and needs to sell only another 20 to break even.

Canadair needed $125 million to finance the development and manufacture of these aircraft. Two Canadian banks advanced the money—part of it on the company's own line of credit and $70 million on the basis of a guarantee from the Canadian government.

Mr. Sharwood, at page 74, states:

Finally the larger Canadian corporations are now the size that they should and would subject their research to the market-place test. They are no longer "infant industries" and such companies as Stelco and Noranda do not need to be bribed to do research. The Canadian manufacturing sector has reached some kind of maturity and, unless a payoff can clearly be shown, the subsidizing of R & D through grants should be discontinued.

His conclusion is well supported in the case of De Havilland and Canadair. In the case of De Havilland, the research for the Dash 7 was not subject to the marketplace test, whereas the research and development by Canadair for the Challenger was. The case of Canadair does further illustrate how foreign control can in certain cases have a very injurious effect on the Canadian economy. If General Dynamics had had its way, a viable operation would have been shut down and thousands of people would have been put out of work.

As the Science Policy Committee report points out, the main goal of the government's science policy has always been the promotion of industrial development. The report refers to the publication (PUO) U.S. Technology Policy, issued by the U.S. Department of Commerce in March 1977, which claims that technological innovation was responsible for 45 per cent of the growth in the American economy between 1929 and 1969. It also refers to the fact that Gordon Sharwood, in another report he prepared for MOSST in January 1977, points out that other studies show that R & D accounted for 40 per cent of the total increase in U.S. productivity over the years, and that U.S. industry averaged a 30 per cent return on R & D spending, twice the rate companies were getting from other business investments. What is not pointed out is that Mr. Sharwood, in his report to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce of June 1, 1976, states Canadian studies give a different view from the studies done in the United States.

There are three specific areas that the Science Policy Committee report was to cover. The first one, and I quote from page 4 of the report, was:

The criteria and techniques used by the Government, particularly the Ministry of State for Science and Technology, to review and assess scientific expenditures and programs.

Mr. Sharwood, at page 72, says that one of the techniques used to review and assess scientific expenditures and programs is to have studies done. He refers particularly to two, namely, Special Study No. 23 by the Science Council of Canada, and a report prepared by Peat Marwick & Partners for the Ministry of State for Science & Technology, dated May 1975. Mr. Sharwood states:

The essence of each report is that it is necessary to look at other things besides expenditures on R & D to account for the low innovative quality of Canadian industry. The latter report says "economists are still uncertain of the relevant influences of the various inputs to the innovation process. For example, it has become clear that a large high quality national science research development effort, although it represents a kind of national resource, does not necessarily lead to a high rate of innovation nor does a large population of technologically skilled people." The report goes on to say that "it does not necessarily follow, however, that the technology for science based innovation has to be internally generated," and points out that the Japanese, in fact, have imported their technology and their skill has been the exploitation of existing technology. A report prepared by Mr. B. Carin of the Planning Branch of the Treasury Board Secretariat on August 21, 1972, after a study of a large number of firms, concludes that "there is no empirical evidence that supports the hypothesis that R & D expenditures lead to industrial growth of Canada." Another study was completed by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce which concluded that R & D incentive programs were only stimulating R & D to the equivalent of the government grants.

● (1510)

I have referred to these reports, not because I think that they are more valid than the different views expressed in the United States reports, but to show that this is by no means a simple problem and that government policies by themselves may not have as great an influence in this area as many people believe. Furthermore, when Canadian government commissioned studies exist which come to conclusions different from those in studies made in the United States, and referred to in our report, I think that these should be brought to the attention of the Senate in this debate, particularly when they only came to my attention after our report was issued, and did not come to the attention of the committee while it was considering the matter. This, of course, emphasizes further the desirability of the department's releasing the Sharwood report to the committee immediately after it was completed, rather than waiting until it was too late to be of any use in the preparation of our report.

In conclusion, I say that, while our report lays practically all of the blame on the government for the deficiencies of the R & D effort in the industrial sector, I personally am inclined to place a significant part of the blame on the private sector. The private sector seems to be always looking for handouts from the government, either in the form of tax concessions or grants to help finance their R & D, whether or not such handouts will have any effect in increasing their R & D effort. One has only to look to the joint brief submitted to the committee by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association to illustrate my point. Furthermore—and this applies particularly to the smaller companies—we heard evidence to the effect that, even where there was successful R & D, poor management resulted in its not being exploited properly. As several witnesses put it, successful R & D only solves 5 per cent of the problem.

I believe that our committee was very much on the right approach when it said that the government should reconsider its position on tax incentives. These incentives should be given to reward increased expenditures on R & D, and not to help finance all R & D expenditures. We should not give government handouts to companies for R & D expenditures that the companies would have done anyway, not only because it was in their own best interest to do so but also because they had the financial capability of doing so.

On motion of Senator McDonald, debate adjourned.

AGRICULTURE

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO MAKE STUDY WITHDRAWN

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Argue, seconded by the Honourable Senator Desruisseaux:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture be empowered, without special reference by the Senate, to examine from time to time any aspect of the agricultural industry in Canada; provided that all senators shall be notified of any scheduled meeting of the committee and the purpose thereof and that the committee report the result of any such examination to the Senate;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisers as may be necessary for the purposes of such examination;

That the committee, or any sub-committee so authorized by the committee, may adjourn from place to place for the purposes of any such examination;

That the papers and evidence received and taken on its inquiry into the desirability of long-term stabilization in the Canadian beef industry in the preceding session be referred to the committee; and

That the committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.—(Honourable Senator Langlois).

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I am pleased to yield to Senator Argue.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is that agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, since I presented this motion some time ago representations have been made to me that its terms give the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture powers that other committees do not have. In the past we have had these general wide powers, although I think we used them responsibly. However, I certainly have no objection to ensuring that the terms of reference that the committee in fact has are in keeping with the terms of reference of other committees.

The other objection raised was with respect to the clause which provided for adjournment from place to place for the purposes of any such examination. It has been said that those terms should not allow a committee to go outside the country without special authority from the Senate. I have no objection to an amendment to that effect.

I should now like to ask leave of the Senate to withdraw the motion. If leave is granted at this time, I am prepared to submit three very brief motions which would, if passed, give the committee authority in a specific way to carry on the work it has been engaged in for the last few months.

Honourable senators, I ask leave to withdraw this motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn.

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STUDY

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, in substitution for the motion I have just withdrawn, with leave of the Senate, I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture be empowered, without special reference by the Senate, to hear submissions from representatives of agricultural and related industries;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such counsel, staff and technical advisers as may be necessary for the purposes of its examination and consideration of such legislation and other matters as may be referred to it; and

That the committee have power to sit during adjournments of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Flynn: I am just wondering if the Deputy Leader of the Government has been able to verify the wording, because this is the first time I have heard it. If he is satisfied it meets the objective or, I should say, the retraction explained by Senator Argue, then I am satisfied. It is very hard, from just hearing the motion, to judge that it is in conformity with what we have in mind.

Senator Perrault: The matter has been discussed with Senator Argue, and the proposal to set forth more specifically the mandate and the work of the committee has been given careful consideration. I find myself in agreement with the position taken by a number of senators who believe that any committee should be empowered by the Senate as a whole to consider specific legislation or specific matters. It is felt that there should be a full opportunity for all senators to debate the references to committees which it is proposed be made. I think that is a sound parliamentary principle.

Senator Flynn: I just wanted to know if you were satisfied with the wording of the new motion.

Senator Perrault: Yes, very satisfied.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I notice that this motion does not contain authorization to meet from place to place in Canada.

Senator Perrault: That is in another motion.

Senator Argue: Perhaps I might say in explanation that there are three motions. The second one has to do with the beef inquiry and adjourning from place to place, and I shall move it after this one is disposed of.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY CANADIAN BEEF INDUSTRY

Senator Argue, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture be authorized to examine and report upon any aspect of the Canadian beef industry;

That the papers and evidence received and taken on the subject in the preceding session be referred to the committee; and

That the committee, or any subcommittee so authorized by the committee, may adjourn from place to place in Canada for the purposes of such examination.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

● (1520)

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO INQUIRE INTO THE
IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS CONTAINED IN ITS REPORT "KENT COUNTY CAN BE SAVED"

Senator Argue, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture be authorized to inquire into the implementation of the recommendations contained in the report entitled: "Kent County Can be Saved," a study into the agricultural potential of Eastern New Brunswick, of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, appointed in the First Session of the Thirtieth Parliament, tabled in the Senate on 16th November 1976; and

That the committee, or any subcommittee so authorized by the committee, be authorized to travel to New Brunswick for the purposes of such inquiry.

He said: Honourable senators, this obviously would give the committee the authority to follow up the Kent County report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, November 24, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE BUDGETS TABLED

Senator Laird, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled reports approving budgets of the following committees:

- Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture,
- Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce,
- Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs,
- Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science,
- Standing Senate Committee on National Finance,
- Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, and
- Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

(For texts of reports, see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Senator Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Ewasew be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator McDonald on the list of senators serving on the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, November 29, 1977, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Honourable senators, before the question is put, I shall, as usual, try to tell you briefly what we will be doing in the Senate next week.

There appears to be very little prospect of any legislation reaching us next week, but the committee schedule will be heavy.

Bill C-3, an act respecting the reorganization of Air Canada, is before the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications. That committee met this morning on this bill and will meet again on Thursday next in the morning at 9.30 to hear further witnesses.

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will meet on Wednesday morning at 9.30, and will hold extra meetings during next week. That committee is in the process of preparing a report on the subject matter of the current income tax bill. Also, Bill S-2, an act to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act, and Bill S-3, the Canada Non-Profit Corporations Act, are before that committee. In addition, it has undertaken a study of the subject matter of Bill C-13, an act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and to amend the Bank Act and other acts in relation thereto or in consequence thereof.

● (1410)

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments will meet on Thursday afternoon at 3.30.

It is expected that there will be meetings of other committees next week, but they have not yet been set down.

In the Senate we shall endeavour to finish with the items now on the order paper, as I think we can expect a heavy workload in December before we adjourn for the Christmas holiday.

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

REGIONAL REPRESENTATION—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, yesterday the Honourable Senator Austin made some observations with respect to the degree of regional representation to be found among the membership of the Senate. I have undertaken to obtain additional information with respect to the regional political and governmental background of honourable senators. I have a brief summary which may be of interest.

This background in public life is of course, in addition to the many other occupations, professions and disciplines represented among the Senate membership. All these skills and talents bring to this chamber a great knowledge of regional affairs and regional interests. I should now like to report as follows:

Former aldermen	7
Former mayors	8
Former federal cabinet ministers	14
Former provincial cabinet ministers	14
Former deputy leaders of the Senate	3
Former deputy premiers	2
Former deputy speakers—House of Commons	1
Former government leaders—Senate	1
Former house leaders—House of Commons	1
Former house leaders—provincial	1
Former leaders of the opposition—provincial	7
Former leaders of political parties—provincial	8
Former members of House of Commons	25
Former members of provincial legislatures	18
Former parliamentary secretaries—federal	6
Former premiers	5
Former speakers—Senate	2
Former speakers—House of Commons	1
Former speakers—provincial legislatures	1

THE CONSTITUTION

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA JUDGMENT RE SASKATCHEWAN LEGISLATION—QUESTIONS

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government whether the government is contemplating any action to clarify the constitutional uncertainty that has arisen as a result of a recent Supreme Court decision respecting provincial jurisdiction. I ask this question in view of the fact that the decision seems to imply, when it is reduced to its simplest terms, that any tax or royalty imposed by a province that has a bearing on setting the price of a product in another province is ultra vires of provincial jurisdiction.

Senator Perrault: The matter is under consideration at this very moment by the government, and it can be expected, in the course of the next few hours, that there could be communication initiated by certain provincial governments with the federal government in respect of the implications flowing from this Supreme Court decision.

Senator Steuart: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. In view of the mess that the Government of Saskatchewan has plunged the people of that province into whereby they are liable to a bill of some half a billion dollars, in spite of the fact that that government was warned when it passed this legislation that it was ultra vires—

Senator Flynn: Warned by whom?

Senator Steuart: By the Leader of the Opposition in Saskatchewan at that time, a very sterling character—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Steuart: —among other leading citizens. In view of the fact that, despite the warning, the Government of Saskatchewan persisted in enacting legislation that was ultra vires, I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate would recommend to the Government of Canada that competent legal advice be made available to that provincial government, especially to Mr. Blakeney, to help it find a way out of this mess. The people of Saskatchewan, who haven't a nickel between them, could be bankrupted if the provincial government is not extricated from the terrible mess resulting from its imprudent action.

[Senator Perrault.]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is recognized that Senator Steuart possesses special knowledge concerning this particular matter. Obviously he has a good deal of background information in respect of the present situation in Saskatchewan and the implications flowing from the Supreme Court of Canada decision.

Let me say that at all times the Government of Canada is willing to engage in initiatives which may lead to a better understanding with the provinces. The legal officers of the federal Crown at this moment are considering what alternatives, if any, there appear to be. It can be expected that the legal officials of the Province of Saskatchewan will be in contact with their federal counterparts very shortly. The situation could be a most serious one for Saskatchewan, and at the moment there appear to be no easy answers.

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, I agree with my honourable friend from Saskatchewan that this is a serious mess, and one which the Government of Saskatchewan probably should not have been in. However, it is there, and I think it is very important that some way be found to alleviate what could be a bankruptcy burden on the people of Saskatchewan.

My supplementary question is: will the federal government explore a variety of means that could ease this situation?

One suggestion I have heard put forward is the enactment of legislation which would impose certain taxes on the companies that will be getting these substantial refunds, and give the revenue therefrom to Saskatchewan.

Politically, I have to say it would be rather nice to see the Government of Saskatchewan sweat it out. On the other hand, as a regional representative of that province, I certainly hope that the federal government will be able to work out a scheme whereby it will not necessarily get the Government of Saskatchewan off the hook but will relieve the people of that province from what could be an overwhelming burden.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the abiding concern of the Government of Canada must be for the people of all provinces of this nation who are taxpayers, regardless of those individuals and parties who represent them at the provincial governmental level or any other level. The Government of Canada approaches the current situation and its responsibility in that light. Its efforts, if federal advice is sought, will be directed toward suggesting the best and fairest ways in which the taxpayers of this particular province may meet the present situation.

In view of the import of the matter, I suggest I bring to the chamber a complete statement on the subject as soon as the facts of the situation become available from the legal officers of the Crown.

Senator Olson: Would the leader also ask the legal officers to make sure they consider implications in respect of the products of other natural resource industries such as forestry, mining, and so forth, if the principle in this decision is upheld as being valid?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I give you the assurance that that matter is presently under discussion and, indeed, was a subject of ministerial discussion this morning. I shall endeavour to make a more complete statement to the Senate in a few days. I will be in contact with the Minister of Justice later today with respect to the observations made by honourable senators today.

Senator Flynn: I would hope the Leader of the Government would consult Senator Steuart at the same time.

Senator Perrault: We always consult our experts.

● (1420)

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

INUIT REPRESENTATION IN GOVERNMENT—QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I wish to ask the Leader of the Government whether the Government of Canada has received submissions from any Inuit organization proposing that some form of regional, territorial or quasi-provincial government be set up in the Northwest Territories which would recognize the Inuit as a majority?

Senator Perrault: It is my understanding that such a proposal has, in fact, been received by the government. At this time the government is not favourably disposed towards the creation of any so-called entities based along ethnic or religious lines.

Senator Austin: Can the leader say whether Mr. Drury, who is the Prime Minister's special representative in an inquiry into political development of the Northwest Territories, will have some form of interim report in 1978 and prior to the Northwest Territorial elections which are scheduled for January 1979?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that question must be taken as notice because of its detailed nature. I do not have the current information with respect to the Drury inquiry before me at this time.

RETIREMENT AGE POLICIES

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Croll, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bourget, P.C.:

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and report upon

(a) the existing retirement age policies affecting workers in both the public and private sectors;

(b) the social and economic implications of mandatory retirement based on age alone;

(c) the feasibility of enabling workers, especially elderly citizens, to continue to make a worthwhile contribution to our society through flexible voluntary retirement plans to the extent of their ability and motivation;

(d) the protection for those over sixty-five against age discrimination in all employment areas; and

(e) the need for the maximum co-operation of all levels of government, labour unions, business and the public in respect of existing and future retirement age policies and retirement plans;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry; and

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place.—(Honourable Senator Macdonald).

Senator Macdonald: Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Rowe.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Frederick W. Rowe: Honourable senators, first I want to thank Senator Macdonald for being kind enough to yield to me, although I would have been quite happy to hear his contribution today. However, I understand he wishes to speak later in the debate. My comments will be briefer than usual.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Rowe: I paused to permit applause.

Honourable senators, I congratulate Senator Croll—I do not see him in the chamber right now, but I congratulate him anyway, not only on the initiative he has taken in this matter but also on that excellent and indeed, to me, moving address he gave when he introduced this motion. I congratulate also the other members of the Senate who have spoken on this motion, which is one that I regard as extremely important and long overdue.

I want to say at the outset that I support the principle of this motion which, in brief, is that a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and report, in general, upon all matters pertaining to those whom we term the "aging people" of our nation. It seems to me that the Senate is uniquely qualified to make such a study because among its members there is, and always has been, a wide disparity not only in their professions but also in their ages.

The popular impression is—and certainly I had this impression before I came to the Senate—that most senators were long past the age of retirement. When I was appointed I was 59 years old, and I was chagrined to discover that just about half of the members of the Senate at that time were younger than I. I suspect, now that I have reached the age of 65, that more than half the members of the Senate are under that age. We all know, of course, that there are senators who are many years older than the normal retirement age of 65 and who continue to serve.

While I favour the principle of the motion, I do, however, have some questions in my mind. In particular—and this is a matter of detail—I am wondering whether we need to appoint a special committee to engage in this study. Cannot such a study as this be conducted by one of our standing committees? The one that comes to mind—and I can say this without any axe to grind because I am not a member of it—is the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science. This committee has done yeoman work in the past, and I think it could very well handle such a study as is envisaged here.

I am not sure whether Senator Croll is a member of that particular committee, but I did some research in the Rules of the Senate and found that rule 75(2) states the following:

Subject to subsection (1), a senator on whose motion any bill, petition or other matter is referred to a special committee may, if he so desires, be a member of the committee.

Whether the study is conducted by a special committee—as was the case in respect of the study of poverty in Canada, for instance—or whether it is carried out under the aegis of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science or, for that matter, any other standing committee, I certainly hope and expect that Senator Croll will be called upon to play a leading role in it. Such a study would benefit enormously merely from having his name associated with it. I think it is common knowledge that for the last 20 or 30 years there have been very few great social advances made in Canada that he has not supported. Indeed, I suggest that in some cases he has been instrumental in bringing them into being. The Senate and Canada should take advantage of his enormous experience in this field, and the ability which he still obviously possesses.

When I hear the terms “old age” and “aging people”, I sometimes feel my hackles rising. I do not know what these expressions mean. When we look around we see people who are old at 65, and sometimes people who are old before they reach 65. On the other hand, we see others—and I am going to name our former colleague, the Honourable Chesley Carter, who retired this past summer at the age of 75—to whom this would certainly not apply. I happened to be lucky enough to run into Chesley Carter yesterday, and found him still a bundle of energy. Certainly no one would dispute his ability. He and I were colleagues in the civil service, in the field of education, a long time ago. Had he continued on as director of adult education—a post he held at the time he entered active political life—he would have had no choice but to get out when he became 65 years of age.

[Senator Rowe.]

To me it is a criminal waste that a man like Ches Carter should be forced to get out at 65 years of age, as is happening in different fields to many Canadians, when he could continue to contribute to the welfare of our nation until he was 75. He could have been put out to pasture, as hundreds and thousands before him have been, at the age of 65, to the loss—and I would say it is impossible to compute the loss—of society.

Let me refer also to the supreme example of our colleague, Senator Grattan O'Leary, who died a couple of years ago. If he had been in a field where he was forced to retire at 65, it would have meant that for well over 20 years the nation would have been deprived of the contribution that he made. Fortunately, he was able to make that contribution right here in the Senate.

I stick on this business of definition, and cannot help thinking of the old Greek fable of the bed of Procrustes. We have made our own bed of Procrustes, and we are trying to fit everybody into it. We are not, however, all of the same age biologically as we might be chronologically, and the fact that I am 65 does not mean that somebody else at 65 may not have infinitely more energy and ability than I have. Yet we treat everyone alike and this, strangely enough, it seems to me, is discrimination in reverse. It is proper for a man who at 65 years of age has reached, perhaps, the limit of his tether and is not in a position to make a meaningful contribution, to retire, but surely the man next to him, whose faculties are as good as they were when he was 35 years old, should not be compelled to withdraw from society, to be segregated. Yet that is what we do. I do not believe that society can afford to lose the experience, ability and energy that it does lose by this artificial formula.

● (1430)

If we were to abolish today's normal retirement age of 65 years, I realize severe problems would be created. We do have unemployment and the spectre of increasing unemployment, and we have young people waiting impatiently to step into the shoes of those who retire. That is a problem, but I do not consider it to be an insoluble one. I do not believe it is beyond our wit and ingenuity to devise some formula which will be more flexible than the present artificial formula. We have solved other problems, and I have to remind myself that, in spite of the disadvantages it has suffered, this nation of ours has repeatedly been in the forefront of social welfare progress in the wide sense of that term. Indeed, I suppose there are only three or four nations on the face of the earth—New Zealand and the Scandinavian countries come to mind—whose record can compare with that of Canada in the whole field of social progress, and here is another opportunity for Canada to take the initiative.

There is one other point I wish to make, and then I will be finished. I was looking over the terms of reference again a little earlier and I have a feeling, although I realize they are only very general guidelines, that they do lack something. It is a little difficult for me to say what I mean. I can illustrate it, perhaps, by concrete examples. Over and over we see our friends and relatives retired, forcibly in some cases, and becoming like fish out of water. They have made no provision for retirement—and I am not thinking of financial provision. If I may make a personal reference, there are two cases in my own family, one very close to me. In one case, the person retired at the age of 65. He had no choice as he was working for a company. Six months later, having been in perfect health all his life, he dropped dead. During those six months after his retirement he had done virtually nothing but sit around. I cannot say this for sure since I am not a medical doctor—and I doubt that any medical doctor could say yes or no in this case—but I have a deep conviction that if he had not retired he would not have dropped dead six months later. Too often it is more than a coincidence that people retire in good health and within a year or two in some form or another their health deteriorates, and in many cases they meet with an early death.

The other case to which I make reference is that of a former civil servant who is very close to me. At 65 years of age he retired. For 25 years he had held a very difficult post, and worked night and day without a holiday. When he retired, he was like a fish out of water. He could do nothing but sit around all day and read. That is all. He had no interests, no desire to do anything but that, and within one year he suffered some very serious health setbacks. I am thoroughly convinced that had he not retired when he did his health would not have suffered.

Far too many of our people go through life without making provision for their retirement years, and this largely, it seems to me, is a matter of education. Somewhere—perhaps in the terms of reference of this committee—there ought to be mention of the need to educate people in respect of old age.

A person retiring at the age of 60 or 65 years should be motivated to engage in other activities. Such motivation might require years of education and indoctrination, but certainly retired persons should be able to make a meaningful contribution to our society. I feel certain that by doing so they will prolong their lives.

The time for a study such as that proposed in this motion has come. I support the motion, and urge my colleagues in the Senate to do the same.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might, with Senator Macdonald's permission, say a few words on this motion. If I am not mistaken, I was the first member of the Senate appointed with an arbitrary retirement age of 75. Frankly, while I shall no doubt deplore the loss of the friendships I have made in the Senate, I hope to retire voluntarily before then. However, along with other honourable senators, I deplore the loss, through the mandatory retirement age of 75, of many able members of this house whose appointments were subsequent to my own.

While it is generally true that we deteriorate in effectiveness with age, the process is different with each individual. I need only call to mind such of our former colleagues as Senators Roebuck, Crerar, Farris, Leonard, Casgrain, Phillips (Rigaud), MacKenzie and others, all over 75, whose retirement resulted in a great loss to the Senate.

An Hon. Senator: And Senator Hugessen.

Senator Benidickson: I believe Senator Hugessen was a life appointee, and he retired prematurely and voluntarily. I am thinking of those who must now retire at age 75. I am thinking of some lady senators.

● (1440)

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I believe Senator Leonard had a life appointment.

Senator Benidickson: He retired voluntarily. I am thinking of Madame Casgrain, who was appointed in her early seventies and who had to retire. Goodness, she is doing work around the country today that a younger woman couldn't do.

I am simply saying that in my opinion it is appropriate that my colleague, Senator Croll, should have raised this subject. Senator Croll might be termed a "lifer." I hope he will be able to contribute to our debates for a long time to come. He is in his seventies, and does a job superior to that of many younger men. There is merit in his proposal that a special committee of the Senate be appointed to make this study.

Speaking personally, while I would deplore the loss of association and friendships on both sides of this house, I may retire before the end of my term, my reason being that I would like to enjoy a little more time with my wife than has been possible.

I repeat, there is merit in this motion. There have been members of the Senate who were in their nineties, which prompts me to say that my close northern Ontario Senate colleague, Senator Paterson, is 93 years of age. He is here practically every day, and I have the feeling that if he did not have his Senate obligations he would be feeling somewhat forlorn. So far as his indemnity is concerned, each year he gives many times that amount to good causes. Although his eyesight may be poor, I can tell honourable senators that he recognizes their voices. His heart is here, and he is one of our best citizens. His benefactions are manifest. He is greatly interested in the Senate. Senator Paterson is over 90, and knows exactly what is going on in this house every day.

I support what Senator Rowe has said, that we should look at this timetable, which does not appear to have much relationship to biology. Senator Croll, who has throughout his career supported the cause of advanced social planning, has again given us something that is worthy of our consideration.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 29, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 29, 1977

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Baldwin had been substituted for that of Mr. Murta on the list of members appointed to serve on the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

THE HONOURABLE EUGENE A. FORSEY THE HONOURABLE JEAN MARCHAND, P.C.

FELICITATIONS ON RETURN TO CHAMBER

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I know that all honourable senators would wish me to acknowledge the presence this evening of two of our distinguished colleagues, the Honourable Senator Forsey and the Honourable Senator Marchand, both of whom have spent time in hospital during recent days. We are delighted to have them back.

THE GREY CUP

CONGRATULATIONS TO MONTREAL ALOUETTES ON WINNING CANADIAN PROFESSIONAL FOOTBALL CHAMPIONSHIP

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I know that I speak on behalf of all members of this chamber when I extend my warmest congratulations to the Montreal Alouettes on their great victory in the Grey Cup game last weekend. I have been authorized to state on behalf of the Edmonton Eskimos, the distinguished western representatives, whose most fundamental tactical mistake, perhaps, was getting out of bed on Sunday morning, that there will be no demand for a judicial recount of the score.

Senator Flynn: Sweet revenge for the British Columbia Lions.

Senator Perrault: There is never a spirit of revenge on the west coast.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Documents issued by the Department of External Affairs, as follows:

1. Release entitled "International Relations: Lalonde states that the Quebec authorities refused to negotiate";
2. Document entitled "Negotiations in which the Government of Quebec refused to participate";
3. Release entitled "Chronology of communications between the Federal Government and the Government of Quebec concerning the Social Security Agreement between Canada and Italy from January 4 to November 7, 1977";
4. Document entitled "Federalism and International Relations";
5. Social Security Agreement between Canada and Italy;
6. Release entitled "Marc Lalonde launches Operation Deblockage"; and
7. Correspondence between the Government of Canada and the Government of Quebec (French Text).

Report of the Minister of Finance respecting Olympic coins for the period ending September 30, 1977, pursuant to sections 13(1) and 13(3) of the Olympic (1976) Act, Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada, 1973-74.

Capital Budgets of the Cape Breton Development Corporation for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1978, pursuant to sections 21 and 26 of the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act, Chapter C-13, R.S.C., 1970, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1977-2771, dated September 29, 1977, approving same.

Copies of Reports of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting certain compensation plans, as follows:

1. Corporation of the City of Nelson, British Columbia and the group of its office and outside employees, represented by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, local 339. Order dated November 23, 1977.
2. Corporation of the City of Rossland, British Columbia and the group of its office and outside employees, represented by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, local 1276. Order dated November 23, 1977.
3. City of Trail, British Columbia and the group of its inside and outside employees, represented by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, local 2087, formerly local 343. Order dated November 23, 1977.

4. School District No. 13 (Kettle Valley), Midway, British Columbia, represented by the British Columbia School Trustees Association, and the group of its permanent employees, represented by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, local 2089, formerly local 343. Order dated November 23, 1977.

Copies of Reports of the Anti-Inflation Board to the Governor in Council, pursuant to section 17(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, reporting its reference to the Administrator of the said Act of certain proposed changes in compensation plans, as follows:

1. Treasury Board of Canada and its hospital services group, dated November 18, 1977.

2. McAllister Towing and Salvage Limited and the captains group, represented by the Canadian Marine Officers Union, dated November 18, 1977.

3. McAllister Towing and Salvage Limited and the engineers group, represented by the Canadian Marine Officers Union, dated November 18, 1977.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on supplementary estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1978, and I ask that it be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of today and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Clerk Assistant (Reading):

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to which the supplementary estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1978, were referred, has in obedience to the order of reference of Thursday, November 10, 1977, examined the said supplementary estimates (A) and reports as follows—

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

(For text of report see appendix p. 185.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, I move that this report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit while the Senate is sitting tomorrow, Wednesday, November 30, 1977, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

● (2010)

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DOCUMENTARY PROGRAM THE FIFTH ESTATE

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask the Leader of the Government when he expects to be able to answer written question No. 1 by the Honourable Senator Bosa. It is a question of considerable interest to many of us in this chamber.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the information necessary to reply to the question has not as yet been received. I hope it will be a matter of only a few days before that reply can be provided.

Senator Smith (Colchester): A supplementary question, if I may. In view of the difficulties in obtaining such information from the CBC in the past, does the Leader of the Government really expect that he will be able to obtain the information necessary to answer this question completely?

Senator Perrault: As honourable senators are aware, we have had some difficulty in the past in obtaining this type of information. While I am not hopeful that the reply will be more complete than those received in the past, certainly an effort will be made to obtain the information requested.

THE CONSTITUTION

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA JUDGMENT RE SASKATCHEWAN LEGISLATION

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a good deal of interest has been indicated in the chamber with respect to the Supreme Court of Canada decision regarding the taxation of certain mineral resources in the provinces. I have further information to give honourable senators this evening in that regard, and as events progress I shall endeavour to keep the house fully informed as to the situation.

On November 23, the Supreme Court of Canada, in a seven to two split decision, ruled that Saskatchewan legislation, regulations and orders relating to the imposition of the mineral income tax and royalty surcharge on most of the province's oil production are unconstitutional. The decision overturns rulings by lower courts upholding the constitutionality of the 1974 Saskatchewan legislation. The affected oil companies may demand refunds of as much as $600 million, plus interest.

This relates, I should add, only to oil companies. There are other resource companies which may have claims in other directions.

I can inform honourable senators that it is unlikely that the federal government will have a position on this decision before the end of this week at the earliest. The position will be developed in consultation with the ministries of Finance and Justice.

The decision and its implications—and they could be profound—are being reviewed by the government at this moment. The matter will undoubtedly be raised when the Prime Minister meets Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan in Regina in early December.

As soon as additional information is received, I shall communicate it directly to the chamber.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, might I be permitted to ask the Leader of the Government if by his reference to a split decision of seven to two he seeks to indicate that it is any less a firm decision of the Supreme Court than if it had been a decision based on any other numerical ratio?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I do not believe it would be appropriate for me to comment on the relative impact of a unanimous decision as opposed to a decision of seven to two or five to four.

Senator Smith (Colchester): If I may be permitted a supplementary question, why then did the Leader of the Government in giving his reply consider it appropriate to say that the decision was a split decision of seven to two?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it was an honest and earnest endeavour to set forth the facts without any attempt at editorial comment.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Is it not a fact that the decision of the Supreme Court in making their finding is just as binding at seven to two as it would be at nine to zero?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, replying as I did, I was not implying that the decision, although it was a split decision, was in any way different from a unanimous decision and should equally be upheld. The honourable senator, however, is entitled to his own views regarding the force of the decision.

THE SENATE

PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES OF SENATORS

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, since a question relating to the Supreme Court has come up, I wonder if I might ask the Leader of the Government whether the appropriate authorities in this house have taken into consideration the decision of Chief Justice Evans in the uranium case in so far as it affects this house. I understand the matter is under advisement in the other house and I take no issue with that, but I wonder whether since this matter affects equally the members of Parliament who sit in this house the implications had been considered by any of the appropriate authorities here.

[Senator Perrault.]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the issue is obviously one of immediate concern in the other place. It may well be that at some time in the future it would be appropriate to debate the matter in this chamber. However, I suggest that we await developments in the other place.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, the answer given by the Leader of the Opposition—I am sorry, I am being premature; I am rather looking forward to coming events—the answer given by the Leader of the Government leads me to inquire at once what is there about the privileges of Parliament that is peculiar to the other place and which is not equally applicable to the members of this house? And why, if it is not proper for the press to publish things being said in the other place, should it not be of equal concern to this house as to whether the press is privileged to report what is said here?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, there is no suggestion on the part of the government supporters, or indeed any other senator—

Senator Flynn: How do you know?

Senator Perrault: —that debate be precluded here because the matter is under discussion in the other place. If the honourable senator wishes to initiate a motion which would bring about a debate on this subject, indisputably that is his right and privilege. There is no suggestion of an attempt to frustrate the desire of any honourable senator to debate the issue. The fact remains that this matter is currently before the other place and as yet has not been brought to the attention of this chamber. But any honourable senator who wishes to do so may raise the issue. Should he or she do so, it will be dealt with in our usual expeditious manner.

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I fear that the Leader of the Government has missed the purport of my question. I was not suggesting a debate here. I was just wondering whether the legal counsel to the Senate, the Law Clerk, or the rules committee, or both of them were making any kind of study of this, because it is possible that there might be some contribution to the subject from the experts in this house which might have escaped the notice of their counterparts in the other house, so that we would have something authoritative before us if the question did come up here in debate.

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator advances a very useful proposal, and it would be my intention to confer tomorrow with our Law Clerk and discuss the matter with him. It may be that this house can contribute to what is a very important discussion at the present time with respect to a matter relating to the privileges of Parliament. And there are a number of senators with expertise in the area who should feel not at all constrained to send along their views on this subject.

● (2020)

HUMAN RIGHTS

REPORT OF TASK FORCE ON RACIAL DISCRIMINATION— QUESTION

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate with respect to the extensive coverage given in the press of a report on racial discrimination by Professor Walter Pitman of Toronto. In that report he has made a number of suggestions, one of which is that the federal government should take the initiative in studying this subject.

Can the Leader of the Government tell us whether such a study could be initiated in the Senate by one of our standing committees?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that interesting proposal should certainly be given serious consideration. I have not as yet had an opportunity to examine the report. I know that a number of senators have a deep and abiding concern with the preservation and protection of human rights and they will no doubt want to read that report. After reading the report and studying its recommendations, perhaps a number of senators will wish to proceed then to some kind of formal study. I have not had the opportunity to study the document. In fact, I do not believe it is yet in the hands of the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Senator Goldenberg: May I point out to honourable senators that this report was not made to the Government of Canada but was made to the Metropolitan Toronto Council in Toronto.

Senator Flynn: I suggest that it is important all the same.

Senator Goldenberg: I was just explaining why it would not reach us here—at least not directly.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, when I replied to Senator Bosa a moment ago I was aware that the report was to the metropolitan government of greater Toronto; but the protection of human rights has always been a concern of the Senate of Canada, as part of its role as a protector of minority rights in this country and of regional interests. It may well be, therefore, that certain aspects of the report would be an appropriate study for some Senate committee at a future time.

RETIREMENT AGE POLICIES

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, November 24, the debate on the motion of Senator Croll:

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and report upon

(a) the existing retirement age policies affecting workers in both the public and private sectors;

(b) the social and economic implications of mandatory retirement based on age alone;

(c) the feasibility of enabling workers, especially elderly citizens, to continue to make a worthwhile contribution to our society through flexible voluntary retirement plans to the extent of their ability and motivation;

(d) the protection for those over 65 against age discrimination in all employment areas; and

(e) the need for the maximum co-operation of all levels of government, labour unions, business and the public in respect of existing and future retirement age policies and retirement plans;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry; and

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I rise just to indicate my support of the motion. You will notice that it is for a special committee of the Senate to be appointed to examine and report upon “(a) the existing retirement age policies affecting workers in both the public and private sectors.” I think this is most important.

First of all, I should say that I join with the previous speakers in deploring the fact that workers at the age of 65 must retire. In a great many cases such compulsory retirement has a deplorable effect, not only upon the individual but also upon the community in which he lives. I think it is important that the existing retirement age policy be examined, because by examining it we will then get to the facts. As it is, we all know certain things about the situation but if, as I suspect, this is to be a study in depth, it will give us facts upon which we can rely and upon which recommendations can be made for future action.

Certainly one thing the committee could find out is why the age of 65 was chosen as the special age at which people should retire. Everything seems to be related to that age, and even pension schemes are payable at the age of 65. What is so magical about the age of 65? There it is. Before the age of 65 a person is an active, willing worker; suddenly, after the age of 65, he is no longer presumed to be able to carry out the work that he was doing before.

The second part of the motion is that the special committee should examine and report upon:

(b) the social and economic implications of mandatory retirement based on age alone;

It is possible that those of us who come from small communities have a better knowledge of the effects of retirement on workers aged 65, because in smaller communities we have more opportunity to know people and we see what happens to them.

Like most honourable senators, I have observed what happens to a great many people who are forced to retire at the age of 65. It is all very well to say that over the years we should make provision for our retirement, but the fact remains that many people do not.

Stevadores, for instance, are well able to work after the age of 65, but under the present system they must retire when they reach that age. A person cannot change overnight a routine he has followed for 40 years or more. It is difficult to break a set routine, and after retirement a person often finds the need to account in some way for eight hours of the day. This situation applies to coal miners as well as to stevedores and others. Following pre-retirement leave and retirement they find it almost impossible to change to a new lifestyle.

It must be remembered that in most instances the income of a retired person is severely reduced, which often means a lower standard of living. Some people will have prepared for their retirement and can manage quite well. We all know of those who undertake voluntary work for various organizations and who lead satisfying and happy lives during their retirement. However, it cannot be denied that the present mandatory retirement age of 65 presents a grave hardship for many people. I do not know what might be the general effect of this hardship on the social life of the community as a whole, but I do know the effect of it on individual lives, and that effect is bad.

It is proposed that the special committee should examine and report upon:

- (c) the feasibility of enabling workers, especially elderly citizens, to continue to make a worthwhile contribution to our society through flexible voluntary retirement plans to the extent of their ability and motivation;

That is a very wide term of reference. I hope the committee will follow a broad interpretation of it because, after all, why is it necessary for people to retire at the age of 65? Many will say that they must do so because there are insufficient jobs available for younger people. Apparently the view is widely held that it is better for older people to leave the work force with a pension than for young people to be without work. Therefore, I repeat that I hope the committee will follow a broad interpretation of its authority under that particular term of reference, and will go further and examine why, under our economic system, there are not enough jobs for those who seek employment—for those under the age of 65, and for those over the age of 65 who are willing to work. In my view, it is only by having an effective, economic system that we can provide economic security for those over the age of 65, to enable them to lead happy and useful lives.

Perhaps one aspect to be examined is the possibility of a shorter work week. It might well be that it is no longer necessary for people to work a five-day or 40-hour week. I expect there are those who might say that that is too short a work week, but I suppose they would have said the same thing when the work day was reduced from twelve to ten hours, and again when it was reduced from ten to eight hours. I do think, however, that the time has come when we should seriously examine the possibility of shortening the work day and the work week.

● (2030)

If the members of the committee are able to come up with some answers to all these problems they will be making a very useful contribution to our way of living.

Those of us here who are over 65 years of age naturally feel great sympathy for those who must retire when they reach that age, but it must also be remembered that there are many young people coming into the work force whom we must try to place, and whom we must place even if it means that those who are 65 must retire at that age, or even sooner.

Honourable senators, I wish the committee well. I know they will work hard, and I know they will present a report that will command attention.

On motion of Senator Petten, debate adjourned.

NORTH ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY

TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL SESSION, PARIS, FRANCE—DEBATE
CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, November 16, the debate on the inquiry of Senator McDonald calling the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-third Annual Session of the North Atlantic Assembly, held in Paris, France, from 18th to 24th September, 1977, and in particular to the discussions and proceedings of the Session and the participation therein of the delegation from Canada.

Hon. John Morrow Godfrey: Honourable senators, I must confess that when I was appointed a member of the North Atlantic Assembly delegation this year I had only a vague idea of how the Assembly itself operated, and I certainly was under the impression that it was an official branch of NATO. Furthermore, I did not have a very clear idea of what France's position was in NATO. I would be less than honest if I did not confess that the fact that the North Atlantic Assembly was meeting in Paris this year, for the first time for about 10 years, I believe, helped to act as a catalyst to kindle my curiosity to find out what the Assembly was all about.

When I was appointed to the delegation, I happened to mention the fact to some of my friends. This quickly turned out to be a serious error in judgment on my part, because I was immediately asked by them why the Assembly was meeting in Paris when France, as they thought, was no longer a member of NATO. They also wanted to know what the Assembly did, and I am afraid that I could not give adequate answers to either of these questions, although I did say that my impression was that France was still a member of NATO even though the NATO headquarters was kicked out of France about 10 years ago.

Like most honourable senators, I thought I had a pretty good idea of what NATO was all about, and my knowledge had been considerably improved since I was a senator as a result of listening to the very instructive speeches of Senator Hamilton McDonald and others when they reported on the annual sessions of the North Atlantic Assembly. My ignorance of what the North Atlantic Assembly was all about was partly rectified when I got around to re-reading the excellent speech on the subject delivered by Senator McElman to this chamber on December 14, 1976. I will not repeat what he said at that time, but it would have been helpful, and would have saved me some embarrassment, if a copy of Senator McElman's speech had accompanied the notice of my appointment to the delegation, since we did not receive our briefing until two days before we left.

Possibly I should amplify a little on what Senator McElman said about France's position with respect to NATO. He said:

Some 10 years ago France withdrew her military forces from the day-to-day commitment to the alliance, but remains involved in most other activities of the organization.

That is correct. I might add that it is my understanding that the original alliance did not provide for the deployment of the members' armed forces under a unified command in peacetime. What it did provide was a commitment to come to each other's military aid in the event that any of its members was attacked. France did not, therefore, breach the terms of the alliance when ten years ago she refused to allow her troops to be under a unified command in peacetime. From a practical point of view, it is generally felt that if an attack did come, France would probably co-operate in every way. It is my understanding that regular meetings take place to ensure that this co-operation will be integrated and effective. However, France being France, one cannot be absolutely sure that France would co-operate in the event of an attack.

There is one other point that I find very interesting—I do not believe it was specifically mentioned in Senator McElman's speech—and that is that the North Atlantic Assembly has no official connection with NATO. It is merely a forum through which NATO policies and activities can be discussed in detail by parliamentarians from NATO countries. While it is not an official part of NATO itself, one is certainly not conscious of that fact when one attends an Assembly meeting and, in my opinion, from the practical point of view, it does not make the slightest difference whether it is technically an official part of NATO or not.

I must say that I became very enthusiastic about the importance of the work of the five committees of the North Atlantic Assembly which meet for three days before the Assembly starts its plenary sessions and which, in my opinion, play the same role vis-à-vis the Assembly as Senate committees play vis-à-vis the Senate. I would also say that the plenary sessions are very comparable in importance to sittings of this house. I do not think I need amplify that remark in order for its implication to be understood by honourable senators.

I was the Senate representative from the Canadian delegation on the Scientific and Technical Committee. There were three representatives from the House of Commons on that committee. We considered an excellent draft report prepared by Mr. Ian Watson, M.P., of the Canadian delegation, on Marine Resources Management and the Ocean Information Explosion. The point he made is that all the information and control systems are organized independently, and no country is planning to equip itself to handle and profitably use the vast quantity of data that is about to be rained down upon it from satellites, data buoys, ships and reconnaissance aircraft. This is data than can be very useful for vessel traffic management, offshore resources management, fisheries control, search and rescue, vessel source pollution policing, environmental oceanography, sea ice reconnaissance, marine weather and sea-state forecasting, and ocean routing.

As a result of Mr. Watson's report, and on his initiative and recommendation, a resolution was recommended by the committee which was unanimously adopted by the Assembly, and which reads as follows:

The Assembly urges the NATO Council—

1. to establish a technical committee whose role would be to determine what initiatives and action should be taken to achieve collaboration between the member countries of the North Atlantic Alliance

(a) in the setting up of mutually beneficial ocean information retrieval systems

(b) in advancing toward the ultimate goal of a global ocean management infrastructure.

2. to organize a 2-3 day technical conference on the the subject of Ocean Information Management.

The main subject which occupied the attention of the Scientific and Technical Committee was nuclear energy. We considered two draft reports, one by the general rapporteur, Mr. Georges Mundeeler of Belgium, and one by a special rapporteur, Mr. Gerhard Flamig of the Federal Republic of Germany. Both these gentlemen had given a great deal of time and thought to this most important and complex problem and appeared to have considerable expertise. To do this matter justice, I would have to speak at great length. I will not, however, attempt to cover this matter today and will touch on it only briefly.

The three most important, as well as the most controversial and emotional problems, of course, are, first, safety; secondly, reprocessing and recycling the waste fuel; and thirdly, waste disposal.

There is considerable disagreement among scientists and engineers, not only about the probabilities and potential effects of a nuclear accident, but also concerning the wisdom of developing nuclear power in general. Professor Rasmussen, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in a widely quoted report sponsored by the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, which was published in its final version in October 1975, concluded that if 100 nuclear plants are in operation, the probability of an accident resulting in 1,000 or more deaths was one in every million years. His conclusions, as one would expect, have been disputed by others.

The problem of the storage and disposal of radioactive waste materials is probably the most critical in the nuclear debate. It is certainly the subject which has aroused the most widespread public concern. The problem is at the forefront of the campaigns of anti-nuclear groups throughout virtually all the western countries with nuclear power growth plans. It is also tied in with the question of reprocessing and recycling the waste fuel, because reprocessing and recycling reduces the plutonium in radioactive waste to about 1 per cent of what it was before. Mr. Flamig, in his report, states:

The use of reprocessed uranium and plutonium 239 as reactor fuel will also make waste management easier by drastically reducing the time scale involved, as well as cutting the volume of waste and allowing for more convenient storage.

To use the lingo used in Paris: Do you burn or bury?

I was prepared to give this speech last week. However, when I heard that the report of the committee, commissioned by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and chaired by Dr. F. K. Hare, on the Management of Canada's Nuclear Wastes was to be tabled, I thought it more prudent to study that report before I spoke, and it was well that I did. This report, and a subsequent conversation I had with Dr. Hare, puts rather a different light on the problem of storage of waste after reprocessing.

Evidently, the 1 per cent of the plutonium that is left, and the other radioactive material in the waste, still present much the same problem. Furthermore, the extraction of the plutonium leaves the waste in a liquid form that is difficult to store on a long-term basis. The liquid waste is still very hot and highly radioactive and, for long-term storage, it must be turned back into an insoluble solid such as ceramics or glass. This is a very expensive process which, while it has been perfected by the British, still has not been used by them with respect to their waste.

The extracting of 99 per cent of the plutonium by reprocessing does reduce the radioactive life of the remaining plutonium from hundreds of thousands of years to 1,000 years or less, thus easing the long-term storage problem, but not eliminating it.

Moreover, according to the conversation I had with Dr. Hare, it does not significantly reduce the volume of waste, thus he disagrees with Mr. Flamig. The Hare report states:

We do not believe the benefits to waste management justify, on their own, the recovery of plutonium.

The group which prepared the Hare report obviously do not think that the problem could properly be described as one of burning or burying.

In any evaluation of nuclear power, the sheer complexity of the subject makes it difficult for the man in the street—in fact, any layman—to judge for himself, and he may well allow emotional criteria to decide for him. I would like to quote again from Mr. Flamig's report:

[Senator Godfrey.]

● (2040)

The parliamentarians' dilemma remains as acute as ever with citizens' action groups making all the running in the nuclear debate. We should make every effort to redirect the nuclear energy debate back into the legislatures and as parliamentarians we should welcome all points of view and information on this complex but highly important subject, as eventually decisions on whether to proceed with nuclear development and in what scale, and direction, will have to be made by governments and politicians.

I agree with Mr. Flamig, and obviously the Canadian government does too, because the Hare report will form the basis of a subsequent green paper which will invite everyone to express their views to the government and Parliament, which will eventually have to make the decision.

The Canadian delegation took its duties seriously. We were well briefed before we left, and we met at breakfast each morning in Paris so that we could be briefed on what went on in the other committees, and thus be in a position to vote intelligently at the plenary session on their reports.

I should like to conclude my remarks by commenting on one subject which was discussed by the Political Committee. When we were being briefed in Ottawa prior to our departure I heard some very unfavourable comments from the veteran members of the delegation about a draft report prepared by the General rapporteur of the Political Committee, Mr. Pieter Dankert of the Netherlands. These members of the committee were particularly concerned about his approach to the problems created by the growth, particularly in France and Italy, of what has become known as Eurocommunism. The Communist Parties in these countries and in Spain have been declaring recently that they believe in the democratic process and are independent of the Russian Communist Party.

I took the trouble to read Mr. Dankert's draft report and thought it an able and well-reasoned document, although I did not agree with absolutely everything he said. I was frankly surprised at the antagonism shown to it by those members of our delegation who were familiar with Mr. Dankert's views from previous North Atlantic Assembly meetings.

What did Mr. Dankert say that caused so much concern? He started off by saying that the rise of Eurocommunism "creates difficulties for the alliance but that these are by no means insurmountable." He further said that in his opinion "the alliance should be able to cope with the problem of Eurocommunism." I might not be quite as optimistic, but at least I would say there is a reasonable possibility that it can cope, and that we should not exclude this possibility in our planning.

The contrary view is that the Eurocommunists' loyalties would, in the event of a showdown, be with Russia so that they cannot be trusted in any way; thus, if they shared power in any member of NATO that country would have to be excluded from at least the councils of NATO, if not NATO itself. This attitude was very well illustrated in Senator McElman's speech last year, in which he said that a communist is a communist is a communist, meaning that they are all the same and, presumably, that their primary loyalty is still to the Russian Communist Party, as it certainly was in the not too distant past.

I remember that kind of talk when the Chinese communists took over, and nearly everyone was worried that China and Russia would form an alliance that would attempt to dominate the world. Even then there were a few perceptive experts who predicted that nationalism would prove stronger than communism and that there would be an eventual falling out between them, and, of course, those people have been proven right. Those who say all communists are the same seem to have also overlooked Tito and Yugoslavia, and what happened in Czechoslovakia and Hungary. Does anyone really seriously think that the North Vietnamese would not oppose the Chinese if the Chinese tried to take over their country?

What else did Mr. Dankert say? He said:

Clearly, Americans have a right to assert their preferences in political philosophy and to voice doubts where they have some evidence about the sincerity of the Eurocommunists' recent infatuation with the rhetoric of democracy.

But the Carter administration has understood that too harsh warnings could be counter-productive and make anti-Communist political leaders appear to be the tools of the Americans, thus receiving a backlash from their voters who have nationalistic pride. The counter-argument that a softer attitude would make the Communists look more acceptable or respectable has virtually become irrelevant with the progress these parties have made in the last year. Clearly, the new policy, though with a different strategy, aims at preventing the communists from sharing power in any European country. But, should this happen, the United States will no doubt find it easier to talk with them. Washington should not force the Eurocommunists to become more extreme, and more pro-Soviet, a position they themselves do not want to be in.

● (2050)

What I have just quoted makes a lot of sense to me.

When the political committee met they decided to shelve the Dankert Report, thus the North Atlantic Assembly in plenary session did not have an opportunity to discuss it or vote on it. This resulted in some criticism from Lord Wynne-Jones of the British delegation. In a speech to the plenary session he said that he was concerned that the majority of the delegates were too conservative in their attitudes and that this was exemplified by the fact that the political committee took steps to prevent the Dankert Report being debated in the plenary session of the Assembly itself.

He specifically mentioned the Canadian delegation as being dominated by small "c" conservative thinking. I could not help being rather amused when I heard him say this, because I was under somewhat the same impression. Some of the French and American delegates were not amused at all. One of the American delegates made his objections known by a very blunt speech which echoed Senator McElman's beliefs that a communist is a communist is a communist. From this I gather that he was disavowing President Carter's somewhat softer approach to Eurocommunism and Pieter Dankert's approval of this policy.

Only time will tell, of course, as to who is right. While I am personally inclined to favour Mr. Dankert's views at this time, I do not feel at all dogmatic on the subject and may very well have to change my opinion as to the best strategy to follow in the light of developments in the future.

May I say in conclusion that I am inclined to approach meetings of this kind with a certain amount of scepticism. I must say, however, that after attending these meetings of the Assembly, and particularly the committee meetings, I am convinced that they serve a useful purpose and that the input that the NATO council gets from these meetings must on the whole be useful.

I also found that as a result of the briefings I had before we left, and my experience at the meetings, I now understand the importance of NATO to a much greater extent than I did before and that when anyone asks me questions about the North Atlantic Assembly, NATO and the problems of the alliance, I am considerably better equipped to answer them.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Thompson: I wonder if I could ask the honourable senator a question. He quoted a report which states that if 100 nuclear plants were in operation, the probability of an accident resulting in 1,000 or more deaths was one in every million years. Is he aware of the growing suspicion that there has already been an accident in a nuclear plant in the Soviet Union?

Senator Godfrey: No. Frankly, this is the first time I have heard about that. I have heard of other accidents—a minor one at Chalk River, for example—but I have not heard of one in the Soviet Union.

Senator Flynn: That should be reassuring over one million years.

Senator Bosa: Would the honourable senator permit a question before the debate is adjourned? Could Senator Godfrey inform the Senate whether he has any intimation that these Eurocommunist Parties, if they form the governments in their respective countries, would continue to be members of NATO?

Senator Godfrey: That is the whole problem—will they continue to be members of NATO? I believe that the United States at the present time is trying to leave its options open because, presumably, at least judging from the line it is taking at the present time, these countries would probably wish to remain as part of NATO. However, whether the other members of NATO would want them there and feel that they could be trusted with the secrets of NATO and could be trusted to co-operate in the event of an attack on a NATO country is the problem. I do not believe that anyone can answer that with any certainty at this time.

Senator Bosa: I have a supplementary question. Have these parties made any statements indicating their opinions as to what they would do if they were ever to attain power?

Senator Godfrey: That is the Eurocommunist countries of Italy and France. I do not know if the Eurocommunist Parties have specifically come out and made a statement as to what their position would be.

Senator McElman: May I also ask a question of the honourable senator? Is Senator Godfrey aware that the government of Italy, which supports democratic processes, has taken action, by a back-door route, if you will, to ensure that members of the Communist Party elected to their Parliament are permitted to take no part in the NATO meetings—no part of any nature? Does he feel, perhaps, that that indicates less trust by the Italian democratic parties of Eurocommunism than he has indicated here tonight?

Senator Godfrey: I would agree that at the present time, although I understand that the Communist Party of Italy is supporting and keeping in power the government of Italy, they are not members of the government of Italy, so it is very easy and very sensible to exclude them. There is no reason why they should be included at the present time.

Senator Flynn: Why do they?

Senator Godfrey: The problem of what they would do would arise if they were given a minority position in the government. In my opinion there is no great problem at this time, when they are not members of the government.

Senator Flynn: You do not exclude us; why should they?

Senator Godfrey: I do not think our parliamentarians are privy—I certainly am not—to all the secrets of NATO, the NATO Council and the defence committee of NATO, which is what worries people. One of the points causing this concern is that there are secret plans and if they were to be members of the government those plans may well be discussed in the government. I believe that is one of the problems, that there may be actual sharing of power by the government with the Eurocommunists in one of these countries who might then become privy to NATO secrets.

Senator Forsey: May I ask the honourable senator if there were any Eurocommunist delegates at the North Atlantic Assembly?

Senator Flynn: No; there were no sympathizers, either.

Senator Godfrey: I am not sure about that.

Senator McElman: I have one further question of the honourable senator, if I may. I should say, first, that delegates to the North Atlantic Assembly meetings are privy to highly confidential briefings. This statement can be supported by Senator McDonald and others who have participated in them, as I have. Is the honourable senator not aware that under the rules of the North Atlantic Assembly all parties in the participating Parliaments are entitled to representation on their respective delegations? This is long-standing policy, but I point out that Italy has chosen a rather special method, which is quite involved and which I will not go into tonight, to keep off its delegation Eurocommunists who, by the rules, are entitled to be part of the Italian delegation. This is the basis for the question I put to him. It simply points up that they do not have the enthusiasm for Eurocommunism which some appear to have today, which I do not share.

Senator Godfrey: I can say in reply that I have no enthusiasm for Eurocommunism. I agree that Italy is doing a very sensible thing. I will be considerably more cautious from now on and I will not conclude any speech in the future by saying that I am considerably better equipped to answer questions after the speech than I was before.

Senator Flynn: Once more.

On motion of Senator Austin, debate adjourned.

• (2100)

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH'S AWARD

A PROGRAM FOR YOUTH

Hon. George Isaac Smith rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, November 22, 1977:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to a program for youth known as The Duke of Edinburgh Award in Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, I should like to commence by making a minor—and I hope in no way offensive—correction in spelling. I notice a typographical error in the Inquiry standing in my name. An apostrophe and the letter “s” is omitted from the word “Edinburgh”. Ordinarily, that would not trouble me in the least, but when one is considering so eminent a personage as the Duke of Edinburgh, I think it would be proper to spell the name of his program correctly. Honourable senators, I am sure you will remember that during last month’s royal visit to Ottawa Prince Philip took part in a ceremony at the Chateau Laurier Hotel on Sunday afternoon, October 16. This was a ceremony in which His Royal Highness presented gold awards to some 115 young Canadians who had completed the program of activities required to qualify for an award under The Duke of Edinburgh’s Award in Canada.

On this occasion I wish to bring this program to the attention of honourable senators because I believe it is a very helpful and important program in the development of the youth of our country. At the outset, I should say that I have had some very modest connection with the program for some years, and thus cannot be regarded as a strictly impartial observer of it.

The program was initiated by Prince Philip in 1956. In so doing, he recognized that the development of the industrial urban way of life had completely changed a pattern of existence which human communities had followed for many generations. Though this change had made more people prosperous and education much more formal and comprehensive, his view was that it had substantially limited in some manner the scope and variety of life, and the opportunities for youth to grow and develop.

In describing the program, Prince Philip said:

—it is based on the principle that growing up is more than just a matter of gaining academic and technical qualifications; it depends on the idea that physical fitness is just as important as mental fitness; that voluntary service is just as important as a job or profession; that a leisure interest is just as rewarding as earning a living; and that the experience of a demanding and adventurous expedition is as valuable as passing an examination.

The program was introduced to Canada in 1963, and now involves approximately 14,000 young people across the country.

You may ask: What kind of a program is it? Let me try to answer that question in broad outline, and I hope with reasonable brevity. The Duke of Edinburgh's Award in Canada is open to young people between the ages of 14 and 21 years. It is not a competitive program. It is not, in the usual sense, an organizational type of activity. The young people taking part in the program do not belong to it as members of an organization. It is a combination of incentives and awards for participation, sufficiently flexible to be used by any school, any youth organization, any recreation committee or any other group having the care and leadership of young people between the ages of 14 and 21 years.

The participants may gain awards through their schools, youth clubs or similar organizations, or they may gain them entirely on their own. An award may be won by any person, between his or her fourteenth and twenty-first birthdays, who qualifies in four sections of the program, each section relating to activities of a different kind. The qualifying standards are variously defined in terms of proficiency, perseverance or sustained effort.

Honourable senators, I wish to emphasize that the program is not competitive in the usual sense. Participants do not compete against each other for an award. Instead, they measure themselves against a set of standards established for each section of the program. Success depends more on effort and persistence than on either brains or brawn, and a physical handicap does not necessarily prevent a young person from taking part in the program.

There are three steps or stages towards the final objective of earning a gold award. The first stage is the bronze award, which is for young people over 14 years. The second stage is the silver award, and the standards required to achieve it are somewhat more difficult than those for the bronze and, therefore, a young person must be at least 15 years of age before attempting it. The final stage is the gold award, and its standards are more difficult than those of the silver award. Young men and women must be 16 years of age before undertaking the activities necessary to qualify for it. The awards are not open to those over 21 years of age. The bronze, silver and gold awards, you will note, are in ascending order of challenge and achievement.

The program has been described as one of activities designed to offer a challenge to young people in order that they may make the best use of their leisure time, so that they may equip themselves to become responsible members of their communities. It is very flexible. It can be fitted into almost any kind of training program so that it does not add a further heavy burden on those young people already engaged in some kind of leisure time activity, or upon those instructors and leaders who make up the adult supporters of the activities.

Each participant measures himself or herself against an internationally agreed set of high standards established for each section of the award. These standards are set at such a level that, in order to reach them, a substantial amount of work and training is necessary. This brings about a sense of achievement to those who meet the standards. On the other hand, they are not unreasonably high, and can indeed be achieved by any young person of ordinary ability after reasonable training.

In order to encourage those who may be physically handicapped to take part in the program and seek the awards, the standards can be modified in such a manner as to be appropriately related to particular handicaps.

● (2110)

The activities are grouped in five sections. In order to qualify for an award, a participant, at whatever level, must complete four of the five sections. The first section is Service to the Community. This involves performing a community service without pay. For instance, it might be qualifying oneself to teach first aid or lifesaving, or it might be qualifying oneself in home nursing, firefighting, helping senior citizens, or engaging in other kinds of community service.

The second section is Hobbies. In this section the participant must follow a hobby or a leisure interest for a period of six months and reach the prescribed standard of accomplishment in whatever activity is chosen. The participant may choose from a large number of activities, running all the way from such things as leatherworking or stamp collecting to skiing or skating, or playing a musical instrument in an organized band.

The third section is Expeditions. This activity consists of doing basic training to gain the skill and experience necessary to carry out a selected project and then doing the project. The projects vary in degree of challenge, according to the progress of the participant. For the bronze award, for example, it might be a trip of seven miles on foot or 20 miles on bicycle, all in familiar country. At the other end of the spectrum, for the gold award, it might be a journey of at least four days covering 50 miles on foot or 150 miles on a bicycle, in unfamiliar country. Equivalent distances are set if the trip is to be by horseback, canoe, skis, or by some other means.

The fourth section is Design for Living. In this section the activities are related to family and community life, as well as studies in such subjects as finance, management and labour, various levels of government, business, or some of the basic principles of general administration.

The fifth section is an optional one, Physical Fitness. This has to do with attaining set standards in athletic events chosen by the participant, such as running, jumping, swimming, throwing, and general physical agility. It also includes team games.

The activities of the program are supported by contributions from the business, banking and industrial communities, and from individuals and foundations, as well as from some of the provinces of Canada.

Perhaps I could repeat that in each case the first level of achievement is that required for the bronze award. The second level leads to the silver award, and the third and highest level is for the gold award. A good deal of help from some adult leader or adviser is necessary in the work leading up to the bronze and silver awards. Such help is needed to some extent in the gold award work, but participants aiming for this standard are expected to take a large part in planning their own program, thus demonstrating evidence of being self-disciplined, enterprising and persevering.

I should like to say, of course, that the program owes a great deal to the devoted work of hundreds of dedicated leaders. It takes a minimum of six months to qualify for the bronze award, at least an additional year for the silver award, and at least another year after the silver award to qualify for the gold.

The award itself is a small metal badge bearing Prince Philip's personal cypher, accompanied by a certificate which, at the gold stage, bears the Coat of Arms of His Royal Highness.

Presentations of the awards at all levels are arranged so as to give proper recognition to those who have qualified. They may be presented as part of the closing exercises of a school or at some special club function, or in a provincial legislative chamber, or at the residence of a Lieutenant Governor.

The gold awards are normally presented by a member of the Royal Family or His Excellency the Governor General. Prince Philip presents them himself whenever he can. Last year, for instance, he attended presentations in Halifax, Fredericton and Kingston. As I said earlier, on October 16 of this year he presented 115 gold awards in Ottawa to young people who came from eight of our provinces to receive them.

Honourable senators, I thank you for giving me your attention this evening. I hope you will agree with me that the Duke of Edinburgh's Award in Canada is indeed a most worthy plan of activities and one which helps young Canadians to develop qualities of self-reliance and leadership, and to fit themselves for useful and rewarding places in society.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, as no other senator wishes to participate in this debate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 175)

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A)

TUESDAY, November 29, 1977

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance to which the Supplementary Estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1978, were referred, has in obedience to the order of reference of Thursday, November 10, 1977, examined the said Supplementary Estimates (A) and reports as follows:

1. In obedience to the foregoing, the committee made a general examination of the Supplementary Estimates (A) and heard evidence from the Honourable Robert Andras, President of the Treasury Board; Mr. T. H. Lefebvre, Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board; Mr. A. Morin, Assistant Secretary, Program Branch, Treasury Board; and Mr. E. A. Radburn, Director, Estimates Division, Program Branch, Treasury Board.

2. These Supplementary Estimates total $1,910 million. They include non-budgetary items, that is to say loans, investments or advances totalling $241 million, of which $163 million is for statutory items the inclusion of which was instituted for the first time in the Main Estimates for 1977-78. Proposed budgetary expenditures included in these Supplementary Estimates total $1,669 million including $757 million required for statutory items. The total Estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1978, are now increased to $46,492 million.

In spite of the fact that these Supplementary Estimates are greater than the total of all Supplementary Estimates for the last fiscal year 1976-77, a measure of restraint was apparently applied to last year's actual expenditures and will be similarly applied for 1977-78. The President of the Treasury Board explained that he has continued to apply a concept introduced two years ago by his predecessor, whereby he is committed to maintaining the actual expenditures as opposed to the authorized expenditures for the fiscal year within a target ceiling. In 1976-77 the target was $42,150 million and the total actual expenditures were held to $41,078 million, which was $1,172 million below the target ceiling. At the time of the budget at the end of March last, the target for the current fiscal year was adjusted downward by $670 million from $45,120 million, the figure announced when the Main Estimates were tabled in February, to $44,450 million which, if met, will restrain the increase in total spending between 1976-77 and 1977-78 to about 8.2 percent. It was further explained that when the adjustment for inflation is made this percentage will represent close to a zero rate of growth of expenditures for 1977-78.

It will be noted that the requirements for increased transfer payments to the provinces for social programs raise these Supplementary Estimates by close to $1 billion. This increase in transfer payments results from the agreement under the Established Programs Financing Act to provide an additional cash contribution to the provinces in the event that the revenue expected to be generated by tax points given to the provinces falls below the level that was anticipated at the time of the agreement. The Minister told the committee that the need to provide for this unanticipated expenditure and at the same time keep total expenditures within his published target increased the degree of restraint applied in other areas.

The committee discussed with the minister in some detail this concept of trying to adhere to a target spending ceiling. The target figure is a reflection of the government's commitment to the principle that the growth of government expenditures should not exceed the nominal growth (that is, real growth plus inflation) of the gross national product. The target objective is, therefore, a clearly set public goal against which requests for allocation of additional funds can be weighed and priorities can be re-ordered. Application of it also takes into account the inevitable lapsing of part of the total funds which are voted annually. However, the committee was told that the amount of lapsing cannot be predicted for specific programs with sufficient precision to reduce the total sums requested in the Supplementary Estimates. The operation of this target mechanism will be monitored by the committee when future Estimates are under consideration.

3. Statutory items in these Supplementary Estimates account for $921 million. Some of the larger items are:

- (a) $468 million for the new extended Health Care Program.
- (b) Payments of $216 million for hospital insurance and $77 million for medical care to the provinces, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.
- (c) $147 million for post-secondary education payments to the provinces.
- (d) $80 million for increased servicing costs for the larger public debt which results primarily from a reduction in forecast revenues.
- (e) $60 million for payments in connection with the Western Grain Stabilization Act.
- (f) $51 million for the net cost to the federal government of an agreement with the provinces for the reciprocal payment of various taxes.

Items to be voted in these Supplementary Estimates total $990 million. The larger items are:

- (a) $125 million for increased compensation payments to refiners of imported oil due to higher than anticipated volumes of imported oil and to the drop in the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar.
- (b) $135 million to enable the financial restructuring of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.
- (c) $111 million to the Canadian International Development Agency primarily for increased food aid grants and the extension of more bilateral grants rather than loans.
- (d) $100 million for federal labour intensive projects.
- (e) $100 million for employment strategy programs such as Canada Works, Young Canada Works, Local Initiatives and student summer employment.
- (f) $72 million for bilingual education programs.
- (g) $45 million for Canadian Home Insulation Program.
- (h) $42 million for increased loans to assist in financing regional electrical interconnections under a long-term agreement with the provinces.
- (i) $35 million to the Quebec Health Insurance Plan.
- (j) $33 million for increased federal contributions to various social and educational programs for Indians and Eskimos.

4. Attached as an appendix to this report is a list of the $1 items contained in these Supplementary Estimates. The committee again expressed its concern to the President of the Treasury Board that in Category E of the explanation of $1 items, the Supplementary Estimates are being used to make policy changes. Your committee once more strongly recommends that this practice be discontinued and that, in the majority of cases, amendments to Appropriation Acts or to legislation which constitutes policy changes should be carried out through the normal procedures for the revision of statutes.

5. Throughout these Supplementary Estimates a new table entitled "Explanation of Requirement" has been included which explains the nature of the payments for which additional funds are being requested. This table has been developed to meet previous recommendations of this committee. In most instances, the explanation is clear and easily understood. The committee, however, found some explanations (such as that found on page 22) inadequate and confusing. A table of this kind should clearly indicate in words and dollars the reasons for the requested increase or transfer of monies between votes. This is particularly important when it relates to a $1 vote. The committee suggests that the presentation of information in the Explanation of Requirements tables be reviewed and refined for future Supplementary Estimates.

6. The committee sought and accepted assurances that the Treasury Board maintains sufficient control of departmental requests to ensure that there is no undue proliferation of electronic data processing equipment. The witnesses stated that the co-ordination of the use of the equipment wherever it is located is carried out by the Department of Supply and Services. Over recent years this type of equipment has increasingly become a shared resource, and when it is no longer useful in one area it may be transferred to another.

Respectfully submitted,

D. D. EVERETT,
Chairman.

(Appendix to Report)

LIST OF ONE DOLLAR VOTES

INCLUDED IN

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A), 1977-78

The 25 one dollar votes included in these Estimates are listed in Appendix I by ministry and agency along with the page number where each vote may be located in the Estimates.

These one dollar votes are grouped below into categories according to their prime purpose. The votes are also identified in Appendix I according to these categories. The category for each vote has been designated by an "X". In those instances where a vote falls into more than one category, the prime category is designated by an "X" and other categories by an asterisk.

- A. Twelve votes which authorize the transfer of funds from one vote to another. (An explanation of the new requirement and the source of funds is provided in Supplementary Estimates.)
- B. Five votes which authorize the payment of grants. (An explanation is provided in Supplementary Estimates.)
- C. Two votes which authorize the reimbursement of accounts for value of obsolete stores. (An explanation is provided in Supplementary Estimates.)
- D. Three votes which authorize investments in International Banks (Additional explanations are provided in Appendix II).
- E. Three votes which amend provisions of previous Appropriation Acts. (Additional explanations are provided in Appendix II.)

Estimates Division
Treasury Board
November 9, 1977

APPENDIX I

LIST OF $1 VOTES IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A), 1977-78

DEPARTMENT OR AGENCY	VOTE	CATEGORIES
		A	B	C	D	E
Communications	1a	*	X
Energy Mines and Resources
—Atomic Energy of Canada Limited	L51a					X
Environment	10a	X
	15a		X
External Affairs	10a	*	X
—Canadian International Development Agency	L36a				X
	L37a				X
Finance	L11a				X
Industry, Trade and Commerce	6a					X
	46a	X
National Health and Welfare	15a		X
	50a					X
	65a	X
Post Office	1a			X
Public Works	20a	X
	25a	X
	40a	X
Regional Economic Expansion	1a			X
	5a	X
Science and Technology
—National Research Council of Canada	10a	X
Solicitor General	5a	*	X
	15a	X
Transport
—National Harbours Board	95a	X
	97a	X
Veterans Affairs	20a	X

APPENDIX II—ADDITIONAL EXPLANATIONS

CATEGORY D

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

Vote L36a—To authorize the purchase of additional stock of the Asian Development Bank's 2nd replenishment.

Explanation—The Asian Development Bank, in which Canada is a member, assists developing countries in Asia through the provision of low-cost loans to finance development projects. Canada's share of the second replenishment is $259.3 million of which $25.9 million is paid in and $233.4 million is callable capital, being in addition to Canada's current equity of $243.2 million. Canada's proposed contribution is 6.3 per cent of the total, with the United States and Japan each providing 19.6 per cent of the replenishment.

Vote L37a—To authorize the purchase of additional stock of the Inter-American Development Bank's 4th capital increase.

Explanation—The Inter-American Development Bank, of which Canada has been a member since 1972, provides low-cost loans to developing countries in Latin America and the Caribbean for projects in the social and rural development sectors. Canada's equity, including the current participation of $50.5 million, is $567.8 million or 4.7 per cent, compared to a 34.6 per cent share of the United States.

FINANCE

Vote L11a—To authorize contributions to the International Development Association in the amount of $470,787,690 and to provide that these advances be payable as demand notes.

Explanation—The International Development Association is a member of the World Bank Group and provides loans to the developing countries for development purposes at highly concessional rates (0 per cent interest, 50 year term, and 10 years grace). Since its inception in 1960, Canada has provided advances totalling $631.7 million (5.89 per cent). The proposed contribution of $470.8 million to the fifth replenishment is Canada's historical share, which will be paid in the form of non-interest bearing, non-negotiable demand notes in 1977-78 and the two subsequent fiscal years, pending cash requirements of the Association.

CATEGORY E

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES—ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

Vote L51a—To authorize the conversion of debts totalling $149.1 million into equity in Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

Explanation—To convert, as of April 1, 1977, the outstanding loan principal on the Pickering Generating Station and the Douglas Point Prototype Station owing by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to the Government of Canada into equity of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, so that the earnings from these investments be retained by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited as income to finance its growing commercial and marketing activities. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited's ability to discharge these loan obligations is uncertain, since the repayments from both Pickering and Douglas Point are linked to operating performance at these plants.

INDUSTRY, TRADE AND COMMERCE

Vote 6a—To authorize an additional guarantee of $20,000,000 in Bank Loans to Canadair Limited.

Explanation—An additional guarantee of $20,000,000 in bank loans to Canadair Limited is required to finance the production of the Challenger aircraft since no agreement has been reached with the Quebec Industrial Development Corporation to provide this guarantee. Under the original agreement this guarantee was to have been provided by the Corporation.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Vote 50a—To amend the existing authority so as to recognize the jurisdictional changes which exist with respect to young offenders in Ontario and Quebec.

Explanation—The present authority covers payments to the provinces, in accordance with agreements, where young offenders are under the jurisdiction of correctional authorities rather than Child Welfare Authorities. The proposed amendment extends the authority to cover a situation in Ontario and Quebec where young offenders are under the authority of the Child Welfare Authorities but not subject to an appropriate provincial secretary's order.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 30, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Auditor General's report to the Solicitor General on the examination of the accounts and financial statement of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (Dependants) Pension Fund for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 55(4) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension Continuation Act, Chapter R-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Report of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, regarding the reference on Beatrice Foods Company Limited, Kingston, Ontario and proposed price increase, dated November 24, 1977.

Report of the Postmaster General respecting Olympic coins for the period ending September 30, 1977, pursuant to sections 13(2) and 13(3) of the Olympic (1976) Act, Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada, 1973-74.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Senator Macdonald, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Grosart be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Haig on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

Motion agreed to.

RETIREMENT AGE POLICIES

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Croll, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bourget, P.C.:

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and report upon

(a) the existing retirement age policies affecting workers in both the public and private sectors;

(b) the social and economic implications of mandatory retirement based on age alone;

(c) the feasibility of enabling workers, especially elderly citizens, to continue to make a worthwhile contribution to our society through flexible voluntary retirement plans to the extent of their ability and motivation;

(d) the protection for those over sixty-five against age discrimination in all employment areas; and

(e) the need for the maximum co-operation of all levels of government, labour unions, business and the public in respect of existing and future retirement age policies and retirement plans;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry; and

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place.—(Honourable Senator Petten).

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, I yield to the Honourable Senator Côtteau.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Ernest G. Côtteau: Honourable senators, I should like at this time to add my support to the motion calling for the appointment of a special committee of the Senate to examine and report upon the various aspects of the existing retirement age policies affecting workers in both the public and private sectors.

I am prompted to enter this debate, albeit very briefly, not because I have new ideas to bring forth—indeed, the contributions made so far by the sponsor of the motion, Senator Croll, and the subsequent speakers have already well covered the subject—but because I do believe that the existing retirement policies need to be examined for possible revision, and I can think of no institution better equipped to do so than the Senate of Canada.

Shortly after my appointment to this chamber, but even before I had even set foot in it, I received a copy of the report of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty in Canada with an accompanying note from Senator Croll which read as follows:

I can think of no better way to welcome you to Parliament than by sending you a copy of Poverty in Canada which you will find worthy of your attention.

It was while perusing this report that I was first made aware of the tremendous amount of work being done by the Senate and of the high quality and calibre of its work. My experience since that time has served to fully confirm my initial impressions of the Senate.

The information that I have been able to glean from the records leads me to believe that the sponsor of the motion has devoted his entire political career toward enhancing the lot of the less fortunate in each of the causes for which he has stood. I feel certain that if this motion is adopted, Senator Croll will give the special committee the benefit of his experience in attacking the problems which confront many of our citizens who, despite good physical and mental health, are cast aside by society and put out to pasture simply because they have reached the magic age of 65.

Honourable senators, I am aware that for many people the compulsory retirement age of 65 is a godsend. I say this because, according to statistics provided by the latest census, which I believe to be reliable, some 1.7 million Canadians are 65 years of age and over, and of that number three-quarters are suffering from chronic diseases. It therefore goes without saying that for many, retirement at 65 is not a bit too soon. As a matter of fact, it is often quite a bit too late.

I am proud, as a Canadian, to know that there exists in Canada programs designed to alleviate the suffering of those people and to enable them to spend their final years in some measure of comfort.

I cannot say, however, that I am equally proud of the effect that compulsory retirement may have on many people who at the age of 65 would ask for nothing better than to remain in the work force and continue to serve society by giving it the benefit of their knowledge and expertise.

The term "old age" cannot be fairly and justly determined by the advent of one's birthday. As a matter of fact, there is an old saying that you are only as old as you feel. That saying, in my opinion, contains more truth than poetry.

Forced retirement in many cases is a source of hardship both for the person involved and for the organization to which he or she belongs. At the risk of being repetitious, I would mention that during the course of my experience as a school administrator I was often afforded the opportunity of witnessing the disruption caused in a school system by the forced retirement of experienced and valuable teachers. Not only did the entire system suffer irreparable loss, but very often the persons concerned were themselves adversely affected in that they lost their sense of usefulness. I always considered that to be most tragic and unnecessary.

The result of present legislation governing the retirement of citizens is that in the context of modern society, in all fields of endeavour, people in their sixties are made to feel misplaced and unwanted.

I shall not pursue the subject further because after reading the various speeches made thus far, particularly the one by Senator Croll, I find there is nothing new that I can add. I therefore close by saying that I should like to see this special

[Senator Croteau.]

Senate committee appointed and explore the possibility of revising present policies concerning mandatory retirement age. Hopefully the committee will arrive at a formula whereby those citizens for whom compulsory retirement constitutes a hardship may be allowed to remain productive so long as their contribution to the work force is deemed to be valuable.

● (1410)

Hon. J. J. Greene: Honourable senators, I wish to add a few words to this debate. I have nothing much in the way of content to add to what has been said, but I would be remiss and a little less honest with the Senate and with myself than I should be if I did not stand up to be counted as a supporter of the Honourable Senator Croll in this worthy cause, which is like so many others that he has espoused.

Senator Croll has always been one of my great heroes. One of the major reasons I entered public life in the first place was because there are people like Senator Croll—

Senator Flynn: Take a bow, Senator Croll.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Greene: I do not mean that that makes him responsible for any of the sins I have committed during my time in public life. I think it was Joseph Howe—and you Atlantic provincers will be able to correct me if I am wrong—who once said, in a speech which I believe was made at a college in the United States, that we must honour our heroes and refurbish our monuments if we are to have a strong national unity. For many of us, I think, Senator Croll has been one of our long-standing heroes. He was a "small l" liberal when it took guts and foresight to be a "small l" liberal. Now everyone is a "small l" liberal. Whether they call themselves Socialists or Tories, they are all "small l" liberals because that is now popular. But when Senator Croll marched as a provincial cabinet minister with the trade union workers from Toronto to Oshawa in the 1930s, it was not very popular to be a "small l" liberal; in fact, it was so unpopular that in his case, as I recall, he was turfed out of the provincial cabinet for his efforts.

Senator Walker: He became an "SOL" liberal.

Senator Greene: I can think of no Canadian parallel, except the late Senator Roebuck, who was also that kind of liberal. In the United States Clarence Darrow and Hubert Humphrey were that sort of liberal. They were for causes that were right and just, such as the abolition of capital punishment and the support of the trade unions, when that kind of support made people far less than popular.

Senator Croll has always been for causes he deemed to be in the best interests of those who had no power, no strength, no great ability to help themselves, even though their causes were just. His present proposal is in the same vein. The older people who will be helped by this motion have no powerful or wealthy organizations to speak for them, but they have Senator Croll to speak for them, and that is much better than the most powerful organization they could possibly put together.

I do not think that on the other side of Parliament this would be a cause that would swing a myriad of votes to one party or the other, because the group Senator Croll speaks for is not sufficiently strong or well organized or unified for this cause to be a great political triumph for anyone who achieves it. It is a right and just cause for which no powerful national organization is speaking, or getting television time, or doing all the other things which power groups are able to do.

It seems to me that not only is it in character with Senator Croll and the many contributions he has made in the past, but it is in keeping with the function of the Senate. We are here to represent regional interests and that is among our primary work. We are here to revise and improve legislation in our committees, and in the last few months we have proved our ability to do this. I think we are also here to speak for those who have a just cause, in whatever part of the country they may be, a cause which may have no great political moment and which may not be able to swing a great number of votes one way or the other, but a cause of those who have no great and powerful organizations to speak for them.

I think the Senate can do a great job in fulfilling what Laurier so aptly called "social justice"—that social justice, as he put it, may be achieved for a greater number of people in a shorter span of time. Laurier spoke of that in the context as the function of the Liberal Party. Apart from any partisan or party philosophy in this region, I think it can quite properly be the function of the Senate. The very fact that we do not have to appeal to what is popular today or tomorrow, and the fact that we are appointed and have continuity of tenure, gives us the opportunity to support just causes which will advance the wellbeing of our older citizens, even though they may not be subjects that the media, as they are euphemistically called today, are screaming for. I have seen no great outcry in the press or the media for this sort of suggestion.

However, from Senator Croll's speech and all the other speeches that have been made, I have certainly been persuaded that this is a just and worthy cause, even though it is not something that is of immediate, tremendous, popular moment or something that all the wolves of the media are howling for at our doorstep. I think the Senate again should be the repository of those who are ready to fight for just causes even though they are not immediately popular or appear to be of immediate great moment. For these humble reasons, honourable senators, I should like to be among those who stand to be counted in support of Senator Croll's motion. This study will be one more in the already considerable list of decorations he has earned in the name of human progress in our country.

On motion of Senator Buckwold, debate adjourned.

NORTH ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY

TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL SESSION, PARIS, FRANCE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator McDonald calling the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-third Annual Session of the North Atlantic Assembly, held in Paris, France, from 18th to 24th September, 1977, and in particular to the discussions and proceedings of the Session and the participation therein of the delegation from Canada.—(Honourable Senator Austin).

Senator Austin: Stand until December 8.

Order stands.

● (1420)

SCIENCE POLICY

VOLUME 4 OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Lamontagne, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy, appointed in the last session of Parliament and authorized in that session to consider and report on Canadian government and other expenditures on scientific activities and matters related thereto, entitled: A Science Policy for Canada, Volume 4, Progress and Unfinished Business, tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, 25th October 1977,—(Honourable Senator McDonald).

Hon. Paul Desruisseaux: Honourable senators, with leave, I should like to say a few words about Volume 4 of the report of the Science Policy Committee, entitled "A Science Policy for Canada: Progress and Unfinished Business," tabled on Tuesday, October 25, by the chairman, Senator Maurice Lamontagne.

I congratulate Senator Lamontagne and the members of his excellent committee for their valuable and constructive work, and for the rationale of the recommendations that have been made by them since 1970. Some of the recommendations proved to be unacceptable to some and were claimed to be highly controversial. Nevertheless, I believe they will generally provide excellent guidelines for our science policy. I am of the opinion that they will soon have to be appraised against new and far-reaching scientific findings that will affect Canadian society and which are bound to change many of our present concepts on science policy. I believe Senator Lamontagne and the members of his committee have been right in their assessments, and that we can proudly endorse their reports. We realize how eminently useful to Canada most of their recommendations have been, and will be.

With Senator Lamontagne, I regret that this last report marks the cessation of the work of the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy. Personally, I hope this committee will somehow be revived, and will hereafter be one of the permanent standing Senate committees. I can foresee many important basic and urgent scientific researches that have to be given some priority, and that could or should be considered by such a committee.

Mr. Drury, then Minister of State for Science and Technology, expressed the appreciation of Parliament for the work of this Senate committee, and Senator Lamontagne cited his remarks when he spoke here recently. I hope I am permitted to underline some of these remarks. The minister said:

I think it is fair to say that no other investigation of Science Policy anywhere in the world has equalled that carried out by your committee. Your report has constituted a significant background to all discussions of science policy matters, and its influence will continue to be felt not only in Canada, but, I suspect, also internationally.

We have since received rewarding accounts of the committee's influence from all over the world. I want to express to the chairman and the members of this fine committee our gratitude, and our appreciation for the help they provide to government departments, to business, to research and to technology. Senator Lamontagne and the members of his committee have made Canada well aware that its efforts in the way of research and development were inadequate from the outset.

I believe it right that the committee's reports should constructively criticize the unique pattern Canada had adopted because it "lacked realism," and because Canadian efforts were concentrated "in government laboratories cut off from the real world," which somehow "paralyzed innovation."

It was this committee which made Canada realize that since 1970 more reliable scientific and technological statistics on Canadian scientific efforts were needed. It was this committee that alerted us to the necessity for "a body for the care of formulation and evaluation of a scientific policy", which up until then had been diversified and quite inconsistent.

The foundation in 1970 of the association of the scientific, engineering and technical community of Canada, the establishment of a ministry of state in charge of science and technology, the adoption of a new policy of assignment of intramural research and development programs, and the implementation of many other major programs, can indeed be affirmed to have been direct results of the committee's recommendations.

The efforts made by the committee in respect of some of its recommendations have been frustrated, and there was disappointment because they were rejected or set aside. These recommendations, however, will again soon indicate the priorities and point the way for Canadian science policy to go. The checking out of the implementation of its recommendations by the departments has, I believe, put the officials of some of those departments on the spot.

What is the cause "of the stagnation and the lack of mobility of researchers that are creating an imminent crisis in the university and government sectors and that is seriously threatening our national research capacity?" The reports of the Science Policy Committee have touched on this. One of these days the pertinent recommendations now set aside will be revived and reviewed. The data will then reveal that we were in error when we believed that government laboratories could do it all by themselves and so dominate the scientific field, not considering "changes in departmental and agency R & D budgets that seem to be adjudged by 'wrong priorities.'"

[Senator Desruisseaux.]

● (1430)

When he introduced this inquiry, Senator Lamontagne pointed out that there is a technological gap that has been widening since 1970 in spite of his committee's specific recommendations that could have helped to at least partly fill that gap. He said:

This weakness is particularly evident in the manufacturing sector and it constitutes an important factor accounting for the dramatic rise in our trade deficit in end products from $3.6 billion in 1971 to $10.2 billion in 1976.

This persistent weakness of the industrial sector in terms of research and development effort is described in chapter 3 of the report. The government, nevertheless, implemented corrective measures that had been inspired by earlier recommendations of the Senate Science Policy Committee.

There was a lapse of five years between the recommendation of the Science Policy Committee and the approval by Parliament of the creation of two new granting councils—one for the physical sciences and engineering, and one for the social sciences and humanities. The credit for their creation is due to this committee, as is the creation of many industries by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The committee can also take credit for quite a number of other recommendations that have been implemented.

In his speech Senator Lamontagne mentioned some 15 specific recommendations which remain as unfinished business. These are described in Volume 4, "A Science Policy for Canada: Progress and Unfinished Business," tabled on October 25 last, which underlines the excellent work that has consistently been done by the Science Policy Committee. It points out the usefulness of the committee, and more than justifies any expenses it had to incur. I believe the Senate should accept the recommendations that are contained in Volume 4 of the committee's report.

Senator Lamontagne and the members of this committee are to be congratulated for the excellence of their work, the constructiveness of their reports, and their foresight in inviting a continuance of the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy.

Personally, I strongly support a renewal of the mandate of the Science Policy Committee because of the brilliant way in which it carried out its first mandate, and because it is really needed now to appraise what has been done in respect of its past recommendations and to make further recommendations about the new priorities touching on recent sensational scientific findings—findings which will affect the lives of all Canadians now and in the future and which will have far-reaching consequences.

Honourable senators, we need the leadership of our Special Committee on Science Policy.

On motion of Senator Bell, debate adjourned.

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

SIXTY-FOURTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE, SOFIA, BULGARIA—
DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. William J. Petten rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, November 24, 1977:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Sixty-fourth Annual Conference of the Inter-Parliamentary Union held at Sofia, Bulgaria, from 20th to 30th September, 1977, and in particular to the discussions and proceedings of the Conference and the participation therein of the delegation from Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, I rise today to call the attention of the Senate to the Sixty-fourth Annual Conference of the Inter-Parliamentary Union held in Sofia, Bulgaria, from September 20 to September 30, 1977. I was honoured to be a delegate to that conference.

The Canadian delegation was composed of three members of the Senate, the Honourable Senator Belisle, the Honourable Senator Olson and myself, and ten members of the House of Commons representing three of the parties in that house. Mr. Lloyd Francis, M.P., was the leader of the Canadian delegation and chairman of the Canadian group. He did a splendid job for Parliament and for Canada.

The members of the staff of the Parliamentary Relations Secretariat who were involved in the conference did an excellent job. A great deal of material was prepared for us in advance, and the arrangements for our delegation from the time we left Canada were smooth and efficient. I would like to express my own personal thanks for their advance arrangements and the assistance given to all of us throughout the conference.

We are also most grateful to Ambassador MacLellan and his staff for their assistance during our stay in Bulgaria.

The Bulgarian group who organized the conference must be congratulated. Everything possible was done to make our stay in their country interesting and enjoyable, and to assist our delegates in the work of the conference. We greatly appreciate their generous hospitality.

Our delegates participated actively in the work of the conference and I was proud to be associated with them.

The Sixty-fourth Inter-Parliamentary Conference was opened by Mr. Todor Zhivkov, President of the Council of State of the People's Republic of Bulgaria, in the Universiada Hall at 11 a.m. on September 21. Approximately 1,000 participants attended, including 470 parliamentarians from 68 countries.

The President of the Bulgarian Inter-Parliamentary Group, Mr. Milko Tarabanov, welcomed the participants. The Union's Secretary General then read a message from Dr. Kurt Waldheim, Secretary General of the United Nations, which was followed by an address by the President of the Inter-Parliamentary Council, Sir Thomas Williams. In declaring the conference open, Mr. Zhivkov said he was confident that it would assist in the further consolidation of world peace and security and the development of equitable and mutually-advantageous co-operation among all nations and peoples.

The first two days of the conference were devoted to a general debate on the subjects of the Political, Economic and Social Situation of the World, the Activities of the Union, the Role of Parliaments in Furthering Relaxation of International Tensions, and Progress in the Field of Disarmament, including Nuclear Weapons and New Weapons of Mass Destruction. Approximately 75 spokesmen participated in this debate.

Mr. Charles Lapointe, a member of our delegation elected by his colleagues during the last spring meetings to be their rapporteur on disarmament questions, presented the report on behalf of the Committee on Political Questions, International Security and Disarmament. He highlighted the committee's work in Canberra, and described the main aspects of the draft resolution on this agenda item.

This afternoon I am going to confine my remarks primarily to the Law of the Sea aspect of the conference.

The plenary debate on the Law of the Sea attracted approximately 30 spokesmen. Mr. Hugh Anderson, M.P. for Comox-Alberni, discussed the question of the Law of the Sea, especially the problems of coastal states' rights and marine pollution. He noted the progress made at the meetings of the Third United Nations Law of the Sea Conference, but commented that this progress was desperately needed since mankind was in danger of turning the oceans into a sterile dead sea. I would like to take a few minutes now to outline Canada's position on the Law of the Sea Conference.

Canadian policy at the Law of the Sea Conference directly reflects its position as a major coastal state with a broad submerged continental shelf, highly vulnerable coastal areas, and a fishing industry threatened by declining fish stocks. Canadian environmental concerns, in particular with respect to the Arctic, have been manifested by the adoption of national laws specifically developed to protect the coastal environment from pollution from vessels and offshore oil drilling.

As a major trading nation, Canada recognized the need to ensure the continued smooth flow of world shipping. The position advanced at the conference with respect to coastal state powers, including Canada's position with respect to innocent passage through the territorial sea and with respect to straits, embodies a balancing of the dual objectives of freedom of shipping with the protection of the interests and concerns of the coastal state.

As a state dependent upon its fishing industry in its coastal regions, Canada has obvious interests in ensuring that legal rules are developed at the Law of the Sea Conference which will ensure that fish stocks are adequately safeguarded. Thus Canada was one of the initiators of the concept of the exclusive economic zone, giving 200-mile jurisdiction to coastal states in regulating the exploitation of the living resources of the sea off their coasts. The concept of the exclusive economic zone reflects a consensus among the nations of the world, now embodied in the Informal Composite Negotiating Text, that broad coastal state jurisdiction is necessary to insure against unregulated and unrestricted exploitation of the oceans' resources. Canada's new 200-mile fishing zone, which came into effect on January 1, 1977 on the east and west coasts, and on March 1, 1977 in the Arctic, is consistent with this emerging concept in international law.

Similar considerations apply with respect to the right of the coastal state, already codified in international law, to regulate exploitation activity on its continental shelf. In this regard, Canada, with an extensive continental shelf, particularly off the east coast, adheres to the view that, as the natural prolongation of the continental land mass, the continental shelf is an integral part of the coastal state's territory, and that sovereign rights with respect to exploration and exploitation flow naturally from this basic geological fact.

● (1440)

In Canada's view, the old norms regarding freedom of the seas require reformulation in light of newly-acquired technology permitting the exploitation of the mineral resources of the deep-sea bed. As a land-based producer of nickel—and nickel will be the major mineral obtained from the manganese nodules found on the deep-sea bed—Canada wishes to ensure that sea bed exploitation does not seriously harm traditional land-based nickel markets. On the other hand, Canada is cognizant of the importance of assuring that capital investment to sustain such activity is available, and thus supports access to the international sea bed area being granted to private corporations, either alone or through some sort of joint venture approach with the international sea bed authority.

Significant progress has been made on most of the key issues at the Law of the Sea Conference, including an emerging consensus on a 12-mile territorial sea and a 200-mile economic zone within which a coastal state asserts sovereign rights over living and non-living resources and exercises jurisdiction in respect of the protection of the marine environment and the conduct of marine scientific research. But a further determined effort is required to resolve some remaining areas of difficulty, primarily in respect of the detailed application of an international system for the exploitation of deep-sea bed minerals. It is hardly surprising that we have heard some expressions of impatience with the lengthy and sometimes frustrating negotiating process. But given the size of the conference and the magnitude of its task, the achievements to date have been impressive. There is no doubt that the negotiating process has already made a significant contribution to the development of a new international order of the oceans. On this basis, it would seem difficult to conceive that states would not be willing to continue to press toward a successful conclusion of the conference, even if it requires two more substantive sessions to do so.

Failure to see the conference through to a successful conclusion after it has accomplished so much would be a severe setback to international law and a body blow to the United Nations. Without agreement on a new convention, the functional and pragmatic approach aiming toward a new and balanced order of the oceans would in all likelihood give way to a more absolutist approach involving extensive claims of full sovereignty by coastal states and unregulated exploitation of deep-sea bed resources.

The outcome of the conference could have a decisive influence on peace and security in the world. Use of the oceans, if regulated by international legal norms, could become a seriously divisive fact in international relations. If the conference were to fail, conflicts over deep-sea bed resource rights, fishing rights, environmental jurisdiction, conflicting maritime boundary claims, and rights of passage in straits could proliferate with all the attendant risks for world peace. Canada, of course, believes that international disputes should be minimized through the development of rules of international behaviour based on law.

The conference has a mandate to codify and develop new international law to meet changing circumstances and modern use of the world's oceans. The conference is now within reach of these important goals. Our children and grandchildren will find it difficult to forgive us if we fail to persevere to a positive outcome. Canada, for its part, remains firmly committed to a successful outcome of the conference and the development of a new international order of the oceans to replace old and outmoded concepts. We will continue to play our full part in negotiations at the conference to that end.

Mr. Anderson, in his remarks, called for further efforts to achieve acceptance of these powers for coastal states, and noted, partly for this reason, that the Canadian delegation to the IPU conference had proposed amendments to the draft resolution before the Conference on the Law of the Sea.

In addition to Canada's amendments, others were presented by the delegations from Brazil, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, India, Rumania, Spain, the United States and the U.S.S.R. The Turkish delegation submitted a sub-amendment to the amendments of the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R. These amendments and sub-amendments were submitted to a drafting committee consisting of representatives from Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Iceland, India, Rumania, Switzerland, Turkey and the U.S.S.R. Mr. Anderson, supported by myself, represented Canada on this drafting committee, which held discussions lasting for seven hours in considering 40 amendments. Mr. Anderson argued forcefully for Canadian interests, ensuring that Canadian views on coastal zones, maritime pollution, inspection of shipping, et cetera, were properly represented in the final draft.

Conferences such as this have, to my mind, many spin-offs. When you assemble delegates from 70 countries with a variety of political views and ideologies, including those of the Eastern Bloc nations, some very interesting and provocative debate in plenary sessions and committees is produced. But when delegates get together for discussions in small informal groups, and there is an opportunity for them to get to know one another, not as Canadians, not as Australians nor Bulgarians, not as rightists or leftists, or whatever, but as fellow human beings, then tolerance and understanding replace emotion. We then find that despite our ideological differences, we share many of the same hopes and aspirations.

It is through conferences of this sort, and the opportunity to get to know and understand people from other parts of the world, that we facilitate greater understanding and closer co-operation in the fields of human relations, human rights, world peace and progress.

On motion of Senator Bélisle, debate adjourned.

ST. ANDREW'S DAY

TRIBUTE TO THE SCOTTISH PEOPLE

Senator Macdonald: Honourable senators, I take this opportunity, before the motion to adjourn is put, to draw the attention of the house to the fact that today is of significance to a great many people, in that it is the feast of St. Andrew, the patron saint of Scotland. It is a day dear to the hearts of all Scots, and serves as an occasion whereby those of Scottish descent and others of lesser breed call to mind the great contribution that the sons and daughters of old Scotland and of new Scotland, and all other Scots, made to the building of the great Canadian nation.

Senator Petten: Particularly those of new Scotland, senator.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, December 1, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report on Proceedings under the Canada Labour Code Part V (Industrial Relations) for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 170 of the said Code, Chapter L-1, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the former Department of Manpower and Immigration for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 14 of the Government Organization Act, 1966, Chapter 25, Statutes of Canada, 1966-67.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, December 6, 1977, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Before the question is put, I should like to give the usual brief summary of the work for the coming week. Of course, the picture could change by the time we return on Tuesday.

On Tuesday evening Senator Buckwold will resume the debate on the motion of Senator Croll for the appointment of a special committee of the Senate to examine and report upon existing retirement age policies affecting workers in both the public and private sectors.

On Wednesday Senator Bélisle will resume the debate on Senator Petten's inquiry calling the attention of the Senate to the Sixty-fourth Annual Conference of the Inter-Parliamentary Union held at Sofia, Bulgaria, in September last.

On Thursday Senator Austin will speak in the debate on Senator McDonald's inquiry with respect to the Twenty-third Annual Session of the North Atlantic Assembly, held in Paris, France, in September.

I have been informed that Senator Hayden expects to be in a position to table some time next week the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the budget resolutions with respect to income tax.

In addition, we should have another bill for introduction in the Senate, probably on Tuesday evening.

Committee meetings already set down for next week are as follows: the subcommittee of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, appointed to examine the question of prenatal and childhood experiences which may cause personality disorders or criminal behaviour in later life, will meet at 4 p.m. on Tuesday. The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will meet on Wednesday at 9.30 a.m. to continue its examination of Bill S-2, to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act.

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications will meet on Thursday at 9.30 a.m. to hear further witnesses on Bill C-3, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada, and at 10 a.m. the subcommittee of Health, Welfare and Science will hold another meeting to continue its study on prenatal and childhood experiences leading to personality disorders or criminal behaviour in later life. There will, of course, be additional committee meetings next week, but the times and dates have not as yet been fixed.

● (1410)

Senator Choquette: All interesting items. I can hardly wait.
Motion agreed to.

SCIENCE POLICY

VOLUME 4 OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, November 23, the debate on the inquiry of Senator Lamontagne, calling the attention of the Senate to the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy, appointed in the last session of Parliament and authorized in that session to consider and report on Canadian government and other expenditures on scientific activities and matters related thereto, entitled: A Science Policy for Canada, Volume 4, Progress and Unfinished Business, tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, October 25, 1977.

Hon. Ann Elizabeth Bell: Honourable senators, I should like to extend my congratulations to the Chairman of the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy, and to commend him for the committee's report. It was a privilege to serve on his committee.

Volume 4 is, mercifully, jargon-free, and I commend it to all my colleagues in the Senate. One of the things that this report does not bring out is that some of the most interesting witnesses were heard during an adjournment of the Senate in the summer of 1976. Incidentally, had I known that the committee was going to be asked to meet in August and September I might have declined the invitation to join the committee. However, the experience was well worthwhile. I would point out that some of the best briefs were the briefest ones, while some of the longest contained obtuse and obfuscating replies to our questionnaire. I don't know whether there is something to be learned from that; I am only giving my analysis of the situation.

There was a necessity to follow up Volumes 1, 2 and 3 of the Science Committee's report, and this was clearly demonstrated as the hearings proceeded. The basic weakness in Canada's industrial endeavour was uncovered by the work done to produce Volume 4, and I think you will all agree that this weakness is permeating our whole economic situation. It is certainly a matter of concern to our science community.

On page 29 of the report you will find a discussion on medical research activity, which we discovered to be dangerously low, as is the case with university research activity.

On page 36 you will find the suggestion that the situation in government laboratories is not good, as one would expect when one looks at the balance of money expended on government research as apposed to industrial research. There seems to be a tendency, because of our austerity and restraint programs, to be penny-wise and pound-foolish. The report, however, has constructive suggestions to offer, and I think you will find that the title, "Progress and Unfinished Business," is very apt indeed. A lot of progress has been made, so we should not be discouraged, and we should certainly be grateful to Senator Lamontagne for providing an answer to the question, "Where do we go next from where we have reached?"

The major defect apparent in our current situation, that is, the industrial gap and our weak performance, seems to arise from the whole economic climate of the country.

The report points out that the economic climate of the country is beyond our frame of reference. Nevertheless, one could not push it aside when evaluating the responses of the witnesses. Each organization, whether it was a professional association, a university, or an industry, stressed the need for stability.

One conclusion that I found quite interesting was that we have always been very backward as risk-takers, and, of course, if we are going to be innovators we have to be risk-takers. If I might just read to you the very first sentence of Chapter 1 of the report:

Throughout the years in Canada, the stated science policy objectives of the government have not been those it implemented.

That really tells it all.

Chapter 1 goes on to point out that way back in 1916 when the order in council set up what was to become the National Research Council, it asked it as its main function "to select the most practical and pressing problems indicated by industrial necessities . . . for earliest possible solution".

Then in 1967 we find Mr. Drury, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, saying:

Our first obligation, therefore, is to ensure that technical innovation activity in our industry is brought to a competitive level in the shortest possible time.

Then, coming to 1977, ten years later, we find the Minister of State for Science and Technology, the Honourable Hugh Faulkner, saying in the House of Commons:

The government is aware that Canada's national research effort is less than half that of other industrialized nations, and that the distribution of effort among the three performing sectors is the inverse of most other western nations, where typically industry performs 60 per cent of the national research effort—

One is tempted to say: "Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose". I do not mean to rub it in, but we do seem to be holed up as far as being risk-takers or imaginative in some areas of our development.

Long, long ago, perhaps sometime around 1920, Dr. Henry Marshall Tory, the great scientist who helped found four of our Canadian universities and spent a lifetime trying to get Canada launched as a scientific nation, saw the need to develop the latent genius of our people. In his report in 1926 covering the years of National Research Council from 1916 to 1926, he recalled the experience learned in Europe just prior to the outbreak of World War I. He said:

Under the stresses of the war the call went out throughout the British Empire to highly qualified research men and it was then discovered that there were more trained scientists in a few of the great German industries than were to be found in the whole of the British Empire.

In his book entitled Politics in Paradise, Dr. Patrick I. McGeer, who is Minister of Education in British Columbia, comments on that statement of Dr. Tory, as follows:

That realization gave him the determination to awaken an unbelievably reluctant nation to the priority of scientific research and technological development.

But when, due to Tory's efforts, a proposal to create a National Research Institute that would help Canada catch up to other nations was put forward in 1921, the Senate killed the bill. One Senator said: 'Now, Honourable Gentleman, there was just one value in the former research institution in Canda and that was the salary paid to the chief. That was all there was in it for anybody. It is absolute nonsense.'

I hope that the work done by the Special Senate Committee on Science Policy has somewhat expiated that earlier sin.

One of our difficulties seems to be that we have always had affluence without the need to innovate. We felt that we could import our technology, and when you discuss this with people who are interested in the development of our technology you find that this feeling is still prevalent. As Volume 4 clearly points out, if we import our technology we can only respond to the needs of industry as far as it is developing within our country. It is the domestic markets that are protected. When we do try to exploit imported technological innovations, we are too late in the production scheme to get into the competitive market. There is too much of a time lag. We can't depend any longer on importing our technology. This really makes you wonder if we are progressing. I am sure we are, but as Dr. Tory said:

● (1420)

A government department of Science, Industry and Commerce could be made to mean more to industry in a few years than all the petty tariff changes about which there is so much agitation.

He said this more than 45 years ago. At least we have probably made him happy in that we have now a Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, with some very good suggestions for it in volume 4, and a Ministry of State for Science and Technology.

One of the sad things we see when we look at research and development is the lack of development of our people's skills. This is certainly a field that we have to develop and capitalize on. There are unique opportunities in this country that give us a competitive edge. Work is being done in respect of the tar sands, and this is something that is going to be desperately needed in other areas. We should develop that technology. We are the right people to develop it. I suppose that if we think that research is not the garnish on the salad but the yeast in the loaf, we will get industry and government working together.

I cannot add much to the comments made by Senator Godfrey and Senator Desruisseaux. They covered different areas of the report, and they did so very capably. But I should like to stress the necessity for having a stable economic climate. We must have certain assurances for long-term planning. There must be stability in our funding for universities and laboratories. Research can't be turned on and off as one would turn a tap on and off. There has to be stability in order to have long-term funding for development projects. Above all, we must have stability in our government departments. The Ministry of State for Science and Technology and the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Commerce are the two ministries of government most responsible for technological development in Canada. Now, I have not counted them but I think these two ministries have had eight ministers in the last five years. There can be no stability, no continuity, when such a situation as that prevails.

In closing, honourable senators, I would recommend to other committees that have presented valuable reports to the Senate—and we can all think of many—that they do as the Science Policy Committee has done and follow up on their recommendations to see if they have been implemented, or whether any of them should be altered in view of changed conditions. This follow-up procedure would be of value not only to the Senate but to the country as a whole.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, for Senator Grosart, debate adjourned.

[Senator Bell.]

THE ESTIMATES

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A)—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, presented on Tuesday, November 29, 1977, on supplementary estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1978.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, I presented the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on supplementary estimates (A) last Tuesday night. The report was printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of that day, and it is available for senators to read. The report is concise and I do not think I should bore you with its details. Suffice it to say that the supplementary estimates total $1.910 billion, bringing the total estimated spending for 1977-78 to $46.492 billion. That, indeed, is a lot of money, but what I want to talk about for a moment is the restraint that has been shown in expenditures by the federal government despite the enormous size of the estimates for this year.

The federal government recently did something that the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has been asking for some considerable length of time; that is, they established a target, and their target was that they would limit the percentage growth in actual expenditures so that it did not exceed the percentage growth of the nominal GNP. The government used actual spending rather than the spending which appears in the estimates, because actual spending is what affects our economy. It is the approved estimates less lapses in spending, which occur inevitably, and the revisions of programs during the year. Using actual expenditures has given the government a benchmark against which it can order its spending priorities.

How is the government doing on this whole program? In 1976-77 the target for actual expenditures proposed by the government was $42.150 billion; their actual expenditures were $41.078 billion. The target for 1977-78 is $44.450 billion. This is an increase of 5.5 per cent over last year's target and 8.2 per cent over last year's actual spending, which was less than last year's target.

● (1430)

That 8.2 per cent increase over last year's spending represents zero growth in government expenditures when it is adjusted for inflation. So one looking at the figures, no matter how prejudiced he or she may be, would have to say that the government is doing extremely well. But that is not all; the President of the Treasury Board says that his target is in sight, despite the fact there has been an increase in this year and in these supplementary estimates in transfer payments to provinces under the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act. Those transfers are $468 million for the new extended health care plan and a payment of $440 million for the reduction in the value of the tax points that were ceded to the provinces due to the reduction in federal government revenues. In addition, $164 million has been paid in oil compensation and oil deficiency payments. Now, $200 million in these supplementary estimates is for direct government employment programs as a result of the high unemployment rate, bringing the total of government employment programs in this year to $608 million. Future supplementary estimates, of which we are sure to have at least one, will be in addition to these amounts.

I for one have been extremely critical in the past of the growth in government expenditures. I believe it has bothered almost every thinking Canadian, but this government has undertaken to stop that growth and to bring it in line with the growth in the economy itself. For two years now the government has been successful in doing that and in achieving its target. The outlook for next year is even better. So as one of those who have been critical of the government, I wish to congratulate the government and the President of the Treasury Board.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, for Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, December 6, at 8 p.m.

---

THE SENATE

Tuesday, December 6, 1977

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Auditor General to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 7(3) of the Auditor General Act, Chapter 34, Statutes of Canada, 1976-77, together with a Conspectus of the said Report.

Report of the Department of Public Works for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 34 of the Public Works Act, Chapter P-38, R.S.C., 1970.

Copy of a Judgment by Chief Justice Evans of the Supreme Court of Ontario, in the matter of an Application for Judicial Review between Messrs. Joe Clark, Sinclair Stevens, Bill Kempling, Walter Baker, Jim Gillies and Ron Huntington, Applicants and the Attorney General of Canada, Respondent. (English Text).

SAFE CONTAINERS CONVENTION BILL

FIRST READING

Senator Perrault presented Bill S-4, to implement the International Convention for Safe Containers.

Bill read first time.

Senator Perrault moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit while the Senate is sitting tomorrow, Wednesday, December 7, 1977, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

RULES OF THE SENATE

ORAL AND WRITTEN QUESTIONS

Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): Honourable senators, I trust I am not out of order, and that this is an appropriate point at which to make these remarks.

I learned today that in future all notices of inquiries are to be written and given to the Clerk, and to that I have no objection. However, I do want to bring to the attention of honourable senators the fact that on August 2 last, some five months ago, I gave notice that I would inquire of the government certain facts related to the CNR, and I have not yet received an answer.

I do not blame the Leader of the Government or his staff, for I know that they did everything possible to obtain the information requested. The fact that this information has not been forthcoming is but a further example of the attitude on the part of some crown corporations, including the CNR, when it comes to providing information that the public should have.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I can only suggest that this session Senator Fournier may wish to present another notice of inquiry with respect to the same matter. Certainly, I shall extend my fullest co-operation in efforts to obtain the desired information.

Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): That has already been done.

Senator Choquette: Just send a copy of Senator Fournier's remarks to them so that they will know what he thinks of them and their behaviour.

Senator Molson: Honourable senators, in view of what Senator Fournier has just said, I would call the attention of the house to the new rule 20 which is found on the inside front cover, and the facing page, of the Rules of the Senate. Rule 20 deals with the Question Period and the asking of questions.

I think my honourable friend, Senator Fournier, is mistaken in what he said about inquiries. The definition of "inquiry" is found in rule 5(e) on page 2:

"inquiry" means the procedure whereby a senator, after giving notice in accordance with rules 43 and 44, calls the attention of the Senate to a particular matter for the purpose of informing the Senate of that matter or having it considered or examined by the Senate.

On the other hand, under the new definition of "question" found in rule 5(n), questions are divided into oral and written questions.

I shall not read them, but the matter is clearly set out in rules 20, 20A and 20B.

Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): I do not agree with that at all.

Senator Flynn: I suggest that Senator Fournier might simply have asked a question, which would have been in accordance with this new rule. For example, he could have asked the government leader why he had not replied to the question put to him on August 2 last.

NUCLEAR SAFEGUARDS

NATIONAL POLICY—QUESTION

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Some days ago in the Ottawa Journal—the Journal of November 25, to be exact—there was a report of what appears to have been an interview with, or a speech by, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in Brussels in which he appears to have said that Canada has “come around” to the commercial realities of its nuclear safeguards policy. He is quoted as saying:

As Canada makes more and more sales of its technology, it's perhaps come around to a more realistic opinion . . . I shouldn't say this . . . that it shouldn't restrict sale of its technology.

I should like to ask the Leader of the Government whether this indicates any change in government policy in the matter of safeguards for the sale of reactors. I am almost inclined to add parenthetically, although I suppose I am out of order in doing so, that, if actually this policy has been an obstacle to sales of our reactors, it presumably has saved the taxpayers a good deal of money.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, regrettably I do not have available to me a copy of the full text of the minister's statement. Consequently, it is not possible for me to comment on the alleged remarks. To attempt to do so would not be fair to the minister. Therefore, I should like to take the question as notice in order to determine whether the press report quoted is indeed accurate. I shall endeavour to provide further information.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT ON WHALING—QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the government leader in connection with the forthcoming meeting in Tokyo of the International Whaling Commission, and the controversy which exists with respect to the appropriate level of quota for the taking of sperm whales and other whales during 1978.

• (2010)

I would ask the government leader whether the Government of Canada is supporting the recommendation of the executive committee to limit the take of whales to under 800 as opposed to Japanese and Russian desires to have a 6,000-whale quota.

Senator Flynn: Written question.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, because of the detailed nature of the question, it will be taken as notice.

LEGISLATION

INTRODUCTION OF NEW BANK ACT—QUESTION

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, Senator Austin has given me notice of two questions, which I am in a position to reply to now. First, he would like to know when the New Bank Act is to be introduced.

I can inform the house that the drafting is now being finalized by the Department of Justice, and the Minister of Finance intends to proceed with it as quickly as possible.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

POSSIBLE VISIT OF PRESIDENT CARTER TO CANADA—QUESTION

Senator Perrault: Senator Austin further asks whether President Carter will return the visit of the Right Honourable the Prime Minister. In reply, there is no information available on that question at this time.

ALASKA HIGHWAY PIPELINE

INTERPRETATION OF AGREEMENT—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a question was asked by Senator Olson on November 22 concerning the Alaska Highway pipeline. The question made reference to Canadian suppliers for the forthcoming natural gas pipeline, and asked whether any preference would be given to Canadian suppliers, particularly to suppliers who would have to set in place a production capability to supply some of the material other than pipe between now and when the construction begins.

Honourable senators, the pipeline company, in testimony before the National Energy Board, has indicated that it is dedicated to a maximization of Canadian content and that it is making an effort to work with potential sources far enough in advance of their supply deadlines to allow for the establishment of additional facilities by some of these firms if required. The company has also underlined that it is prepared to accept some penalty in order to be able to source its requirements in Canada. Officials are, and will be, reviewing with the pipeline company its procurement plans in order to achieve optimum Canadian content not only in the supply of pipe to the project but also in the supply of other goods and services.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DOCUMENTARY PROGRAM THE FIFTH ESTATE

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, Senator Bosa submitted a written question on November 8 with respect to the CBC documentary program The Fifth Estate that dealt with Canada's foreign aid program. That was followed by an oral question by Senator Smith (Colchester) on November 29 inquiring as to when Senator Bosa's question would be answered.

I have been informed by Mr. A. W. Johnson, President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, that senior officers of the corporation in Toronto are at present putting together the information asked for by Senator Bosa. Mr. Johnson has assured me that we will have the report as soon as it is available, although no time frame has been established in terms of an exact date.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—CANADIAN FOREIGN POLICY—QUESTION

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, I should like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate with regard to what has been happening recently in the Middle East. Canada has always had a vital interest in the area, as evidenced by the fact that the late Lester B. Pearson received the Nobel Peace Prize as a result of an initiative that he took in the mid-1950s. Is Canada taking any initiative in that area at the present time, an area which would appear to be developing as a source of either continued controversy or peace?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the entire thrust of Canadian Middle East foreign policy, beginning with the establishment of Israel just over 30 years ago, has been to help bring about peace in that area. There have been efforts made by successive Canadian governments, along with governments of other countries, to advance initiatives which would see the establishment of security of frontiers, peace and economic prosperity in that area. A number of efforts in those directions have been made by a succession of Canadian Prime Ministers and External Affairs Ministers during that period of time.

Honourable senators are aware, of course, of the recent visit to the Middle East by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Honourable Don Jamieson. The minister met with a number of leaders and other governmental representatives in the area.

I had the opportunity in August when in Israel to meet with Mr. Moshe Dayan, Israel's Foreign Minister, and other ministers. I assure honourable senators that the entire Canadian initiative in past years and in recent months has been to offer this nation's good offices and peacemaking and peacekeeping resources in order to help achieve a settlement of outstanding differences in the Middle East. That will continue to be the thrust of Canadian efforts.

THE ESTIMATES

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A)—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, December 1, the debate on the motion of Senator Everett, for the adoption of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, presented on Tuesday, November 29, 1977, on supplementary estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1978.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance relating to supplementary estimates (A) was sober and non-controversial, and I have no objection to its adoption. However, I would say that Senator Everett, whose absence tonight I regret, was neither as factual nor as non-controversial as the report.

[Senator Perrault.]

On Thursday, December 1—and this is to be found at page 198 of Hansard—he had this to say in speaking generally about the situation:

So one looking at the figures, no matter how prejudiced he or she may be, would have to say that the government is doing extremely well.

I repeat: "extremely well." Now, I don't know if I am prejudiced—

Senator Molson: Oh no, never!

Senator Perrault: Oh, never!

Senator Flynn: Well, I challenge anyone here to be less prejudiced than I am. If what I am is prejudiced, then words have lost their true meaning.

But let us look at some of the figures. In committee it was interesting to see that we were offered a new way of explaining estimates. We were given, first, the target figure for the fiscal year, then the authorized amount, and then the real expenditures. In 1976-77 the target for expenditures was $42.150 billion, as against an authorized $41.224 billion which was lower than the target. And the real expenditures were $41.078 billion, lower yet than the target and the authorized amount.

Now, in 1977-78, the target is $44.450 billion. We don't know exactly what the real expenditures will be, but I will come back later to some of the guesses that were made. And we have an authorized minimum of $45.802 billion.

● (2020)

So, as you can see, the minimum is higher than the target by something like $1.350 billion. The difference between this year and the previous year is that the target this year is lower than the authorized, whereas in 1976-77 it was the contrary—the authorized expenditures were lower than the target.

I said that $45.802 billion is the authorized amount for this year. But I am a little confused because Senator Everett said in his speech, and in committee, that the authorized amount was $46.492 billion, or almost $46½ billion, which is something like $1.600 billion more. That is a rather important figure. He mentioned it in committee and he mentioned it again in his speech of December 1, as reported at page 198:

Suffice it to say that the supplementary estimates total $1.910 billion, bringing the total estimated spending for 1977-78 to $46.492 billion.

The figure given by the parliamentary secretary to the President of the Treasury Board in committee was, as I said before, only $45.802 billion.

Senator Lamontagne: What about supplementary estimates?

Senator Flynn: That included supplementary estimates. As I said, there are three figures—the target, the authorized, and the real. We know the real for last year was below the authorized, and the authorized was below the target. But this year the target is below the authorized and below it by a substantial amount if we take the figure of $46.492 that Senator Everett mentioned in his speech and in committee.

Now, how can we guess what the real expenditures of the present fiscal year will be? The only thing we know is that in committee it was mentioned that about $1.300 billion of expenditures would not be met. So that means, if we take the first figure, the official figure of $45.802 billion, not the one quoted by Senator Everett, we would have a real expenditure of $44.502 billion which would be above the target for 1977-78, whereas last year the real expenditures were not only below the target but also below the authorized expenditures. If Senator Everett considers this as the government's "doing extremely well," I would suggest that there is something different in our interpretation of "well."

I have also read the report of the Auditor General. From that we glean that as far as last year is concerned, there was more overspending and wasteful spending. If we are doing extremely well only because our wasteful spending is not running ahead of the inflation rate, that does not mean that we are doing better. It only means that the government is slowing down the rate at which it squanders the taxpayers' money.

Senator Everett said that expenditures did not really go up; it is the cost of living that did. Well, the cost of living rises as government expenditures rise. Who does he expect us to believe is responsible for inflation, if not the government which, though it speaks bravely of curbing expenditures, still has not done one hell of a lot about it in reality?

Let me go back to the report of the Auditor General. Senator Everett says the government is certainly doing extremely well in controlling the expenditures of public funds. Well, the Auditor General tells a different story: 90,000 square feet of rented government office space in Ottawa lay empty for between six to 10 months last year, at a cost of $400,000; $95 million was paid out last year to unemployment insurance claimants who were not entitled to coverage; the organizers of Habitat, the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, held in Vancouver last year—and this is something Senator Buckwold will love, and possibly Senator Perrault too—booked too many rooms for participants and observers and it cost the government over a half million dollars. I know, of course, it is very expensive to live in Vancouver or to go there and stay in any hotel, but a half a million dollars is definitely not peanuts, despite what C. D. Howe used to say some years ago. Then there was the telecommunications agency's revolving fund which exceeded its $2 million appropriation for seven months last year, at one point going up to $1.9 million over its limit; and the Canadian Saltfish Corporation, a crown agency, paid kickbacks of over $400,000 last year by artificially increasing sales invoices to customers, then rebating the difference. Add to that the very interesting way in which the government has been paying astronomical sums to unknown agents for help in the sale of Canadian made nuclear reactors. These examples, of course, do not exhaust the list of the Auditor General's litany of waste, but I don't want to bore those of you who think this government is doing extremely well. I merely wanted to point out that the Chairman of the Finance Committee, when he says in a speech presenting his report on supplementary estimates (A) that the government is doing extremely well, sounds no more credible to us than he would to a class full of students taking freshman economics.

I will agree, of course, that the Auditor General said that the federal government's handling of money was improving. But if you will recall what he had to say last year as to how the government had virtually lost control of its spending completely, and we know that Parliament has had no practical control for years—well, government had nowhere to go but up. And I cannot really bring myself to believe that showing some improvement over what was scandalous ineptitude deserves to be described as doing extremely well.

● (2030)

The National Finance Committee, when it dealt with supplementary estimates (A), dealt with only a small portion of the problem. And to conclude from that that the government is doing extremely well was simply naive and an insult to those in the Senate who possess more than a very superficial knowledge of economics. I suggest that the National Finance Committee has, in the past, done fine work. But it will have to become involved in writing fiction if it hopes to justify its coming to us and saying that the government is doing extremely well.

On motion of Senator Grosart, debate adjourned.

RETIREMENT AGE POLICIES

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, November 30, the debate on the motion of Senator Croll:

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and report upon

- (a) the existing retirement age policies affecting workers in both the public and private sectors;
- (b) the social and economic implications of mandatory retirement based on age alone;
- (c) the feasibility of enabling workers, especially elderly citizens, to continue to make a worthwhile contribution to our society through flexible voluntary retirement plans to the extent of their ability and motivation;
- (d) the protection for those over sixty-five against age discrimination in all employment areas; and
- (e) the need for the maximum co-operation of all levels of government, labour unions, business and the public in respect of existing and future retirement age policies and retirement plans;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry; and

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place.

Senator Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, it is a privilege for me to join with others in this debate on Senator Croll's motion. It has become obvious during the debate that this matter has given many senators the opportunity not only to talk about the proposal, but also to pay well-deserved tributes to this worthy and respected senator, and I certainly join with my colleagues in making that expression.

I might add that when I was sworn in as a member of this august chamber some six years ago, the experience was made even more memorable by the fact that I was escorted by a man whom I had for so long greatly admired, namely, Senator Croll. That was a great introduction to the Senate, and for this I thank him, and say again that I have always been so proud of what he has done for this country.

Honourable senators, I think Senator Croll's motion is an interesting one. It is wide-ranging, and it covers quite a variety of problems facing the aged. I attempted to do some minor research into this whole subject and found that there are not many Canadian statistics that provide any sort of evidence directly related to what we are discussing tonight, namely, mandatory retirement and many of the other aspects of the motion. I was, however, able to find some material from the United States that is timely and probably applicable in our country, and I hope honourable senators will not mind if I mention some of their experience. The Americans have had an active legislative program in this regard. I might add that what I have to say was provided, to a large extent, by a Dunn and Bradstreet article on this subject.

Our near and great neighbour, the United States, is very apt at coining phrases, and the fight in that country for improved civil liberties for older Americans has been suitably named the battle for "grey rights." Canadian senior citizens are also expressing their grievances, which are serious and which include problems they face as a result of inflation, inadequate pensions and the delivery of health care.

One very great concern that has recently come into significant prominence is that of mandatory retirement. In the United States of America this matter has now reached the legislative stage. Many Americans nearing or past normal retirement age want to abolish that which limits their working lives. This would have a material impact on the economic life of that country, and, in a rare alliance, both business and labour unions are resisting the proposed change. However, powerful support from groups such as the American Association of Retired Persons and the American Civil Liberty Union have been able to influence this legislative battle.

The current focus of the "grey rights drive" is the Pepper-Findlay Bill, sponsored by Representative Claude Pepper, a Florida Democrat, and Representative Paul Findlay, an Illinois Republican. This measure would make 70 the new legal age for mandatory retirement in private industry; abolish the mandatory retirement age of 70 for federal workers; and invalidate the mandatory retirement clauses in union contracts and pension agreements. The Pepper-Findlay Bill sailed through the House Education and Labour Committee without a dissenting vote. Meanwhile, a similar bill has been approved by the Senate Labour Subcommittee. So, there is a very active legislative thrust in this direction in the United States.

A mandatory retirement age of 70 for private industry is only the first of many "grey" demands. Eventually, "grey rights" advocates want to abolish all age requirements for retirement. Their arguments in favour of a higher retirement age, or no age limit at all, are fairly simple. They point out that most people are still able to do productive work after the age of 65, and many workers simply cannot afford to retire because their pensions are inadequate. They also cite medical evidence of the illness and premature death of many older workers who were forced out of their jobs, and this has been mentioned by other honourable senators in this debate.

Industry's position on the issue is more complex. One key objection is that, without mandatory retirement, corporations would be forced to make tough decisions on who is able to do his job. They would have to weigh older workers carefully, and downgrade or discharge those failing or slowing down. Such judgments would cause disputes and problems between the company and the employees. There is also the problem of creating jobs for new and younger workers. There is a finite number of positions, and the longer older workers hang on to them the fewer opportunities there are for the young. This is also a major concern of labour unions, which have been steadily pushing for the opportunity to retire at a younger age.

According to the Exxon company, an open-ended retirement policy would tend to discriminate against blue-collar workers. While the older manager or other professional who uses his brain and has no physical demands in his job would probably be judged to be more or less able to continue, wage earners who have spent decades in jobs requiring physical exertion may not be. However, some American companies are already experimenting with the idea. A new retirement policy was recently announced by Connecticut General Insurance Corporation of Hartford, and it reflects this concern. Connecticut General's policy, which is a very unusual one in industry today, removes any mandatory retirement age for almost 12,000 employees, but it excludes from this general plan the top management and the upper half of middle-management. These groups will continue with the conventional retirement age of 65 years. Some of the companies which have no mandatory retirement age and employ older workers report that the number of employees who elect to stay on is not large and that they perform well. I think this is an interesting observation. One of the major questions that people see in the abolition of compulsory retirement is how long people will continue working.

● (2040)

It is interesting to note that the Banker's Life and Casualty Company, of Chicago, which has 4,000 employees, pioneered in the hiring and continued employment of people in their sixties, seventies and even eighties. For the most part, according to the vice-president of corporate services, the post-65-year-old population in the company has remained stable at about 4 per cent because so many people still opt to retire. I think that is rather important. Not everyone wants to keep on working.

I believe Senator Croll is looking for the limited number who feel that they can work, who would like to work, and who feel they should have the opportunity of doing so. There is some statistical evidence from the experiences of the companies to which I have made reference which would support the fact that a relatively small percentage actually will continue to work after the normal retirement age.

Paradoxically, in light of the conflict about letting people work longer, the major trend has been for workers to retire early when given the choice. Recently, the average retirement age in the United States has declined from 65 to 62. At General Motors, for example, 7,980 hourly-paid workers retired in 1976, but only 164 had reached age 68, which is General Motor's mandatory retirement age. In addition, some experts estimate that only about 10 per cent of the current post-64 generation would opt to continue working if allowed.

Why all the fuss, then? "We don't want this legislation passed because all people over 65 want to work," says John Martin, former head of the United States Commission on Aging, "We just want to have the choice of working, like anyone else."

The problem of pensions and their ever-increasing cost, because of inflation and longer life expectancy, must also be considered. In Canada, it is reported that by the year 2000 the Canada Pension Plan will be in a deficit position. Perhaps one way of easing this situation would be to drop mandatory retirement at age 65. Despite their current opposition to open-ended retirement, corporations may eventually come around to supporting the practice for financial reasons, namely, the escalating cost of pensions.

On the important question of how productive older workers are, a recent article in Industrial Gerontology magazine notes that this group—that is, the senior citizen workers—has a better performance record than younger employees, and that many older workers are immensely under-utilized. The authors, Elizabeth L. Meier and Elizabeth A. Kerr, cite a number of studies, including:

A 1965 study by the U.S. Labour Department found that in factory work involving substantial physical effort, productivity decreased substantially after age 65. In office work and in mail sorting, productivity declined little if any up to age sixty, and only slightly after that. In the study of performance of office workers, the oldest age group, 65, actually had the best record.

In three studies conducted recently by the Bureau of Business Management of the University of Illinois, supervisors rated more than 3,000 personnel past sixty who worked in retailing, clerical and middle-management jobs. The conclusion: A majority of the older workers were as good as, or superior to, average younger workers in such things as lack of absenteeism, work quality, work volume and human relations. The study also found that there is no specific age at which employees become unproductive.

Honourable senators, I support the appointment of a committee to study this matter. It should look at all the implications, such as opportunities for younger workers, anticipated size of the future work force, pension problems and so forth. Proposed changes should probably be phased in. For instance, if it is recommended that the retirement age be raised from 65 to 70, that could probably be accomplished over a 10-year period.

This is an opportune time to conduct this in-depth review of compulsory retirement and other problems facing the aged. The committee may not necessarily support the change because of the wide variety of problems that will, of necessity, be raised. Everything will have to be very carefully assessed.

The demographic change in our society is steadily indicating an ever larger percentage of the population over 60 years of age. In my opinion, many of these people, older in years but possessed of experience and skills that are still productive for this country, should have the opportunity, if they so wish, to continue in some form of employment.

It is my hope that this chamber will support the motion of Senator Croll so that an opportunity will be given for an in-depth study, for the first time, of this very important subject.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Senator Croll: Honourable senators—

Senator Flynn: You cannot speak unless you are closing the debate. Senator Godfrey has moved the adjournment of the debate. You cannot speak twice on the same question.

On motion of Senator Godfrey, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, December 7, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Textile and Clothing Board, dated July 28, 1977, to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, pursuant to section 19 of the Textile and Clothing Board Act, Chapter 39, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72, respecting woven cotton terry towels.

Report of the Textile and Clothing Board, dated September 6, 1977, to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, pursuant to section 19 of the Textile and Clothing Board Act, Chapter 39, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72, respecting work gloves.

Report of the Textile and Clothing Board, dated August 31, 1977, on an inquiry respecting hats and caps.

Report of the National Arts Centre Corporation, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 17 of the National Arts Centre Act, Chapter N-2, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the National Film Board of Canada, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 20(2) of the National Film Act, Chapter N-7, R.S.C., 1970.

THE HONOURABLE RAYMOND J. PERRAULT, P.C.

ACTING PRIME MINISTER—QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I understand that later today the Leader of the Government will be Acting Prime Minister. Accordingly, I would like him to tell the chamber whether he will seize this new power to advance many important interests in the Senate such as, for example, Senator Flynn's interest in having some Conservative colleagues, Senator Argue's interest in having a beef price support program, or perhaps Senator Lamontagne's interest in science policy. For Senator Frith and myself, I wonder whether he would take under consideration the construction of a squash court in the East Block.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is true that I shall assume these onerous responsibilities later this day, and serious consideration will be given to the important recommendations advanced by the Honourable Senator Austin.

Senator Flynn: It will be a change of pace if you are able to deal with all these matters tomorrow.

INDUSTRY

SUPPLIES OF AMERICAN COAL TO CANADA—QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, in view of the strike in the United States coal industry and the reliance by Canadian utilities and the Canadian steel industry on United States coal supplies to Canada, could the Leader of the Government tell us whether there is any imminent shortage of such supplies for either utilities or the steel industry in Canada, and how long those sectors can stand a United States coal strike?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I appreciate the fact that prior notice was given of this question. As yet I have not received the desired information. I am hoping that this information will be forthcoming this afternoon; if so, it will be given to the house.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE ON SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A) ADOPTED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Everett for the adoption of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, presented on Tuesday, November 29, 1977, on supplementary estimates (A) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1978.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, the numbers that are before us in the supplementary estimates, which will later come to us in an appropriation bill, have been fully discussed. I might say that in my view the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance contains the best and most easy to read summary of the projected estimates that I have seen anywhere.

I will confine my remarks this afternoon to one or two major principles that arose in the discussion of these estimates in committee. The first was the relation of statutory expenditures to items in the estimates which are required to be voted by Parliament. This is an important question, the facts of which often seem to be misunderstood. In fact, the question of the relation of statutory expenditures to voted expenditures at any given time was raised in the Senate in a question directed to me. I think we should appreciate the fact that the division of proposed government expenditures into statutory and voted items—as well, of course, as into budgetary and non-budgetary items—should not be used as an excuse to defend the totality of government spending indications. I say that because this is often done. In general terms, in the present estimates of government expenditures for this year the breakdown is approximately 50-50; that is to say, about half the expenditures are statutory, arising from the provisions of existing statutes. Now, of course, existing statutes can be amended or even repealed, and I am very glad to see a recent suggestion that the government, for the first time in history, may be engaged in an extensive examination of current statutory expenditures. We even read suggestions in the press, certainly for the first time that I can recall, that the government is even considering the abolition of certain departments of government as possibly necessary. It is true that the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance have not confirmed that, but the repeated suggestions in the press certainly appear to me to be leaks of some kind of at least what may be under consideration at the cabinet level at the present time. I for one would suggest that when we consider the estimates or appropriation acts in the future we look as carefully at the statutory items as at the items which we are asked to vote.

It is true that in the estimates, of course, the statutory expenditures are included only for information. The appropriation act asks us to appropriate public funds to meet intended government expenditures. Of course, we are concerned with the total at any given time of government expenditures, particularly in the context of the times. We are particularly concerned with the relation of the growth of government expenditures to the growth in the economy as a whole. This is a fairly new area of consideration by all governments in Canada. It was discussed at some length in committee, and I am sure that all honourable senators welcome the fact that we do appear to have a turnaround in the general approach of public servants and the government to this whole question of relating the increases in government expenditures to the growth of the economy.

I was interested that Senator Flynn, in his excellent comments yesterday, took issue with Senator Everett's statement:

So one looking at the figures, no matter how prejudiced he or she may be, would have to say that the government is doing extremely well.

Senator Flynn took exception to that as a broad statement and I would certainly be inclined to agree with him. On the other hand, I understand what Senator Everett meant, which I believe was that the government had at long last suddenly decided to relate these two matters, that the government had finally reached that point of concern, almost panic, at the levels of government expenditure where they were then saying, "Well, we simply have to relate the increase in government expenditures to the ability of the economy to provide the necessary funds to meet those spending intentions."

● (1410)

I suggest that it may well be that there is no more important an issue facing Canada and other democratic countries today. A good case has been made to prove that the continued increase of growth in government expenditures over the ability of the economy to meet those expenditures may be the greatest single threat today to democracy as we know it, and, particularly, to individual freedom.

One very renowned economist—not that all economists agree with him on all things—is Milton Friedman. He points out that the excessive demands of government expenditure on the economy has resulted in the major crises of the democratic systems of the world. He mentions, for example, the Chilean case.

Senator Lamontagne: Is he an expert on Chile?

Senator Grosart: He certainly is an expert on Chile. He was called in by the Chilean government to advise them at the point when they reached a 400 per cent inflation rate. Out of that experience he raised this whole question as to the point at which government demands on the economy threaten the democratic system itself. He says that this did happen in Chile because Chile was one of the freest, most democratic of all South American countries at one time. Chile started on this road of steadily increasing government expenditures at exactly the same time as the United Kingdom did, and both reached similar points with respect to threats to their democracy.

In Chile, it also resulted in the end of individual freedom. There was a military takeover. Of course, it has not reached that stage in the United Kingdom, the reason being that the United Kingdom is a much wealthier nation. It has been able to stand up to the problem while Chile has not.

Mr. Friedman goes on to point out that this is what happened in New York. The City of New York lost complete control of its own expenditures. The reasons were the same: demands of the Government of New York on the ability of New York to produce and pay brought about the same situation.

He suggests that every democratic country should look very carefully at the status quo in this matter. In Canada we have reached just over 40 per cent. In other words, public sector demands on the economy of all levels of government are now over 40 per cent. It appears that the catastrophic point is in the neighbourhood of 50 per cent. I am sure all honourable senators hope that the government panic caused by the recent very high level of government expenditures will have the effect of avoiding this for Canada.

Senator Flynn's point was well taken. What I think he was really saying was this: Should a government really be congratulated when it has finally decided that it will not spend any more than it would seem reasonable for the economy to produce? Senator Everett felt that, because the government appears to have taken this stand in the last two years, it should be entitled to claim that it "is doing extremely well." Well, perhaps in a very limited area it is not doing badly. I would not go so far as to say it is doing extremely well. Although it is coming reasonably close, it has not yet reached its target. On the other hand, I suggest it does not make any sense to congratulate a government because at long last it is not demanding more from the economy than the economy can produce.

Some interesting questions were raised during committee consideration concerning the government policy of setting so-called targets. This was done in the spring of 1976 for the first time and again in February of this year when the government set what some call a target for total government expenditures for the year. To my mind the word "target" is a poor choice. Other words are used. The President of the Treasury Board himself was inclined to use the word "ceiling" or "objectives," although he did use the word "target". I suggest that it is a bad word because the assumption in having a target is that you are going to reach it. It would be a better incentive to curb government expenditures if the government thought in terms of not reaching a target—and that, from the evidence we heard, appears to be what it has done this year.

The President of the Treasury Board told us that as far as present indications go—and Senator Flynn referred to this yesterday—the government will not spend all that it has asked Parliament to authorize. The suggestion was made in committee, assuming that to be the case, that the government should reduce appropriations by the amount no longer required, and it was in response to that suggestion that the minister enunciated a new policy and a very important principle.

I draw it to the attention of honourable senators because it is a fact that the National Finance Committee has had a very important influence, not only on the methodology of presenting estimates but on the control of government expenditures.

To provide a little more background, the suggestion made in the National Finance Committee was that we should have "supplementaries in reverse" so that when the government finds it no longer has need of funds appropriated it should, by way of supplementary estimates, come before Parliament and return to the Consolidated Revenue Fund moneys not expended. The feeling was that this would result in disciplinary controls by government departments and agencies.

In responding to that suggestion the President of the Treasury Board said:

I guess your question in the end is a technical one: why do we not adjust the supplementaries on the down side, too? Well, it is just not that simple yet. The day may come, senator, when we can. This is a fairly new approach to things, and I think it is a good one. The day may come in the ensuing years where we could probably do that, but at the moment we have a very strong faith—and I think it will be proven out, and I suggest the fact that we did it last year indicates some reason for this—in our ability to do it this year.

Later on he said that as a result of not only the clear statement of the ceiling at the beginning of the year but subsequent statements, it was the government's intention not to reach that ceiling, to fall short of it, and expenditures were being reduced. The effect on the public service was a good one. In that respect, he said:

We are now finding that our senior officials, because of our preaching the need for this, are coming to us and saying, "We have looked at this and we have a very confident view that we can lapse more, not less."

[Senator Grosart.]

● (1420)

Over the years all of us who have examined this matter of public spending have come to realize that it has become almost a fact of life for departments, towards the end of the fiscal year, to make sure they spend all the money Parliament has authorized them to spend. Now, because of this new policy, this new approach for which the Senate committee can take a good deal of credit, we find this new attitude, and it is the first time I have ever heard of a situation in which senior officials of the government are actually coming forward and saying, "We can lapse more and take some pride in it." And the minister emphasized that they could take pride in not spending and would get high marks, as he suggested, from the Treasury Board.

Other interesting matters were raised, but perhaps I can conclude my remarks by suggesting that in this and in other areas the Senate Finance Committee does have an important role to play in the immediate future. I have admitted that the government has recognized the necessity of relating the growth in government expenditures to the growth in the GNP—the national income, national productivity, whatever you like to call it—but this has been brought about by the government's panic—and I do not think the word "panic" is an exaggeration—at the obvious relationship between government spending and inflation. The realization is here now, and it has been brought about by the unexpected slowdown in the economy, by the phenomenon of unemployment and inflation at the same time. We have that situation now, but my fear is that, when this situation improves, when the economy picks up, when the employment situation is better, when inflation appears to be under control, we will go back to the old ways of government expenditures being unrelated to the ability of the economy to meet them.

I believe that our National Finance Committee has an important role to play here, because our kind of monitoring of the total expenditures, the total estimates, the total in the appropriation bills is not the kind that is normally done in the House of Commons. House of Commons committees, of course, deal specifically with estimates in departments, but they do not do it under a concept of totality in the way that we have been doing it for some years in the Senate National Finance Committee.

With that hope, honourable senators, I commend the report of the committee. It is a good one; it is concise and clear, as Senator Flynn said, and it points, I think, in the direction of further contributions by Senator Everett's committee to the public interest in Canada.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

RETIREMENT AGE POLICIES

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Croll:

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and report upon

- (a) the existing retirement age policies affecting workers in both the public and private sectors;
- (b) the social and economic implications of mandatory retirement based on age alone;
- (c) the feasibility of enabling workers, especially elderly citizens, to continue to make a worthwhile contribution to our society through flexible voluntary retirement plans to the extent of their ability and motivation;
- (d) the protection for those over sixty-five against age discrimination in all employment areas; and
- (e) the need for the maximum co-operation of all levels of government, labour unions, business and the public in respect of existing and future retirement age policies and retirement plans;

That the committee have power to engage the services of such technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry; and

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, and to adjourn from place to place.

Hon. John Morrow Godfrey: Honourable senators, originally I had no intention of taking part in this debate because, although I have views on the subject of retirement, I thought I would elaborate them either before the committee or in the debate on the report of the committee. However, there are a couple of observations I would like to make, not on the subject to be referred to the committee but about the operation of the committee itself.

Before doing so I would like, along with others, to pay a personal tribute to Senator Croll. Possibly I have known him, at least politically, longer than anyone else in this chamber. The first time I met him was at a Liberal picnic in Peel County in the summer of 1935. I was president of the Peel County Young Liberals and was delighted when I found myself sitting at lunch beside Senator Croll, then the youngest member in Mitchell Hepburn's cabinet. During the course of the lunch I made a disparaging remark about the abilities of a Conservative member of the Ontario Legislature. I recall Senator Croll going to great lengths to explain that while one might disagree with a person's politics, one should not allow that to influence one's opinion as to his ability, and that in this case I was completely wrong; in fact, the individual in question was a very able man, one of the ablest in the Legislature. I never forgot that incident and, as a young man, it had a profound influence on me, and still has. I have always been very grateful to him for his advice on that occasion.

Senator Flynn: Did you follow it?

Senator Godfrey: For many years I have been a member of the Board of Governors of the Canadian Council on Social Development. In 1971 I was appointed co-chairman, along with Dr. Gerald Fortin of the University of Quebec, of a Task Force on Social Security appointed by the council. We published our report in the spring of 1973, which was before I was summoned to the Senate.

In March 1974, during the Throne Speech debate, I spoke on the subject of social security. In that speech I stated that the "bible" of the task force was the report of the Special Senate Committee on Poverty, chaired by Senator Croll. I stated that the task force did not have the resources available to the Senate committee. In fact, we got along very nicely with the services of one part-time researcher, because we could rely on the research of the Croll committee.

I mention this not only to acknowledge again my gratitude to Senator Croll, but also because the report of the Canadian Council on Social Development, How Much Choice: Retirement Policies in Canada, issued in November, 1975, which I am holding in my hand, covers the same ground that is to be covered by another special Senate committee to be chaired by Senator Croll. This study was referred to in Senator Croll's speech. The report is 285 pages long and contains the following passage:

Ready co-operation was received from many federal, provincial and municipal officials, voluntary agencies, social planning councils, labour councils and senior citizen groups.

Meetings were also held which gave the public an opportunity of making an input.

In March 1976, the Board of Governors of the Canadian Council on Social Development, after making a study of the report, issued a 16-page statement on retirement policies in Canada which includes recommendations on what should be done.

I mention this to point out that the Canadian Council on Social Development can now return the compliment to Senator Croll and his Poverty Committee, because the report of the council contains most of the basic research which will be required by a Senate committee appointed to study retirement age policies. Also, the recommendations in the report and in the statement by the board of governors should be considered by the Senate committee in the same way that the task force, of which I was co-chairman, considered the recommendations in the report of the Senate Poverty Committee. That will save the Senate committee the expense of hiring a large research staff, which I am sure will please Senator Croll.

Honourable senators will recall the speech made by Senator Croll on November 3, 1976, in which he criticized the amount spent by the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee on experts. In that speech, as reported at page 129 of Hansard of the last session, Senator Croll said:

The only way by which a committee can accomplish anything, and produce a report that is worth something, is to have its members do their own work on it—

At page 130 he said:

We have the expertise, honourable senators, and we ought to use it. We ought not to have other people provide the expertise, and what expertise we do not have in our own committee we can find in the government departments.

My only comment is that with the help of the report of the Canadian Council on Social Development, Senator Croll and his committee should be able to practise what he preached a year ago.

I would not want anyone to get the impression that I think the proposed Senate committee is redundant because of the report of the council. Not at all. The task force of the council, of which I was co-chairman, did not agree with all the recommendations of the Senate committee. In fact, the government did not agree with all the Senate committee's recommendations either, and came to the same basic conclusions in its Working Paper on Social Security in Canada, more familiarly known as the Orange Paper on Social Security, as the task force did. If the Senate committee disagrees with the recommendations in the council's report, the government may very well this time side with the Senate committee and not the council.

● (1430)

There is only one other matter about this proposed committee that I would like to comment on briefly at this time. Charles Lynch once said that the Senate investigative committees were practically putting royal commissions out of business. What he was really saying was that Senate investigative committees accomplish very much the same purpose as royal commissions and, because they do it well and more cheaply, they are replacing royal commissions.

When a royal commission is appointed, the chairman usually does not immediately announce his views as to what the recommendations of the committee should be. I was a bit surprised when Senator Croll, in his speech moving the appointment of the committee, made the following statement which appears at page 128 of Hansard for November 15 last:

Clearly, what is required is some freedom of choice for the people who reach retirement age. At the present time the law states that you must retire at such and such an age. I should like to see some flexible arrangement which would take into account the differences between people.

I would say that is prejudging one of the most fundamental issues the committee has to consider, and if, as appears evident, Senator Croll is going to chair the committee, I suggest that in the future he should try to refrain from making statements like that until after the committee has had an opportunity of hearing and discussing all of the evidence.

So you see, honourable senators, after 42 years I have finally been able to repay the good advice that Senator Croll once gave me, and show my gratitude for it in a tangible way by giving him a little kindly advice of my own in return.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to make some brief remarks about this motion?

I notice that all of those who have participated in this debate so far have paid well-deserved tributes to Senator Croll, who has proposed the appointment of a special committee to examine the social and economic implications of the existing retirement age policies affecting workers in both the public and private sectors. Needless to say, I associate myself with these well-deserved tributes.

[Senator Godfrey.]

Without ignoring the difficulties of the task ahead, I think that the Senate of Canada is the best equipped, both in talent and in organization, to give to this problem the thorough examination it deserves, and that such an inquiry will be welcomed and supported in every part of Canada.

I would say to Senator Croll that, although we have at the moment a few strikes in the province of Quebec that are affecting some well-known newspapers, his proposal has already been reported on in some of the French press, and I think this is important for this institution.

Of course, I intend to support this motion, but before this debate is concluded I should like to make a suggestion, which I hope will be examined by both Senator Croll and the government leader. If this motion carries—and I have no doubt that it will carry—when the time comes for the organization of this special committee I humbly suggest that we examine the possibility of limiting its membership to five or six, including the chairman, so that the five regions of Canada may be represented. I am directing my comments particularly to minor reforms that we have once in a while, and which are not always easy to implement. I think that if we could do away with some of the traditional organization we have at the moment, and reorganize our work in a different context or in a more businesslike way, this would be an advantage to a committee of this kind.

If the membership of this special committee were restricted to no more than six senators, its terms of reference could provide that where one of its members, as a result of sickness or any other cause, cannot attend a meeting, any member of the Senate, at the call of the chairman, is an eligible replacement. I do not have to emphasize the advantages of limiting the number of members of a committee of this kind. For example, if the committee travels within Canada, the travel arrangements will be much easier. If some organizational meetings are necessary they can be held in the chairman's office. Such a limit would also add to the prestige of those senators who are chosen to serve.

I think what Senator Croll has in mind is a committee that will gather information from people who would appear before it and present briefs, and it is not necessary to have a large number of members to do that. I would much prefer to have five or six interested senators who would follow the investigation closely. If a committee member is unable to serve, then there can be provision for him or her to be replaced by another senator. I am suggesting this in the hope that it will be considered, and be given an honest try.

In conclusion, honourable senators, let me say that I am not impressed at all by the argument raised over the years that all provinces of Canada must be represented on a special committee. In my view that is an argument which stands on only one foot. It is sufficient if the five regions of Canada are represented. I consider this a minor reform that we can bring about. At least, let us give it a try. I believe that a limited membership would result in a more efficient committee. I raise this in the hope that at least it will be discussed.

● (1440)

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to participate in this debate to the extent that others have, but just to bring to the attention of the proposed committee a new perspective on the matter of retirement.

First, I would like to congratulate Senator Croll and pay him tribute for having brought this important and crucial matter to the attention of the Senate.

We are discussing the possibility of optional retirement, and doing away with obligatory retirement at a certain age. I would like the senators who are going to be members of this special committee to examine another aspect of retirement. There are people who wish to retire because they feel they are physically and mentally exhausted, and there are those who would like to continue in the same field of endeavour or occupation. I think there are thousands of people who would like to experience something new when they reach retirement age, and I would like the committee to consider creating the opportunity for these people to be engaged in other fields of endeavour.

I know of a particular case in Toronto. An executive who retired from the General Electric Company was recently sent, with his wife, to Nigeria for a period of four months to give that country the benefit of his particular expertise. There are many people who have worked all their lives at monotonous jobs who would really welcome the opportunity to be engaged in something else, and who would find the experience gratifying. I hope the members of this proposed special committee would also consider looking into this particular matter.

Hon. George C. van Roggen: Honourable senators, like Senator Bosa, I had not intended, and I do not intend now, to speak at length on this matter. But I do wish to bring to the attention of the house, and particularly to the attention of Senator Croll and those who will be serving on this committee, assuming it will be established, the fact that it has been said, and not entirely facetiously, that the resolution of this question of compulsory retirement at age 65, with more older people being permitted to continue working after that time, is the only thing that might save the Canada Pension Plan from bankruptcy by the year 2000.

There is the other problem we have in this country of the indexing of government pensions and the inability of private pension plans—which must by law be funded—to provide indexing. These are economic factors that have a close inter-relationship with the study that Senator Croll might well be undertaking. I do hope that the committee will hear some evidence on the inter-relationship between pension plans, and their viability in the years ahead, and the matter of retirement age policies.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Croll speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Senator Croll: Honourable senators, I thank those who have participated in the debate on this motion, and also those who desisted from doing so because, as the leader pointed out to me, their contribution might extend the debate for two or three more weeks. We are really at the point now when it is necessary to establish the committee and name its members. We are going to be away for a month beginning December 23, and therefore it is necessary to get on with the job of organizing the committee. A great deal of preliminary work can be done by the staff while we are away.

Again I want to thank profusely all those who participated in the debate, and I assure them that each one of their suggestions will be looked at. How far afield we will go, no one really knows. This is something new, and we will have to listen to people.

I am reminded that when I was in the House of Commons 22 years ago—and there are six other senators here now who were also in the Commons at that time—there was a filibuster during the famous pipeline debate. It was one of the really great filibusters in Canadian parliamentary history. I vividly recall how acrimonious and bitter it was. There were no holds barred. I hoped then that I would never see another one like it. But here in the Senate we have just had what appears to be another filibuster, but it has been the nicest kind that one could possibly think of. The speeches have been important, helpful and expressive. Being as human as my colleagues, I appreciate flattery but I have learned not to inhale it. I am just hopeful that the kind words you have used will prove to have been warranted.

Honourable senators, we have indicated by what we have said in this chamber that we are not only aware of the problems that Canadians face, but we are awake to them and we deal with them in the present. We know what is happening in our country; we know what needs to be looked at.

Senator van Roggen raised two questions which will have to be seriously considered. With regard to what my friend Senator Deschatelets said about limiting the membership of the committee—and the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition were listening to him—my view is that in the light of what is going on in the country today, and in the light of comments made by the Prime Minister about Senate reform, we could not possibly think of setting up a committee of this importance without having every province and every region of this country represented. It is not that subcommittees could not study some of the things that the honourable senator has referred to, but certainly each province should be represented on the main committee by at least one member and, in some instances, by two.

The Leader of the Government's proposal that the motion be modified by deleting certain words is, of course, acceptable. I had in mind, from experience, that sometimes these meetings have to be arranged well in advance. We all understand that.

If the Senate suddenly decides, for important reasons of its own, that instead of sitting on Tuesday it will sit on Monday, it is hard to arrange for other meetings. The Leader of the Government has assured us that, under those circumstances, the Senate will deal with that matter as it did today with the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, which was given permission to sit while the Senate was sitting. So there is no problem there.

● (1450)

The leader suggested that the motion should end with the words "in Canada." I had not really thought about that. It never even occurred to me that this would be a good time to sit in Florida. However, if that is his wish we can see to that.

Senator Rowe suggested that this matter might be dealt with by a standing committee. It does not lend itself to being dealt with by a standing committee, which is there for the purpose of seeing that the business of the Senate is done, and done as expeditiously as possible. A committee such as this one would need some concentration, devotion and commitment to a particular problem. I discussed the matter with the Leader of the Government and we came to the conclusion that the best way to deal with it is in the fashion suggested in the motion. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would also agree with that.

Senator Manning also made a suggestion, with which I think Senator Hicks dealt in his speech. I know of no other suggestions that have been made. I am sure Senator Godfrey knows how careful I am with public money.

Senator Flynn: Like your own?

Senator Croll: There is no problem there at all. Actually what I do is make sure that the money is well spent, which is all one can do.

Honourable senators, in order to incorporate what the Leader of the Government suggested, I move, with leave of the Senate and pursuant to rule 23, that the last paragraph of the motion be modified to read as follows:

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee, to sit during adjournments of the Senate and to adjourn from place to place in Canada.

What I have done is to take out the words "sittings and" and add the words "in Canada" at the end in accordance with the suggestion of the Leader of the Government.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Croll: Honourable senators, I thank you once again for the contributions you have made to this debate. You have indicated that the matter is important, and I assure you that when the committee settles down to examine this subject it will not only look at the speeches that have been made but will give an opportunity to those of you who want to participate from time to time to do so. I think in this way we can render a service to the people of Canada, who will in time appreciate it.

[Senator Croll.]

I ask you, honourable senators, to support the motion as modified.

Motion, as modified, agreed to.

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

SIXTY-FOURTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE, SOFIA, BULGARIA—
DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, November 30, the debate on the inquiry of Senator Petten, calling the attention of the Senate to the Sixty-fourth Annual Conference of the Inter-Parliamentary Union held at Sofia, Bulgaria, from 20th to 30th September, 1977, and in particular to the discussions and proceedings of the Conference and the participation therein of the delegation from Canada.

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, I, like my honourable friend Senator Petten, was a delegate to the Sixty-fourth Inter-Parliamentary Conference held in Bulgaria last September, but the message I bring back from that meeting is, unfortunately, not one of assured peace and continued good will.

As I see it, unless the Inter-Parliamentary Union cleans up its act it will never be a credible vehicle for the promotion of better understanding among nations. The reason is simple. The IPU has, like the United Nations, allowed itself, to a great extent, to be dominated by the communist bloc countries and their obsequious supporters among the newly-developing nations of the Third World.

Senator Petten, with an obvious preference for the innocuous and the non-controversial, restricted his comments to the unanimously approved resolution on the Law of the Sea. But all the resolutions which came out of that conference were not so innocuous and non-controversial—at least not from my point of view.

For instance, there was a unanimously approved resolution on the further relaxation of international tensions and progress in the field of disarmament. There was also a resolution, adopted by the majority of nations present, which supported the inalienable right to self-determination and independence of peoples still under colonial and neo-colonial domination. This latter resolution was, in essence, an outright condemnation of the white régimes presently in power in Rhodesia and South Africa. It urged support of the so-called liberation movements in Southern Africa, and called for an economic boycott against Rhodesia and South Africa.

A further resolution that was unanimously adopted amounted to a call for diplomatic and political action against Chile because:

Arbitrary arrests, disappearances, torture, maltreatment, threats and expulsions are continuing and that the methods of repression are assuming new forms [and] educational and cultural rights, freedom of opinion and expression and trade union freedoms continue to be violated and are subject to increasingly restrictive provisions.

Finally, there was another unanimously adopted resolution, this one in support of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. In that resolution, we all stated how conscious we were of the high responsibility of parliaments in ensuring that human rights and fundamental freedoms were fully enjoyed in our respective countries. We also resolved that our respective parliaments should give special consideration to appropriate measures to further promote mutual understanding and international peace and co-operation, and the effective enjoyment of human rights by everyone, without distinction of any kind.

Because the subject of the behaviour of the Israeli authorities in the occupied Arab territories was placed on the agenda for the conference without previous study in Canberra, draft resolutions were accepted until the close of the plenary debate. Approximately forty spokesmen participated in this debate, including Mr. Al Khaledi, an observer representing the Palestine National Council.

● (1500)

From listening to some of the speeches you would have thought that Israel was operating concentration and labour camps the like of those in Siberia; that everything done by the Israelis has a sinister motive; and that because they refuse to be intimidated by the hammer and sickle, nothing of any value is ever done by the Jews around the world. Pretty heady stuff all this. To look at any news report of what went on, you would think this was a gathering of righteous folk agreeing that they should do their best to avoid international strife; make super-human efforts to disarm before they end up blowing themselves into oblivion; and get together to do something about those monsters who are still denying people human rights. Well, it was not such a gathering; and that is what makes it all so alarming. Once again western nations allowed themselves to be used. Once again nations for whom peace, freedom and human rights still have a clear meaning allowed themselves to be outsmarted.

Again, as usual, the Soviet bloc made its way into the camp of the west, victimizing the uninformed with their propaganda. Here again, we allowed them to line up on our side in condemning gross offences against human rights, as though they themselves were Simon pure, as though they themselves were not guilty now and in the past of similar and even worse atrocities. It never ceases to amaze me how they can manage to speak out of both sides of their mouths. And it never ceases to depress me how naive and gullible we can be in dealing with them. How we could allow them to sign a resolution condemning regimes that do not ensure their people basic human rights without someone pointing to their guilt in this area is beyond me. How we could tolerate their posturing, their bad acting, their feigned innocence and allow these speeches to go unchallenged, I simply cannot understand.

Surely to God we are all aware of the thousands of dissidents in communist prisons, slave camps and insane asylums. Surely we cannot disregard what we are told by people like Vladimir Bukovsky, a Soviet scientist and ten-year victim of Soviet slave camps, about what goes on behind the Iron Curtain. Surely no one doubts what Amnesty International tells us about the treatment of so-called dissidents behind the Iron Curtain. And is there anyone who is not aware of the ways and means that were used by the communists to seize power in the countries that now make up the Soviet bloc?

The way opponents of the government are treated in Chile is horrendous. The South African policy of apartheid is unquestionably supremacist and, for that reason, unacceptable. All these things are true. But to allow countries which have specialized for years in arbitrary arrests, disappearances, torture, maltreatment, threats and expulsions of people who criticize the government, who persecute Christians and Jews, who wrote the book on how to establish and maintain a reign of terror—to allow these people to go unchallenged, when they hypocritically support a motion condemning offences against human rights, is itself obscene.

What about the Helsinki Accords of 1975? What about the increased civil liberties the people behind the Iron Curtain were to get in exchange for our relegating to Soviet control those European nations invaded by the communists after World War II? Well, they were never provided. The Helsinki Accords were just another piece of paper to the communists. Basic human rights, as we understand them, are still being denied in communist countries. Freedom of speech, when it means freedom to criticize the government's performance, is still anathema. The jails, insane asylums and work camps are full of people who thought Helsinki had been the starting point for a more relaxed policy on freedom of expression.

It beats me why western nations are so reluctant to work toward the sponsoring of resolutions calling for the communist countries to provide basic human rights to their own people before they have the temerity to criticize other regimes for failing to do so. As a matter of fact, I cannot understand why we do not sponsor resolutions offering moral and other support to liberation groups behind the Iron Curtain. If any people deserve to be liberated, surely these are among them. Yet, not a word is spoken. Nobody wants to give offence. The enslavers of the forties, fifties and sixties have become respectable. No one dares take them to task for their cruel and inhuman behaviour. We are the consummate compromisers. We did not want to risk any hot wars after World War II finished, so we stood by and watched as the communists enslaved dozens of innocent countries. And now we want to save our conscience by pretending that they are really not a disreputable lot of megalomaniacs. So we allow them to carry off charades like those they put on in these international meetings of nations. It is all very alarming. The symptoms are there of our own weakness, a weakness that will eventually destroy us.

The same applies in the area of disarmament and détente. Here again we hang on every word uttered by the communist-bloc nations. We are like seven-year-olds struggling to believe in Santa Claus. Logic tells us it is not so, but we are so afraid of the consequences that we continue to believe.

Brezhnev had this to say to the Politburo in 1973:

We communists have got to string along with the capitalists for a while. We need their credits, their agriculture and their technology. But we are going to continue massive military programs and by the mid-80s we will be in a position to return to a much more aggressive foreign policy designed to gain the upper hand in our relationship with the west.

Or perhaps you would prefer what Pravda quoted him as saying last year:

Peaceful co-existence does not mean the end of the struggle of the two world powers. The struggle between the proletariat and the bourgeoisie, between world socialism and imperialism, will be waged right up to the complete and final victory of communism on a world scale.

And so we go to Bulgaria and sign resolutions on the relaxation of international tensions and progress in the field of disarmament. No one dares bring up what an accursed hypocrisy this constitutes on the part of the communists when the boss-man of the Soviet Union, their lord and master, has made statements like those I have just read to you. Nobody dares to raise the fact that the communists have repeatedly violated the 1972 Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty. These violations western governments ignored until 1976 when the information media began to ask embarrassing questions.

● (1510)

Dr. Henry Kissinger made himself the spokesman for the west. He was not about to give offence either, because he might have been accused of lacking understanding, and Nobel Peace Prizes are not won by men who lack understanding. Dr. Kissinger explained in velvety double-talk that the Soviet Union had not violated any specific provisions, but he did acknowledge that they took advantage of certain ambiguities.

What he did not say is that those ambiguities are always written into east-west pacts. They are written in at Soviet insistence, because they make it easier for them to violate the agreements. They can thumb their noses at the pacts they have signed and still appear to be fine upstanding international citizens, all with the help of those clever little ambiguities that we allow them to write into these pacts. International communism continues to use every device imaginable to further its ends. When the situation calls for lies and deceit, that is what they will use. When it calls for war and terror, they will use that too.

So much for sincerity. Détente, you see, is a revolutionary tactic, designed primarily to lull the non-communist world into thinking that the Soviets have abandoned their designs on the west. Well, it just is not so. The sooner we wake up and realize what they are up to the better off we will be. They are using us and we are letting them. It is time we realized this and stood up to them.

These international organizations can only be of value if nations meet to speak the unvarnished truth to one another. It does no one any good to scold the little bullies, and play up to the big ones. We must relocate our spines and stand up to all offenders. We must be consistent in our criticism. We can only begin to resolve our differences when no party is allowed to think that it is fooling the other; to think that either it does not realize it or is petrified of doing anything about it. We must change our attitude at these meetings, or they will not only become useless but positively dangerous to peace and human rights where these still exist today.

[Senator Bélisle.]

Honourable senators, I appreciate being a part of these Canadian parliamentary delegations. I am thankful for the opportunities to see first hand what is going on in the field of international relations. Our delegation was ably led by the member of Parliament for Ottawa West, Mr. Lloyd Francis, and those who composed the delegation put in long hours of listening and voicing our country's views in trying to arrive at something of value.

If I have been harsh in my criticism, it is because I do not like to see us being used. The delegation did its best, but it was hampered by the official Canadian policy in these matters. It is a policy that is naive, and one that will hopefully undergo serious change in the proximate future.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of Senator Bélisle. Is it correct to say that there was no resolution or amendment to a resolution calling attention to the denial of basic human rights in countries other than those named?

Senator Bélisle: That is right. If you peruse the report made by the executive secretary to the Canadian delegation you will see that we were not allowed to do so.

Senator Grosart: May I ask a supplementary question? Is it true that the Canadian delegation remained silent, that they did not bring forward resolutions, and that they did not suggest amendments to some of these resolutions to which you referred?

Senator Bélisle: The Canadian delegation made many speeches and representations, but were divided in their votes most of the time.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I should like to comment on the speech just made by Senator Bélisle.

First of all, I congratulate him on his frankness in making what is, according to my recollection, the first thorough criticism of the operation of one of these inter-parliamentary associations. I have not at any time had the privilege of attending an Inter-Parliamentary Union conference, but I must say that I am amazed to find the trend that he has just described in an institution that calls itself "parliamentary." I have some knowledge of the history of the organization, and at one time the stress was on "parliamentary" in the sense we know the word.

Senator Bélisle is certainly to be complimented on the forthright manner in which he has criticized this parliamentary association for what would appear to be a drift in a direction which would bring to the fore the whole question of Canadian participation in it. Perhaps Senator Bélisle will carry his criticism further, and add to our information. I hope he does, because it seems to me lamentable, almost disgraceful, that a Canadian delegation should be associated with the kind of carelessness in respect of such important matters as appear to have been the theme of the discussions concerning human rights.

Senator Bélisle: If Senator Grosart had been listening, he would have realized that I did not criticize the delegation. My criticism was directed at the communists and the way they used the people who attended this conference.

Senator Grosart: So that I am not misunderstood, I will emphasize that I was not, for one minute, suggesting that Senator Bélisle had criticized the Canadian delegation. I was merely drawing to the attention of the Senate the fact that he did tell us that the Canadian delegation—and the same can be said of the other delegations, if I understood him correctly—did not introduce a resolution calling attention to the denial of basic human rights in countries other than the four he mentioned. And those four countries constitute an amazing group because of the great differences in approach that might be taken in respect of their attitudes towards human rights. As I understood Senator Bélisle, those countries are Chile, Israel, Rhodesia and South Africa. Surely, to place those four countries in the same basket by resolution of an international organization, to which Canada is attached, is impossible and ludicrous.

● (1520)

I repeat, I am in no way criticizing the Canadian delegation. I was not in attendance, and I am not aware of what opportunities there might have been to present resolutions. The opportunities to present resolutions differ in all of these international organizations. My purpose in rising was to compliment Senator Bélisle on bringing this matter to the attention of the Senate. I hope he will carry it much further.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might put a clarifying question to Senator Bélisle.

In your response to Senator Grosart's question as to whether or not a resolution was proposed by the Canadian delegation to broaden this group to include some of the communist-bloc countries, you said, as I understand it, that you were not permitted to do so by the secretariat, or something to that effect.

Senator Bélisle: No, my reference to the secretariat was in terms of urging my colleagues to read the report. Of course, it does not include all of the speeches that were made over the course of the 10-day conference, but it does contain a summation of those speeches.

Senator van Roggen: Was any move made by the Canadian delegation to increase the number of countries being condemned pursuant to the resolution in question?

Senator Bélisle: To be precise, some of the speeches made by members of the Canadian delegation supported the criticism I have outlined.

On motion of Senator Petten, for Senator Olson, debate adjourned.

NORTH ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY

TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL SESSION, PARIS, FRANCE—DEBATE
CONTINUED

On the Order for Thursday, 8th December, 1977:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator McDonald calling the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-third Annual Session of the North Atlantic Assembly, held in Paris, France from 18th to 24th September, 1977, and in particular to the discussions and proceedings of the Session and the participation therein of the delegation from Canada.—(Honourable Senator Austin).

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that item No. 2 on the Order Paper for tomorrow, December 8, be brought forward now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Paul Yuzyk: Honourable senators, I understand that Senator Austin is willing to yield in my favour. That being so, I wonder if I might be permitted to speak now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Yuzyk: Honourable senators, my remarks will be of a different tone from those of Senator Bélisle. However, I commend him for his frank and forthright statements, to which I subscribe.

When I first attended an annual session of the North Atlantic Assembly in Bonn, West Germany, in 1972, the discussion centred on the uselessness of the Committee on Education, Cultural Affairs and Information, and there were proposals to liquidate it. I was one of the few who took a strong stand against this suggestion. In the meantime, the usefulness of this committee has become evident, particularly since the Helsinki Agreement of 1975. Because of the phenomenal growth of the human rights movement in all parts of the world, and particularly in the democratic countries, the Committee on Education, Cultural Affairs and Information has become important in the deliberations of the North Atlantic Assembly.

It is only right that we should be reminded that NATO is a defensive alliance of democratic states that are dedicated to the principles of freedom and democracy as enunciated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights of the United Nations—whose anniversary we shall be observing on December 10—and the principles in the Helsinki Final Act, which is being reviewed in the Follow-up Conference in Belgrade, Yugoslavia.

My report to the Senate today will highlight the important developments related to the work of this committee.

Lord Lyell of the United Kingdom, the general rapporteur, presented an excellent report, which was approved by the committee. The introduction surveyed several important Alliance developments, positive and negative, since the Williamsburg conference in the United States last year.

The largest section of the report deals with the human rights movement and President Carter. The unexpected emergence of this new champion of human rights and the convening of the preliminary meeting of the Helsinki Follow-up Conference in Belgrade have been the two most important developments in fields that concern the committee. President Carter's strong public support of human rights has raised this issue to a new level of importance in international affairs, forming a major component in his foreign policy and administration. This policy is characterized by strength, consistency and flexibility.

The report noted that the Carter policy has had positive results in actually easing repression, as well as the notion that it may have intensified the repression of dissidents. Finally, it noted that this policy has greatly aided the committee's work, and the publicity which it generated has had important educational functions.

President Carter's human rights policy has evoked mixed official and unofficial reactions. The most negative reactions have come from the U.S.S.R., which accuses the President of the United States of meddling in the internal affairs of that country and warns him that his policy is harmful to détente.

Lord Lyell's report describes some of the reactions and responses of western countries and gave several human rights policy suggestions for Alliance countries. Despite some public differences, Alliance countries have reportedly co-operated well at the Belgrade preliminary meeting. The report concludes with a strong endorsement of President Carter's human rights efforts and policy.

Chapter III of the report was devoted to religion in the Soviet Union and in Eastern Europe. The committee expressed concern with freedom of religion in the communist-bloc countries. There is reliable evidence that in the U.S.S.R. and Rumania religious persecution has intensified since the signing of the Helsinki Declaration, which is dealt with in Mr. Gontikas' report of the Sub-Committee on the Free Flow of Information and People. This is supplemented by information from Radio Liberty and the Moscow, Ukrainian and Lithuanian Public Groups to Promote the Implementation of the Helsinki Accords, most of whose members have been arrested and imprisoned for long terms. For example, Rudenko, chairman of the Ukrainian group, was sentenced to seven years of imprisonment and five years of exile, while Tykhy, the secretary, was sentenced to a 10-year prison term and five years in exile. It appears that church-state relations in Poland and Yugoslavia have eased up somewhat.

● (1530)

Lord Lyell concludes that Carter's human rights policy is the single most important development since the committee began directing its attention to this issue. This support "demonstrates that NATO is not only a military and political alliance but an alliance for which a profound concern is the freedom and dignity of the individual human being."

[Senator Yuzk.]

Since the Helsinki Accords of 1975, the Committee on Education, Cultural Affairs and Information has received a new impetus which has considerably increased its workload. As a result, it was decided at the Copenhagen meeting in 1975 to establish the Subcommittee on the Free Flow of Information and People, with authority to hold meetings several times a year. Last year I was elected a member of this subcommittee at our annual meeting in Williamsburg, about which I reported to this chamber.

The rapporteur of this subcommittee, Mr. C. Gontikas of Greece, presented an excellent report to the whole committee, which was unanimously adopted. The report reviewed the reactions to the Helsinki Final Act, ranging from elation to cynicism. Dissident activities in the Warsaw Pact countries have proven the importance of the Final Act to all who uphold human rights behind the Iron Curtain. The immediate highly visible result was to stimulate the formation of official and unofficial groups to monitor implementation. The report describes the activities of the unofficial groups in the Soviet-bloc countries which have documented and protested violations of the Helsinki human rights provisions. Official monitoring groups have played down these violations and have been emphasizing Basket III areas, where some progress, however slight, has been made.

The Gontikas report in Chapter III examines the attitudes and complaints about the implementation of Basket III. The present attitudes in the west convey a deep dissatisfaction at the slow pace of progress in, and an uncertainty about, its implementation, and question whether this emphasis on Basket III has eroded détente—an attitude which is sometimes described as "positive skepticism." The west complains about the slow progress of implementation but appreciates even the slightest progress. In particular, the west complains about communist selective implementation, and the continued jamming of Radio Liberty and some BBC broadcasts.

It was noted in the report that attitudes on the part of the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe have changed considerably since the signing of the Final Act. Because of dissident activities and western support for the dissidents, the earlier attitude of "victory achieved" through the CSCE at first became defensive and then aggressive, with emphasis on the deficiencies and failures of western democracies. The Soviet Union and its satellites now contend that the west never really understood the principles of the Final Act, and by overemphasizing Basket III and through support of the dissidents is interfering in their internal affairs. The report analyzes certain ambiguities and tensions within the Final Act and the key problems of selective implementation and differing interpretations which require clarification at the coming Belgrade conference. Yet the slight progress made gives grounds for cautious hope. Hard negotiating will be necessary. Mere confrontation and mutual recriminations would only retard future implementation and further erode the process of détente. Gontikas states that strategies for the Belgrade conference are beyond parliamentarians' control. However, he believes that parliamentarians in some countries such as the U.S.A. and Canada, through their participation, can influence government policy.

The report of the Subcommittee on the Free Flow of Information and People, in the concluding section entitled "Beyond Belgrade", welcomes the decision of the signatories at the Belgrade preparatory meeting to hold another follow-up conference. Judging by the statements of dissidents, monitoring activities have been helpful and even essential. The rapporteur quotes the words of the Ukrainian Helsinki monitoring group:

Only the support of world opinion can protect our Group from merciless reprisals. If world opinion does not lessen its moral support, if the Western news media focus more attention on the struggle for human rights in the U.S.S.R., then the coming decade will bring great democratic changes in our country.

The deliberations of the members of the Committee on Education, Cultural Affairs and Information focused on the interpretation of two important principles of the Helsinki Final Act of the CSCE, Principle VI, non-intervention in internal affairs, and Principle VII, respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms including the freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, both of which are found in Basket I. There was a discussion on Basket III entitled "Co-operation in Humanitarian and Other Fields," dealing with the problems of family ties, reunification of families, marriage between citizens of different states, conditions of tourism, meetings among young people and the broad field of information, including the improvement of working conditions for journalists as well as co-operation and exchanges in the fields of culture and education.

The following resolution on human rights was presented by the committee and unanimously adopted by the Assembly. Preceded by a long preamble, it urges that member countries:

First, thoroughly review, and firmly protest at the Belgrade Conference, Soviet and East European violations of Principle VII and the slow implementation of Basket III, without letting the Conference become a series of mutual recriminations;

Second, work at Belgrade toward a clarification and common understanding of Principle VI on internal interference;

● (1540)

Third, work at Belgrade toward establishing specific timetables and agenda of implementation for various Basket III provisions;

Fourth, appoint special groups to monitor their own as well as Soviet and East European compliance with Basket III and the human rights provisions of the Final Act.

There were two other resolutions. One dealt with the jamming of broadcasts by the Soviet and East European countries, in particular Radio Liberty, Radio Free Europe, Deutsche Welle and Radio in the American Sector (R.I.A.S.), and urged a forceful protest at the Belgrade conference and strong insistence that this jamming be terminated. The other resolution urged member governments to consider the appointment of parliamentarians to their Belgrade delegations, following the example of the United States. Canada immediately complied with this resolution. Four members of the Senate, including myself, and eight members of the House of Commons, have been or still are participating in the Canadian delegation at Belgrade, which will probably continue into the next year.

I am happy to report that the Canadian presence and role in the Committee on Education, Cultural Affairs and Information had never been as prominent as it was at the Assembly meeting in Paris last September. Ralph Stewart, M.P., was unanimously elected chairman of the committee and I was unanimously elected the rapporteur of the Sub-Committee on the Free Flow of Information and People.

My main task as rapporteur of this sub-committee is the preparation of the annual report to be presented at the Twenty-fourth Session of the North Atlantic Assembly, which is scheduled to be held in Lisbon, Portugal, in November of next year. My other responsibility is the publication of The Bulletin which monitors on behalf of the 15 NATO states the implementation of Basket III of the Helsinki Final Act. Recently issue No. 5, October 1977, was released. Canadian activities figure quite prominently in The Bulletin because of the fine monitoring efforts of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association and the recently established Canadian Parliamentary Helsinki Group, chaired by the Honourable Martin O'Connell, M.P.

I shall do my best to continue the excellent work of my predecessors. In our capacity as representatives of participating states in the Helsinki Agreement, we must continue to focus our attention and research, in a spirit of frankness and mutual understanding, on the fact that while post-Helsinki developments have fallen short of the high expectations of many who hoped that it would be an easy step toward security and co-operation in Europe, they have definitely proved that the Final Act is not just another piece of paper.

Senator Bosa: Would the honourable senator permit me a question?

Senator Yuzyk: Yes.

Senator Bosa: What approach does the honourable senator consider would be the most effective in achieving the aspirations of the West in connection with the implementation of Basket III of the Helsinki Agreement? Does he consider President Carter's approach of having a confrontation with the communist bloc to be more effective than the softer approach which Canada has used in the past in trying to obtain family unification as well as the other objectives set out in the various baskets of the Helsinki Agreement?

Senator Yuzyk: As the honourable senator is well aware, the present Canadian government follows the policy of silent diplomacy. However, the government has allowed delegations to take a strong stance. All of our delegations that have gone to NATO have been unanimous in adopting a strong stand regarding violations of the Helsinki Agreement by the Soviet-bloc countries, and therefore we are pursuing a sort of two-pronged approach in this matter.

At Belgrade we are in line with all the NATO countries as well as with the stand taken by President Carter, particularly as expressed by Ambassador Goldberg, who represents the United States, and the stand taken by the Commission of Congress that is attending the Belgrade conference itself.

We are discussing with the leaders of the Soviet-bloc countries the fact that those violations are taking place, that they have obligations toward the Helsinki Agreement and that they should honour those obligations when it comes to the reunification of families. That is one matter upon which Canada has insisted and about which she is now speaking very loudly; and I am most happy because of that.

I believe that hard negotiations are necessary. But we must also take a strong stand. I hope that—we have been discussing this matter in the Canadian Parliamentary Helsinki Group—the Prime Minister of Canada will take a strong stand on human rights before the Belgrade follow-up conference concludes.

On motion of Senator Petten, for Senator Austin, debate adjourned.

INDUSTRY

SUPPLIES OF AMERICAN COAL TO CANADA—QUESTION ANSWERED

Leave having been given to revert to Question Period:

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, earlier this afternoon I promised to bring to the chamber additional information with respect to the possible effect of the U.S. coal strike on the Canadian steel industry and Canadian hydro plants. With leave, I would like to make a brief statement now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Perrault: I have received information from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to the effect that Canadian companies would appear to be in no trouble at all as a result of the U.S. coal strike. The strike was anticipated by both Canadian steel companies and those entities involved in hydro-electric production. In stockpiling for their winter requirements they stockpiled more than usual in anticipation of a possible labour dispute in the United States, and there is no possibility of difficulty until at least the spring, and perhaps not then.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, December 8, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of operations under the Farm Improvement Loans Act for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 13 of the said Act, Chapter F-3, R.S.C., 1970.

Report on the administration of the Small Businesses Loans Act for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 11 of the said Act, Chapter S-10, R.S.C., 1970.

INCOME TAX

FIRST REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON ADVANCE STUDY TABLED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, I wish to table the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce entitled, "The First Report on the Advance Study of the Budget Resolutions respecting Income Tax or any bill or other matter relating thereto." I would ask that this report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent record of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix "A".)

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit while the Senate is sitting on Tuesday next, December 13, 1977, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday next, December 12, 1977, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Honourable senators, before the question is put I should like to give a summary of our work for next week. We propose to meet in the chamber on Monday evening and again on Tuesday evening, leaving Tuesday free for committee meetings. This has been the practice when we are approaching a long adjournment.

The supply bill, covering supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1978, is expected to pass in the other place by 10 o'clock tonight. If permission is granted we should like to proceed with second reading of this bill Monday evening.

Senator Hayden has just given notice that on Monday he will call the attention of the Senate to the first report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the advance study of the budget resolutions respecting income tax or any bill or other matter relating thereto.

We shall also be continuing next week with our discussion on Bill S-4, an act to implement the international convention for safe containers. Senator Petten will move second reading of that bill this afternoon. In addition, some time next week we shall receive from the House of Commons Bill C-11, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds. Taking into consideration what it would appear will come to us next week, it may also be necessary for the Senate to sit next Friday.

● (1410)

The committee schedule for next week, as far as can be determined at this time, is as follows: On Tuesday at 3.30 p.m. there will be a meeting of the Transport and Communications Committee on Bill C-3, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada. In attendance at that time will be the Honourable Otto Lang. At 3 p.m. there will be a meeting of the subcommittee of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, to hear witnesses on its inquiry into such experiences in prenatal life and early childhood as may cause personality disorders and criminal behaviour in later life. The Agriculture Committee will also meet on Tuesday to continue its study on the Canadian beef industry. The time for that meeting has not as yet been decided. At 8 o'clock on Tuesday evening the Honourable Mr. Chrétien, Minister of Finance, will be a witness before the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee with respect to its advance study of the budget resolutions respecting income tax. Senator Hayden has informed me that a final report on that advance study will be tabled in the Senate on Wednesday next. It is also expected that the Selection Committee will meet on Tuesday for the purpose of selecting senators to be appointed to the Special Committee of the Senate on Retirement Age Policies.

The Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee will meet at 9.30 a.m. on Wednesday to give further consideration to Bill S-2, to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act. The Agriculture Committee will meet when the Senate rises on Wednesday.

At 9.30 a.m. on Thursday there will be an in camera meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance with respect to its study of the estimates of the Department of Public Works. The Transport and Communications Committee will meet at the same hour to hear witnesses on Bill C-3, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada. At 11 a.m. there will be an in camera meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. As well, the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments is planning a meeting for Thursday, but the time for that has not as yet been set.

As honourable senators can see, we have a very heavy schedule of work for next week, which is why we will have to come back on Monday evening. It will also probably be necessary to sit on Friday of next week.

Motion agreed to.

YUKON TERRITORY NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

ABSENCE OF SHIELDS OF ARMS ON DOORS LEADING TO SENATE CHAMBER—QUESTION

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I have noticed that the shields of arms of the Yukon Territory and of the Northwest Territories are not displayed on the doors leading into the Senate chamber. If one looks at a map of Canada, it can be readily seen that all of the provinces hang just below the territories, and they are held there by a very thin line. I do not like to threaten anyone, but if our shields of arms are not displayed it would not be very difficult for either Senator Adams or myself to simply cut that line and let all of you fall into the United States.

Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Lucier: We should like to have our shields of arms displayed with those of the various provinces.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the distinguished senator representing the Yukon (Senator Lucier) has made a very valid point. I know it is the unanimous view of honourable senators that we proceed as quickly as possible to have the shields of arms of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories placed on the doors leading to the chamber.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[Senator Langlois.]

SPORTS

TRIBUTES TO HOCKEY STAR GORDIE HOWE

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, I should like to direct the following question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate: Would he not believe it appropriate that he, on behalf of the Senate, express today our admiration for one of the greatest athletes Canada has ever produced, Gordie Howe, on the occasion of his scoring his one thousandth goal of his professional hockey career?

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, as you all know, Gordie Howe came from Floral, Saskatchewan. It should be made clear for the record that poor old Floral was just a little elevator community a mile or two outside the city of Saskatoon, but with the tremendous growth of that vibrant community we are almost out there now.

Gordie Howe received his education in Saskatoon and learned to play hockey there. As you are well aware, some of the very best stickhandlers in Parliament have come from that area, so I certainly appreciate Senator McElman's remarks.

Senator Lang: Right wingers.

Senator Buckwold: Right wingers and left wingers, but they are mostly "left wingers" out there.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I should like to say, with respect to that distinguished craftsman of hockey, Gordie Howe, that he demonstrates on the ice that which is demonstrated in this chamber every day—the expert's ability to make an outstanding contribution in his own field of endeavour.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

DOMESTIC AIR CHARTER RIGHTS—QUESTIONS

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a question concerning the recent decision of the Canadian Transport Commission to give very limited charter rights to Air Canada and CP Air for domestic flights in the coming year. The number has been limited to 50—that is, 25 for each company—and I have no objection to that. I do, however, vehemently object to the fact that another company, Wardair, which has offered flights at a much lower rate, has been denied this privilege. In view of the fact that the government has said over and over again that Canadians should have every opportunity to see their country, I feel that decision of the CTC should be carefully reviewed.

I would ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate to discuss this matter with his colleagues, and report back to this chamber on the possibility of such a review, and the possibility of a broadening of the charter rights.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I must take that question as notice. I shall endeavour to provide further information.

Senator Greene: When the Leader of the Government is looking into the denial of the Wardair application, would he also undertake to ask his cabinet colleagues to review the position of the regional airlines, and ascertain whether they can be given a wider mandate under the present ruling of the Canadian Transport Commission?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I shall endeavour to include a statement on that matter in the information which I hope to provide.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I would like you to welcome Dr. Bernhard Vogel, former President of the Bundesrat—which is, as you know, the German Senate—and now Vice-President of the Bundesrat and Minister President of Rhineland-Palatinate, and his party, who are honouring us on their visit to Canada. I would also like you to welcome His Excellency the Ambassador of the Federal Republic of Germany.

SAFE CONTAINERS CONVENTION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. William J. Patten moved the second reading of Bill S-4, to implement the International Convention for Safe Containers.

● (1420)

He said: Honourable senators, Bill S-4 is necessary because of the increasing use of technology that has allowed us to develop more effective means of transporting freight within Canada and internationally. One of the most important breakthroughs in this respect has been the development of containers. These range from a simple box with doors at one end, similar to a transport truck-trailer, to specialized containers with removable roofs, tank facilities, and means of freezing and heating.

Containers make possible the transportation of cargo with a minimum of handling by sea, rail and road. The use of containers is responsible for the development of new types of ships, railway cars, trucks and specialized equipment.

Today we are increasingly concerned with the construction of container terminals at our major ports. As the use of containers has grown, so has the need to ensure the safety and uniformity of the international container traffic. With the movement of container goods from one form of transport to another, and from one country to another, it has become increasingly evident that some form of international safety regulation is necessary.

The International Convention for Safe Containers was adopted by the United Nations in 1972, and the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO) was named to administer the convention due to the predominance of the marine transportation mode in container transport. Canada has been a member of IMCO since its inception, and was one of the 92 member nations to sign the convention at that time, subject, of course, to ratification by Parliament at a later date.

On September 6 of this year the required 10 member nations ratified the convention, and it came into force internationally. It now remains for us, as well as for our principal trading partners—the United States, Great Britain and Japan—to follow suit. Those three countries are expected to ratify the convention shortly.

The main concern in the development of this convention was to safeguard human life in the handling, stacking and transporting of containers. It is imperative that the standards for container safety not be left to individual nations, but that they be international in nature to ensure that the same high standard of safety will be applied uniformly.

The containers that will be affected by this legislation are those of the International Standards Organization (ISO), the type used in intermodal international transport. The convention does not apply to containers specially designed for air transport. It allows for additional safety requirements for containers specially designed for the transport of dangerous goods and bulk liquids. Under the convention, safety approval plates will be affixed by owners to containers meeting the approved criteria.

The owner of a container will be responsible for maintaining it in a safe condition. If there is evidence that the condition of a container may create a risk, the owner will be required to take it out of service until it can be restored to a safe condition. Container owners with head offices in Canada will be required to have their containers examined by a government-approved procedure at regular intervals. That procedure will include a verification of the safety approval plate, a check on the re-examination date for the container, and an examination of the condition of the container. In Canada, inspection of containers will be carried out by Coast Guard marine surveyors, the Canadian Transport Commission, rail safety inspectors, civil aeronautics safety inspectors, and customs inspectors.

Following passage of this legislation, regulations will be promulgated to provide for implementation of the convention, including a system for safety approval of new and existing international freight containers; a system for approval of container maintenance programs submitted by Canadian container owners for containers used in international transport; government controls to ensure adherence to regulations; and the establishment of minimum repair standards.

Honourable senators, at this point I would assure you that both this legislation and the regulations that will follow its passage have been developed after a high degree of consultation with the container industry in this country. In addition, the government has co-ordinated its efforts with other government departments and agencies.

By co-ordinating the convention's safety approval requirements with existing industry practice, we will be able to keep down the cost of the additional safety requirements. The additional cost will be assumed by the container owner, and will include the cost of safety approval plates and periodic re-examination of containers used in international trade.

Although it will result in additional expenditures for container owners, it is small compared with the cost if Canadian cargo is held up in foreign ports due to the non-uniform application of safety standards.

I should point out as well that we have limited the number of safety regulations as much as possible in order to aid the movement of international containers. We have no desire to subject the transportation industry to move regulations, but we believe these are necessary and are preferable to the proliferation of numerous arbitrary national schemes which could develop in the absence of any international agreement.

Under this bill, the Minister of Transport will have authority to direct an inquiry into any accident or incident involving a container. However, the number of accidents involving containers in the past has been small, and we hope that good record will continue. This is, in fact, one of the many advantages of container freight traffic. There is increased speed of delivery associated with containers, and this has substantially reduced the incidence of damage and theft.

Honourable senators, having regard for our vital international trade, container transportation is of tremendous importance to Canada. Therefore, it is essential that we ensure a high level of safety in the handling, stacking and transporting of containers. Canada has participated in the drafting of the International Convention for Safe Containers, and it is in our best interest to proceed with the enabling legislation contained in Bill S-4.

Honourable senators, if this bill receives second reading and it is the wish of honourable senators, I will move that it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to say a few words with respect to this bill? My original intention was to ask a question, but I would like to do a little more than that.

First of all, I believe this to be the type of legislation that Parliament would welcome very much. It seems to me very sensible because the maintenance of proper standards, as the technology of shipping goods by container develops, is, in my opinion, of great consequence. However, I am speaking now primarily to the jurisdictional aspects. I believe there to be no doubt about the power of Parliament to ratify this treaty, which deals primarily with the use of containers in international trade, but I wonder what the implications are for interprovincial trade in Canada. Will the act and the regulations thereunder affect—and if so, to what extent—the use of containers in interprovincial trade?

● (1430)

I would think, without having done any research on the matter, that the Parliament of Canada has the authority to deal with this issue as it affects interprovincial trade within Canada. But I also ask whether—and I hope the committee will deal with this question—there are any provincial implications in the sense that the jurisdiction of the provinces is being invaded in any way as a result of this. If it is, I wonder whether that invasion can be avoided by agreement or otherwise.

[Senator Petten]

My other point is, I think, an obvious one. It concerns the use of containers in intra-provincial trade. In that area, I would think the jurisdiction is likely to be primarily provincial, and perhaps there is a spill-over problem once you try to regulate federally the use of containers in intra-provincial trade—that is, trade inside any of the provinces of Canada.

I point out these things, in a rather amateurish way, because I think they may be of some consequence for the committee if the bill should be referred to it.

Senator Petten: There are two officials from the department in the gallery, Senator Connolly, and I am sure they have taken note of your questions and suggestions. They will certainly be dealt with in committee.

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I would like to direct a question to Senator Petten.

With regard to the question raised by Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) in respect to extra-provincial transport of inter-modal containers, has Part III of the National Transportation Act been proclaimed yet?

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, I would have to check and find out. I feel that the honourable senator, who was involved in transportation for many years, is himself more qualified to answer that than I. That is perhaps begging the question. I do not know the answer, but I shall do my best to find out.

Hon. J. J. Greene: Honourable senators, to continue the debate so ably led by Senator Petten, I am concerned with the converse of the point raised by Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), namely, that this bill not confer the right on non-Canadian entities to commence and maintain actions based on this treaty in our courts. We had a pregnant example of this in 1932, I believe it was, when Canada entered into a treaty regarding the use of the word “champagne”. This was a very important matter in the Niagara region, which I had the honour of representing in the other place. Many years later, the French champagne interests launched a suit in the Canadian courts, which suit was based on the treaty and on the Canadian statute which implemented the treaty. The Supreme Court of Canada, in its wisdom, found it to be a sufficient base of action. The French wine interests succeeded in that action, and the ludicrous result was that our wine makers could not sell champagne under the name of “Canadian Champagne”.

In effect, we have a precedent that a treaty, implemented by an act of the Parliament of Canada, can form the basis for a non-Canadian commercial interest to found an action in Canadian courts. I would hate to think we have not learned from that precedent. From Senator Petten’s review of the bill, it seems to me there is the possibility that some foreign interest could found a cause of action in our courts based upon the treaty, and thus gain an advantage over Canadian shippers or business concerns.

I hope that the officials from the department will take a look at this, and that the committee will carefully consider the drafting of this bill to make sure that it does not give our foreign competitors the right to create a cause of action in Canadian courts, based on the wording of the treaty, as in the champagne case.

Senator Petten: I am sure Senator Greene will make sure that that point is raised in committee. I am sure he will be there to pursue the matter further.

On motion of Senator Choquette, for Senator Smith (Colchester), debate adjourned.

NORTH ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY

TWENTY-THIRD ANNUAL SESSION, PARIS, FRANCE—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the inquiry of Senator McDonald calling the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-third Annual Session of the North Atlantic Assembly, held in Paris, France, from 18th to 24th September, 1977, and in particular to the discussions and proceedings of the Session and the participation therein of the delegation from Canada.

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, the Canadian Parliament was represented by a delegation of 17 members when the 23rd Annual Session of the North Atlantic Assembly met in Paris from September 18 to 24 of this year. The Senate group was composed of five, namely, Senators Jacques Flynn, A. H. McDonald, J. M. Godfrey, Paul Yuzyk and myself. Each was assigned to different aspects of the session. Senator Flynn was placed on the Political Committee, where his pre-eminent talents would naturally be shown to best advantage. Senator McDonald was on the Military Committee, where he has served with highest distinction for a number of years, and where his interest and leadership have earned him the signal honour of being elected rapporteur. Senator Godfrey, new like myself to the Assembly, represented Canada as a member of the Scientific and Technical Committee, and the Senate received his most interesting report on November 29 last. Senator Yuzyk is our highly regarded representative on the Committee on Education, Cultural Affairs and Information, and is now rapporteur of the Sub-Committee on the Free Flow of Information and People. His work and that of his committee were very well outlined when he spoke to us yesterday. As for myself, I was asked to become a member of the Economic Committee, and at the end of the session was elected to the Joint Sub-Committee on Energy Policy.

● (1440)

The 23rd Session of the North Atlantic Assembly is the first which I have had the opportunity to attend, and I would like to make a few comments about the experience. While for several years I have read and talked with people about NATO, the Warsaw Pact, and the significance for Canada of the NATO grouping of many of the world's leading industrial, economic and democratic countries, nothing crystallizes more its vital role in our domestic and foreign affairs than meeting face to face in debate and dialogue with parliamentarians from countries sharing a continent with the Soviet super-power. Defence is neither remote nor academic for them. They live in an atmosphere where at every moment they have to risk their political and social stability, and their national, and perhaps personal, lives. They talk with an urgency and an immediacy that hits at complacency and demolishes any incipient desire for isolation or non-involvement. Europe is Canada's front line of defence. I don't think I will ever lose sight of that reality; nor should any of us.

For as long as I have been in public life, I have supported the concept of a collective security arrangement for Canada which links our defence with Europe and with the United States. I have believed, and now, after this first direct involvement in the general policy issues of NATO, believe even more, that the NATO grouping of countries is also an important factor in the development of our economic and technological relations with Europe. NATO is Canada's pass-key to a senior role at the table of world stability and security, and to the development of a fair and equitable share of the emerging technology and economic growth of the powerful NATO community.

In the Canadian parliamentary group at the North Atlantic Assembly sessions, Canada had an able and active delegation. Its leader was Thomas-Henri Lefebvre, M.P., who at all times ably organized and directed our work. As a result of first-thing-in-the-morning meetings, the whole delegation was able to keep in touch with what was taking place in the various committees, and thereby to identify our opportunities to make an impact and direct our activities accordingly.

Ralph Stewart, M.P., Chairman of the Committee on Education, Cultural Affairs and Information, was prominent in Assembly activity. Senator Godfrey has already spoken about the substantial role played by Ian Watson, M.P., who presented a report on Marine Resources Management. Crawford Douglas, M.P., as a member of the Military Committee, did yeoman service in advancing the concept of long-range equipment planning and production, and made a vigorous and successful speech from the rostrum of the plenary session.

In the list of hard-working Canadians, I do not want to forget Paul Langlois, M.P., who was re-elected by the Assembly as its Treasurer, nor Colonel Tom Bowie, an experienced secretary of the Canadian delegation, who kept us on time and in the right place—no easy task. Person for person, the Canadian delegation was the match of any. We enjoyed the enthusiasm and infectious good humour of the Honourable George Hees, and in those qualities we were probably ahead of most.

In turning to the more substantive side of the Assembly's work, I would like to mention the general satisfaction of NATO parliamentarians with Canada's present defence program and role. They are well aware of our commitment to increase capital expenditures in real terms by 12 per cent each year for the period 1976-1980, and our goal of ensuring that capital expenditures reach at least 20 per cent of the total defence budget. Many of us were questioned about the Canadian procurement program, the decision to purchase a main-battle tank, the Leopard I, for our forces in Germany, and a new long-range patrol aircraft, the CP-104 Aurora. The questioning was friendly indeed.

I had no information last September on the naval side, but what is now available indicates that Canada hopes to replace all ships currently in service by about 1997, and the total cost is estimated at about $10 billion. According to information recently given to a NATO ministers' meeting, the replacement of the six St. Laurent class destroyers will be the first step, with a new class of patrol frigates taking the role of coastal patrol and submarine detection. This will enhance an already strong suit in our claim for a fair share in the defence production of the alliance. Clearly, government policy is making the role of Canadian North Atlantic Assembly parliamentarians a good deal easier than it once was.

The Canadian representatives on the Economic Committee included Ursula Appolloni, M.P., James Gillies, M.P., Peter Bawden, M.P., and myself. The Economic Committee's chairman is Erwin Lange, a distinguished West German parliamentarian, and its rapporteur is Jerry Wiggin, M.P., of the United Kingdom. The Economic Committee took two days to consider Mr. Wiggin's report on "Atlantic Economic Questions." It is an excellent document, and I shall be delighted to make it available to any honourable senator who wishes to read it.

Senator McDonald, in his virtuoso report to the Senate of November 16 last, summed up the key military issues which plague the alliance. Overlying every aspect of NATO's ability as a defensive alliance is the problem of equipment and armament interoperability and/or standardization. As he clearly outlined to us, the Warsaw Pact countries have no problem. They have one command center, one planning group and one equipment and supply production system for the military forces of their member states. In the NATO group, each member state controls its own equipment decisions, which are often competitive and incompatible with the decisions of other NATO countries. Senator McDonald mentioned the classic controversy between the German Leopard I tank and the United States XM-1 tank which, whatever the merits of the tank issue, represents a real loss for NATO co-operation and effectiveness. There are many other such controversies within the alliance, and the struggle is on to face them.

Let me now outline the impact of defence on the economic situation, and the inter-relationship of the economic situation within NATO member countries, in terms of their willingness to add to the defence capability of NATO.

The reality of NATO is that it is made up of nations who have freely aligned themselves, and whose contribution is what they decide it to be in what they see to be their own overall interests. Thus, the NATO military capability derives from political, economic, geographic and even historic traditions. Every NATO member is a political democracy, and, therefore, the NATO governments are necessarily responsive to the changing tides of public opinion about the defence risk and about the need for defence expenditures. It is trite to say that every country's economic capability is limited. How much should be put into the military budget? Today, the world economy and those of alliance members are pressed with problems of slow or no economic growth, inflation, unemployment, shortages of energy and natural resources and competing domestic policy goals such as social improvement or environmental protection. How to manage all of this without over-taxing the economy? And always to be borne in mind is that all governments of the NATO alliance see economic issues such as I have mentioned as a continuing threat to their political tenure. There are rarely as many votes in defence expenditures as in various social programs.

The result of all of these world economic pressures is that members of NATO are tending to protectionism and to an even greater reliance on international arms sales for the clear economic benefits which that trade brings to the domestic economy. Trade in conventional arms is flourishing, and Mr. Wiggin estimates the value of sales at about $20 billion annually. The United States' share of such trade in 1974 is estimated at 45 per cent, or approximately $9 billion; the Soviet Union's at 30 per cent; France's at six per cent; and United Kingdom's at 5 per cent. Canada's share is 1 per cent, which is about $200 million—not an inconsequential amount. In 1974, the leading arms importing areas were the Near East, 32 per cent; East Asia, 22 per cent; and NATO, 16 per cent.

Many of the NATO countries use arms sales as a way of strengthening their balance of payments, particularly since the oil price crisis of 1973. This leads to a domestic armament industry not tuned to NATO defence so much as it is concerned with making those things the customer needs and wants to buy. With sales abroad assured, the NATO member then tries to increase production efficiency by selling the same item to other NATO members, and if that cannot be done, well, at least some efficiency can be gained by placing the item in the domestic military forces where it may be totally unsuited militarily to the defence task but is eminently suited to the economic objective. This system—and it is one for concern within NATO—proves the old adage that the most important defence planning is usually done by a nation's minister of finance.

I do not want to leave the international armaments sale issue without noting that President Carter has called the world trade in military equipment "as cynical as it is dangerous." During his election campaign of 1976, he promised to reduce the arms trade of the United States. Whether he can do it remains to be seen. The United States withdrawing by itself would leave all the impression of a hand removed from a pail of water. Other sellers are no doubt eager to step in. Personally, I hope and expect that both NATO and the North Atlantic Assembly will address themselves to this difficult but essential problem.

● (1450)

Referring for a moment to the importance of NATO expenditures to the various domestic economies of its members, information was released a few days ago that NATO members collectively spent about $165 billion on their own defence in 1977. This is about $20 billion more than in 1976. The U.S. total is $104 billion, Western European countries $57 billion, and Canada about $4.2 billion. As a whole, the alliance spent about 4.5 per cent of its gross national product on defence. Canada, as Senator McDonald reminded us, spends about 2.4 per cent of its GNP. However, I think straight statistical comparisons to derive some form of fairness standard would be misleading.

Senator McDonald makes a vital point when he outlines to us the build-up in Warsaw Pact military capability. We are out-gunned, out-tanked and out-manned in Europe. We rely for a balance of power on our tactical nuclear arsenal and on the development of new tactical weapons such as the cruise missile—which is capable of long-range, low-altitude flight, with pinpoint accuracy—and the neutron bomb, which kills people but does not seriously damage property. The neutron bomb essentially accomplishes its task by low-level radiation rather than explosive force.

When we are at a disadvantage in conventional weapons and have a limited economic capacity, is not the lack of weapons and equipment interoperability a great stupidity on the part of NATO members? Military thinking at least agrees that it is a stupid, even sinful, waste of limited economic resources. But domestic political and economic objectives override. Standardization and/or interoperability constitutes a key challenge for NATO, and as the challenge lies within the area of political decision-making, obviously the finger of responsibility is pointed at the politicians. In turn, the North Atlantic Assembly and, I believe, the Economic Committee have a potentially important role to play.

As the Economic Committee sees it, the key to most problems, including defence expenditures, is the control of inflation. Every international economic meeting of the last two years has said the same thing. Attention is focused on the transfer of wealth to the oil-exporting nations. Current account deficits are rising everywhere, and particularly in the United States, where the deficit is unprecedented. In 1977, the total debt of all non-oil-exporting nations is estimated at $200 billion. It is obvious this debt strains and de-stabilizes the world economy. And it is a strain on the economies of the NATO nations who collectively carry a large portion of it.

One of the critical areas for the economy of NATO countries is with respect to energy policy and energy supplies. The price of oil is essentially at the dictate of an international cartel, and this remains a source of real instability to the world economic order, in spite of the apparent recognition of oil-producing countries that they have a responsibility for a stable and growing world economy. After all, the paper they take in exchange for their oil is only as good as the economic stability and growth of the importing country.

Personally, I am not an optimist about energy price stability. I believe that the OPEC nations are holding back on their price claims because there is today a temporary over-supply on a world-wide basis. In addition, some of them, particularly Saudi Arabia and Iran, depend on arms supplies from the United States. In one sense, each side is a tiger with the tail of the other tiger in its mouth. I dread the day the oil-producing tiger lets go, and turns to face the new situation.

Honourable senators, I am basically a Woody Allen pessimist. I do not know how many of you saw Woody Allen, with Diane Keaton, in his movie called Annie Hall. The scene in question shows two panels. They are talking to their respective psychiatrists about their relationship. Woody Allen is asked by his psychiatrist, "Tell me, how often do you have sex?" Woody Allen replies, "Hardly ever. We hardly ever have sex. Only about three times a week." Diane Keaton is asked by her psychiatrist the same question, "How often do you have sex?" She says, "Oh, all the time. Absolutely all the time. He is really a sex maniac. We have sex three times a week."

I use this story to illustrate that the same facts can produce two completely different conclusions about their meaning. I hope the optimists about world oil price and supply are correct, but I certainly am with Woody Allen when it comes to those questions.

The greatest concern of all that I have is with respect to the oil import problem of the United States. As honourable senators know, President Carter introduced an energy package in the United States Congress which quickly passed the House of Representatives. However, it has not passed the Senate. The United States is desperate to control its mounting deficit on the acquisition of international oil supplies, a deficit which can reach in the area of $50 billion annually before the end of this decade. That is a vast amount of money, which the United States, the wealthiest country in the world, cannot really afford to pay.

President Carter has warned the United States that it faces a real crisis in its economy, and a real crisis in security of energy pricing, if it does not come to grips with this problem. The United States must deal with it in terms of new sources of energy supply within its own boundaries and in other parts of the world, and in terms of a program of conservation designed to restrict and limit use. Conservation can produce vast savings for the economy of the United States. Regrettably, the United States Congress is all tied up at the moment with the question of who gets the benefit of the higher energy pricing for oil. Should these funds go to the producing sector; should they go to the government; should they go to the consumer? I sincerely hope that they will solve that problem shortly because the energy pricing policy of the United States will determine the energy pricing policy of much of the Western World, and on it depends the turn-around in present economic conditions.

In view of all of this, it should not be surprising that the North Atlantic Assembly has established a subcommittee on energy policy. This is a central link in the stability of the world economy and offers an important focus for the NATO members, through their parliamentarians, to come to grips with the reality that if we cannot hang together over energy policy we will certainly hang separately, and the Warsaw Pact will not have to fire a shot. I am looking forward to attending the first meeting of that committee, which will take place near the end of January 1978.

Finally, honourable senators, I want to strike a ray of hope for the standardization issue, based on the resolution on Increased Co-operation in Alliance Arms Procurement, presented jointly by the Economic Committee and the Political Committee. I would ask that this resolution be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of today.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of resolution, see appendix "B".)

Senator Austin: I want to refer to one short paragraph in the resolution. As a result of work done by the Canadian delegation, the resolution was amended to include the following:

5. to establish a NATO procurement committee with authority to investigate industrial capabilities and determine equipment requirements for the combined NATO Forces Europe.

Believe it or not, honourable senators, there is no common procurement policy in NATO, not even with respect to long-range requirements.

● (1500)

The second cause of our ray of hope is in the position taken by the American delegation at the North Atlantic Assembly. That position was expressed by Congressman Jack Brooks, a Democrat from Texas. In support of the resolution I have just referred to, he said:

My colleagues in the United States Congress who share my concern at the lack of progress in the area of stand-ardization are deeply interested in the views of the representatives of this Assembly. We are particularly interested in the European effort to organize a program group to negotiate more effectively with North America on armaments issues. We hope that the European program group will be successful in producing concrete results in the very near future. We are particularly interested in establishing a trans-Atlantic dialogue with Europe at the earliest possible moment. Meanwhile, the passage of this resolution will contribute immeasurably to the growing momentum within the United States to take positive action on all matters related to our efforts to standardize NATO's weapons arsenal. I can assure you that I intend to give the provisions of this resolution maximum visibility within the United States Congress. And, I urge all of you to take similar action in your respective legislative assemblies.

By having the resolution printed in Hansard, I have taken the action which Congressman Brooks requested of the Assembly. I hope honourable senators will take the opportunity to read that very important resolution.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other honourable senator wishes to participate in the debate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, December 12, at 8 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"

(See p. 219)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE
on
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

---

FIRST REPORT
ON THE ADVANCE STUDY OF THE BUDGET
RESOLUTIONS
RESPECTING INCOME TAX AND ANY BILL
OR OTHER MATTER RELATING THERETO

Thursday, 8th December, 1977

---

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman

TABLE OF CONTENTS

INTRODUCTION

LIFE INSURANCE

- Part XII Tax
- Taxation of Policyholders
- Policy Loans
- Interest on Policy Loans
- Branch Accounting
- Losses on Disposition of Debt Instruments

CORPORATE DISTRIBUTIONS

- Dividends from Taxation Canada Corporations
- Elimination of Pre-1972 Surplus Accounts
- Elimination of Designated Surplus
- Part IV Tax
- Paid-up Capital Deficiency
- Stock Dividends

OTHER RULES RELATING TO CORPORATIONS

- Dispositions of Property to a Controlling Shareholder
- Capital and Non-capital Losses
- Section 85 Elections
- Elimination of Part II Tax
- Tax on Excessive Elections
- Change of Control
- Investment Tax Credit

EMPLOYEE AND SHAREHOLDER LOANS

INVENTORY ALLOWANCE

RESOURCE PROPERTIES

- Successor Corporations
- Expropriation of Resource Properties

REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS (RRSP's) AND REGISTERED HOME OWNERSHIP SAVINGS PLANS (RHOSP's)

OTHER BENEFITS TO INDIVIDUALS

- Federal Tax Deduction
- Employment Expense Deduction
- Annuity Income
- Interest and Dividend Deduction
- Capital Losses
- Stock Options

NIL ASSESSMENTS

ADVERTISING EXPENSES

COMMUNAL ORGANIZATIONS

CATTLE HERD SALES

CONCLUSION

On November 2, 1977, Bill C-11, intituled "An Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds" received first reading in the House of Commons. This Bill is intended to implement the Notice of Ways and Means Motion that was tabled by the Minister of Finance with his Economic and Fiscal Statement of October 20, 1977. Bill C-11 replaces Bill C-56, which was tabled by the Minister of Finance on March 31, 1977 and received first reading in the House of Commons on June 15, 1977. Bill C-56 died on the Order Paper.

By resolution of the Senate on November 1, 1977, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce was authorized to examine and report upon the subject-matter of any Bill relating to income tax based on Budget Resolutions including the 31st March 1977 Budget Resolutions as subsequently changed, the Ways and Means Motions of October 20th, 1977 to amend the Income Tax Act and Income Tax Application Rules, 1971 or any matter relating thereto.

In accordance with the order of reference, your Committee has given careful consideration to the said Bill C-11 arising from the said Ways and Means Motions and the said Budget Resolutions and in connection with such examinations has engaged the services of Messrs. Charles Albert Poissant and Helmut Birk of Thorne Riddell & Co., Chartered Accountants, and retained as its counsel, Mr. Thomas S. Gillespie of Ogilvy, Montgomery, Renault, Clarke, Kirkpatrick, Hannon & Howard. The Committee has also heard Dr. E. P. Neufeld, Acting Assistant Deputy Minister, Mr. R. A. Short, Director, Tax Policy Legislation Division, Mr. R. A. Friesen, Special Advisor, and Mr. T. Morris, all of the Department of Finance (Tax Policy and Federal-Provincial Relations Branch), Mr. R. M. King, Acting Director, Current Amendments Division, Revenue Canada-Taxation. In addition the Committee has heard submissions from the Life Underwriters Association, Mr. D. P. Hays, counsel on behalf of Leurerleut Hutterian Brethern, as well as submissions from the Excelsior Life and on behalf of Western cattlemen.

Bill C-11 provides authority for the borrowing of additional sums up to nine billion dollars (Clause 116) and contains an amendment to the Old Age Security Act and a series of amendments to the Income Tax Act and the Income Tax Application Rules.

The Bill proposes substantial changes to the taxation of life insurance corporations and their policy-holders. The Bill also contains a large number of amendments that are beneficial to Canadian taxpayers. In particular, the Bill grants increased deductions and exemptions from income to corporations and individuals. It also contains substantial amendments relating to the taxation of corporations that will facilitate corporate reorganizations and the conduct of business.

The Bill deals with the taxation of communal organizations and deals also with multi-national insurance companies and amends provisions relating to the method of accounting for Canadian investment income and loss carry forward in connection therewith as provided in the Act and proposes changes in relation thereto.

Your Committee proposes to discuss the following matters dealt with in the Bill:

LIFE INSURANCE

Part XII Tax

Life insurance companies are required to pay a 15% tax on investment income. In effect, this tax is a tax on the policyholder that is collected by the insurer. It was imposed so that it would not be more attractive to save money through the ownership of a life insurance policy or certain annuities than through other forms of savings. The introduction of the $1000 exemption for interest and dividend income created a bias against saving through life insurance. It is therefore proposed (Clause 91) to repeal the Part XII 15% tax. In conjunction therewith other amendments are proposed which will affect policyholders.

Taxation of Policyholders

Bill C-56 had proposed to extend to maturities arising on death the existing tax on the surrender of policies. It was proposed that with respect to deaths occurring after March 31, 1978 there be taxed the excess of the cash surrender value over the net cost of the policy less a $10,000 exemption.

The Minister of Finance announced on October 20, 1977 that the government, pending further study, has decided to withdraw this proposal to tax certain life insurance policies realized on death.

Policy Loans

Bill C-11 proposes (Clauses 68(17), 68(19) and 74) that a policy loan made after March 31, 1978 will be treated as a disposition of an interest in a life insurance policy and the amount of loan received in excess of a policyholder's adjusted cost base will be included in computing his income subject to tax. (A policyholder's adjusted cost base will, in most cases, be an amount equal to the total amount of premiums paid by him.*) The repayment of a policy loan will increase a policyholder's adjusted cost base as will the payment of interest on that loan.

The officials of the Department of Finance justify the taxation of policy loans in part by maintaining that policy loans are not loans in law because policyholders are not under any legal obligation to repay their loans. In support, they cite the case of The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States v. Larocque 1942 S.C.R. 205. In that case Rinfret, J. held that a policy loan was an advance and the insurer could not sue the policyholder or beneficiary for repayment of the money loaned. Representatives of the Life Underwriters Association of Canada have argued that the holding of Rinfret, J. was obiter dicta and not essential to the judgment.

* In some instances it will be increased by the amount by which the cash surrender value of the policy as at its first anniversary date after March 31, 1977 exceeds the adjusted cost base of the policy as otherwise determined.

The Department also states that the life insurance industry has argued before a Parliamentary Committee that policy loans are not true loans. Your Committee does not consider this to be a relevant consideration.

The officials also point out that if policy loans were not taxed in some manner, tax avoidance could result. That is to say, if policies are surrendered or mature prior to death, policyholders are taxed on the investment portion of the policies paid to them. They could borrow against their policies, never surrendering them and thereby avoid payment of such tax. They would, in effect, never be taxed on the investment income earned by their policies. The Department argues that this would not only give taxpayers the opportunity to avoid paying tax but would unfairly prejudice competing investment institutions which could not offer their customers corresponding tax treatment.

Your Committee feels that policyholders who are subject to tax upon receipt of a policy loan should be entitled to proper tax relief. The mere adjustment by an increase in the adjusted cost base of their interests in their policies is insufficient. To include part of the proceeds of their loan in income and only to increase their adjusted cost bases in their policies upon its repayment will put them in a position of paying tax at the time of receiving the loan but not receiving credit at the time of repayment. Indeed, they will receive no credit at all should they die before maturity as there will be no tax then payable.

It is therefore your Committee's recommendation that Bill C-11 be amended to allow policyholders repaying loans a deduction from income in the year of repayment of such portion of the amount of the loan as was previously taxed.

Your Committee feels further consideration should be given to exempting from tax, policy loans that are repaid within one year. Further consideration should also be given to exempting from tax, loans made shortly before death and loans made to enable or assist policyholders in the purchase or erection of dwelling houses or the purchase of shares of corporations of which they are officers or employees or the purchase of automobiles to be used in the performance of their duties as officers or employees, provided bona fide arrangements are made for the repayment of loans within a reasonable time. This suggestion resembles in some respects the tax treatment given to loans to shareholders.

Interest on Policy Loans

The Act is silent as to the treatment of the deduction of interest on policy loans. In keeping with the spirit of the Act, Revenue Canada—Taxation has allowed the deduction of interest on policy loans where the proceeds of such loans are used in earning income from a business or property. Reference is made to Interpretation Bulletin IT-355 which reads in part as follows:

“Notwithstanding the general commentary in the preceding paragraph, the Department has adopted the policy of allowing a deduction in respect of interest on a policy loan where the proceeds of the loan are used in earning income from a business or from property. The Department does not view interest on a policy loan under an annuity as deductible where the proceeds of the loan are used to pay any part of the premiums for that or any other annuity contract.”

Bill C-11 proposes (Clause 14(2)) to disallow the deduction of interest paid on policy loans made after March 31, 1977. Rather, interest paid on such policy loans will only increase the adjusted cost base of a policyholder's interest in his policy. Most policyholders are not entitled to deduct interest as most loans are incurred for purposes other than the earning of income from a business or from property. By giving policyholders the right to increase the adjusted cost base of their policies, Bill C-11 is helping a vast majority of policyholders who are receiving loans. To the extent that such policyholders can benefit, your Committee is in agreement with the proposal. Your Committee is not in agreement that other policyholders who borrow for the purposes of earning income from a business or from property should be prejudiced by not being able to deduct interest incurred on such a loan in the year of payment. As seen earlier, some policyholders will never get any tax benefit from interest payments should they hold their policies until death.

Your Committee therefore proposes that Bill C-11 be amended to allow policyholders who borrow for the purposes of earning income from a business or from property a deduction from income of interest payments made by them and to allow others an increase in the adjusted cost base of their interest in their policies by the amount of interest payments made.

Branch Accounting

Since 1969 multi-national insurers have had two methods to choose from when computing the portion of their worldwide investment revenues that relate to their Canadian operations, namely, the proportional method and the branch accounting method.

The Bill proposes (Clause 68(12)) to eliminate the proportional method available to multi-national insurance companies and make changes to the branch accounting method in order to provide an appropriate level of gross investment revenue that will be comparable with the gross investment revenue of domestic insurance companies. Hereafter multi-national insurers will have to include in computing income from business carried on in Canada that portion of gross investment revenue that is gross revenue from property used by them or held by them in the course of carrying on business in Canada.

Multi-national insurance companies using the branch accounting method in 1975 were entitled under the provisions of the Act to elect to compute their investment income by determining a level of assets that was intended to approximate those related to the Canadian part of their business and then to identify the assets in question. The revenue from those assets was deemed to be the revenue of the insurer for the year for Canadian income tax purposes. There developed a practice of selecting investments that greatly reduced the amount of Canadian investment revenue that had to be reported. For example, assets acquired immediately before the end of the taxation year, head office buildings and other low or non-revenue producing assets were chosen. In effect, the Act and Regulations, as drafted, permitted multi-national insurers to minimize their Canadian investment revenues thereby permitting them to create loss carry forward positions and deductions which could be used to reduce income in future years.

The Bill proposes (Clause 68(22)) to eliminate loss carry forward positions and deductions arising from the present provisions of the Act and Regulations that would otherwise have entered into the computation of income of an insurer in 1977 and subsequent taxation years.

Your Committee has constantly opposed retroactive legislation that operated to the detriment of the taxpayer. The Departmental officials have stated that the proposals do not constitute retroactive legislation. However, it can be argued that the effect is the same; that is to say, the benefits that arose in 1975 because of the present provisions of the tax legislation are now to be denied.

Losses on Dispositions of Debt Instruments

Insurance companies have found it necessary over the years to dispose of older bonds, mortgages and similar debt instruments constituting Canadian securities, as defined in the Act, bearing low rates of interest at a loss. The proceeds were reinvested in higher yielding investments. The Act required that the full amount of the higher yield be included in taxable income. The loss incurred was deductible from income. Undeducted losses could be applied against future income.

Pursuant to Clauses 6(11), 54(4) and 68(4) of the Bill, it is understood that it is the intention of the Department to introduce regulations whereby such companies will be required to continue to include in income the higher income yielded by the new investments while disallowing a deduction for losses incurred on the sale of lower yielding securities. Compensating benefits will be extended to insurance companies but the extent of such benefits is as yet unknown to your Committee.

It is recommended that a thorough study be made of these proposals, including a review of any submissions by interested insurance companies, and the results of the study published. The results of the study should be made available for consideration by your Committee when considering further amendments to the Act at the next session of Parliament.

CORPORATE DISTRIBUTIONS

The Bill contains major changes with respect to corporate distributions including, in particular, the change in taxation of dividends received by individuals from taxable Canadian corporations, the elimination of tax on designated surplus and the phasing out of tax-free distributions from surplus accounts arising before 1972.

Dividends from Taxable Canadian Corporations

It is proposed (Clause 36(1)) to increase the gross-up in respect of dividends from taxable Canadian corporations received by individuals from one-third to one-half. It is also proposed (Clause 58(1)) to adjust the dividend tax credit from four-fifths to three-fourths of the dividend gross-up. The proposed system will benefit all taxpayers receiving dividend income from taxable Canadian corporations, the greater benefit to be enjoyed by taxpayers in lower income brackets. For example:

TAXATION OF DIVIDEND INCOME AND CAPITAL GAINS, 1977 and 1978

Marginal Rates	$7,095 to $9,932*		$19,866 to $34,055*		Over $85,140
	(30%)		(46%)		(62%)
	1977	1978	1977	1978	1977	1978
Dividend	$ 90.00	$ 90.00	$ 90.00	$ 90.00	$ 90.00	$ 90.00
Gross up $\frac{1}{3}$	30.00		30.00		30.00
$\frac{1}{2}$		45.00		45.00		45.00
	$120.00	$135.00	$120.00	$135.00	$120.00	$135.00
Federal Tax	25.20	28.40	38.40	43.20	51.60	58.10
Less Federal Credit 75% of Gross up	22.50	33.75	22.50	33.75	22.50	33.75
Federal Tax Payable	$ 2.70	$ (4.35)	$ 15.90	$ 9.45	$ 29.10	$ 24.35
Ontario Tax (44%)	1.19	(1.91)	7.00	4.16	12.80	10.11
Total Tax	$ 3.89	$ (6.26)	$ 22.90	$ 13.61	$ 41.90	$ 35.06
Effective Tax Rate on Dividends	4.3%	(7%)	25.4%	15.1%	46.5%	39%

TAXATION OF DIVIDEND INCOME AND

CAPITAL GAINS, 1977 and 1978

Marginal Rates	$7,095 to $9,932*		$19,866 to $34,055*		Over $85,140
	(30%)		(46%)		(62%)
	1977	1978	1977	1978	1977	1978
Effective Tax Rate on Capital Gains	15%	15%	23%	23%	31%	31%
Net Retained on Dividends	$ 86.11	$ 96.26	$ 67.10	$ 76.39	$ 48.10	$ 54.94
Net Retained on Capital Gains	$ 76.50	$ 76.50	$ 69.30	$ 69.30	$ 62.10	$ 62.10

* 1977 tax brackets—resident of Ontario

** reduction of tax on other income

The above computations assume reciprocal amendments by the provinces.

This proposal will more closely equate the tax on dividends and capital gains thereby eliminating the need for many of the complexities of the taxation of corporate distributions. Taxpayers with a marginal tax rate of 50% will pay approximately the same amount of tax on dividend income received from taxable Canadian corporations as they will on the same amount of capital gains incurred. Taxpayers with higher marginal tax rates will pay less tax on capital gains than on dividends; taxpayers with lower marginal rates will pay less tax on dividends than on capital gains.

account may be distributed without first paying a 15% tax on 1971 undistributed income on hand.

The time limit placed on tax-free corporate distributions is in conflict with the guidelines issued by the Anti-Inflation Board on dividend payments now in effect. Your Committee feels that companies should be given sufficient time to permit determination of the various surplus accounts and unrestricted payment of dividends out of pre-1972 surplus accounts. If the AIB restrictions on dividend payments persist, it will be impossible for many corporations to make the desired distributions of pre-1972 surpluses.

This conflict, which interferes substantially with the distribution of pre-1972 surplus accounts, must be quickly resolved in the interests of both the administration and the taxpayer.

Elimination of Designated Surplus

The elimination of tax on designated surplus will facilitate corporate planning and reorganization and is welcomed by your Committee.

The repeal of the designated surplus is in line with the government's decision to reduce the tax on dividends and to forego the small difference in tax on taxable dividends compared to tax on capital gains for taxpayers in high tax brackets.

Under the proposal a corporate purchaser may acquire the shares of a Canadian corporation without creating designated surplus, i.e., the retained earnings of the company at the beginning of the year during which control is acquired. Thus in future the surplus of the acquired corporation can be passed up to the parent without attracting tax. This allows considerable flexibility to the parent company since the excess funds of the subsidiary may flow up tax free either through the payment of dividends or by way of amalgamation or liquidation.

Future corporate acquisitions by individuals will be further facilitated by using a holding company to make the acquisition. Funds can then be paid from the acquired corporation

Tax Bracket*	Marginal Tax Rate	Net after Tax
		Dividend $100	Capital Gain $100	Difference
$17-21,000	40%	$94	$80	$14
$21-37,000	46	85	77	8
$37-59,000	52	76	74	2
$59-91,000	56	70	72	(2)
$91,000	62	61	69	(8)

* 1978 rates, Ontario resident

Elimination of Pre-1972 Surplus Accounts

In order for a company to make distributions out of special surplus accounts, it must first pay a 15% tax on 1971 undistributed surplus. Dividends may then be paid tax free out of tax-paid undistributed surplus as well as 1971 capital surplus on hand and private companies' capital dividend accounts. The Department of Revenue and taxpayers have encountered increasing difficulties in maintaining records establishing taxpayers' adjusted cost bases. As indicated earlier, the Bill proposes to equate more closely the tax treatment given to dividend and capital gain income received by individuals. The advantages of receiving tax-deferred dividends will be reduced or eliminated. It is therefore proposed that after 1978 distributions out of tax-paid undistributed surplus, 1971 capital surplus on hand and 1971 undistributed income on hand be no longer available. After 1978, pre-1972 capital surplus may only be distributed tax free upon liquidation. In the interim period, it is proposed to simplify the order of surplus distributions. Prior to 1979, tax-paid undistributed surplus, 1971 capital surplus on hand and a company's capital dividend through the holding company to the individual shareholder to permit him to recover the full cost of his investment before receiving taxable distributions. Furthermore where the holding company has no other income and has borrowed funds to make the acquisition, it may liquidate the acquired subsidiary without tax on designated surplus and thereby deduct the interest expense against the income of the acquired corporation. The existence of designated surplus prevented in the past a deduction for interest expense where the holding company had no other income.

The phasing out by the end of 1978 of the tax-free distribution of pre-1972 surplus requires special rules in the case of non-arm's length transactions. In the absence of such rules a shareholder would be in a position to receive tax-free pre-1972 surplus after the prescribed deadline of December 31, 1978. This would be achieved by transferring shares of an operating company to a holding company at V-day value under a tax-free rollover and a subsequent payment of dividends by the acquired corporation to the holding company followed by a reimbursement of capital to the shareholder. For this reason a new Section 84.1 is proposed (Clause 39) which is designed to prevent the tax-free distribution of pre-1972 surplus and unrealized goodwill in a non-arm's length transfer of shares by an individual to another corporation. The disposition of shares of a controlled corporation to another non-arm's length corporation will subject any accrued gain at V-day over paid-up capital of the shares to tax immediately as a capital gain or will reduce the adjusted cost base of any shares or debt received as consideration. This rule will not apply to the sale of shares in an arm's length transaction.

Part IV Tax

A private corporation receiving taxable dividends from corporations that are not controlled by it must pay a tax equal to one-third of such dividends. This tax is refunded when the private corporation makes its own dividend distributions.

Clause 85 of the Bill proposes that the tax be reduced from one-third to one-quarter. It also proposes that the exemption from Part IV tax be extended to dividends received by a corporation that does not control the paying corporation but owns more than 10% of the fair market value of the shares of the paying corporation, except to the extent that

- (a) the cumulative deduction account of the recipient corporation and other corporations associated with it exceeds in the aggregate $750,000 for the year in which it received the dividends, or
- (b) the paying corporation receives a "dividend refund" in respect of those dividends.

The widening of the exemption from Part IV tax to minority interests of more than 10% is intended to encourage companies to participate with others in joint ventures by forming a subsidiary in which each company will hold more than 10% of the subsidiary's shares.

It also increases the benefit that may be derived from the small business deduction. As indicated above, a Canadian controlled private corporation can receive dividends free from Part IV tax until it has a cumulative deduction account of $750,000. The cumulative deduction account is increased by four-thirds of taxable dividends received and reduced by four-thirds of taxable dividends paid. Thus dividends of $562,500 will reduce the cumulative deduction account of the paying corporation by $750,000 and increase the account of the recipient by an equal amount. The small business deduction of the paying corporation is thus preserved where the recipient corporation does not control alone or with non-arm's length persons the corporation paying the dividend.

Under the proposed rules, 'large' private corporations, that is to say, private corporations with cumulative deduction accounts in excess of $750,000, may not enjoy the exemption from Part IV tax, unless they control the corporation paying the dividend.

It is therefore recommended that further consideration be given to extending the exemption from Part IV tax to all dividends between private corporations in which more than a 10% interest is held where neither corporation benefits any longer from the small business deduction.

Paid-up Capital Deficiency

It is also proposed that the concept of paid-up capital deficiency be repealed and the definition of paid-up capital be amended to conform to paid-up capital as determined under relevant corporate law. Distributions upon winding-up, liquidation, redemption or reduction of capital will deem the recipient to have received a dividend if the distribution is in excess of the company's paid-up capital.

Stock Dividends

It is proposed (Clause 98(2)) to amend subsection 248(1) of the Act to exclude the following categories of stock dividends from the definition "dividend":

1. Stock dividends paid after March 31, 1977 by a public corporation to a person resident in Canada (other than a non-resident owned investment corporation owning more than 10% of the class of shares on which the stock dividend was paid);
2. Stock dividends paid after March 31, 1977 by a public corporation to a non-resident provided that he together with persons related to him does not own more than 10% of the shares of the class on which the stock dividend was paid; and
3. Stock dividends paid after 1976 by a non-resident corporation.

In these cases the stock dividend is not included in the income of the recipient and the cost base of the shares so acquired is nil. At the time of disposition of the shares the shareholder may realize a capital gain.

In future it will therefore be possible for a public corporation to capitalize surplus tax free and distribute same by way of a stock dividend that will result in a capital gain on disposition of the shares.

OTHER RULES RELATING TO CORPORATIONS

Dispositions of Property to a Controlling Shareholder

Clause 21(3) of Bill C-11 proposes that, where a corporation has disposed of property to its controlling shareholder and has incurred a loss on the disposition that is deemed nil by virtue of paragraph 40(2)(e) of the Act, the loss will be added to the adjusted cost base of the property. The loss will be taken into account on a subsequent sale. This will correct an anomaly in the Act as no such relief is presently available.

Capital and Non-capital Losses

Capital and non-capital loss carry forward positions may be passed on by amalgamation and on the winding-up of a wholly-owned Canadian corporation—Clause 42(6) and Clause 43(1). This simplifies considerably the planning of corporate structures. Heretofore the existence of such loss positions often prevented the consolidation of corporate entities.

Section 85 Elections

Section 85 of the Act allows for the deferral of tax upon disposition of capital property other than real property, eligible capital property, (e.g., goodwill) and inventory other than real property, and resource property to a Canadian corporation provided the consideration for the disposition includes shares of the capital stock of the Canadian corporation and both parties file an election. The election must be filed on or before the day that is the earliest of the days on or before which any taxpayer making an election is required to file an income tax return. An election may be filed within one year thereafter provided a penalty is paid. Elections filed after the one-year period are invalid. Bill C-11 proposes to extend the time for electing, subject to the paying of a penalty, from one year to three years and increasing the maximum penalty from $2500 to $4000. Many taxpayers may become aware, upon receiving notices of assessment, that they have incurred a tax liability in excess of that anticipated. The extension of the period for filing an election may enable them to defer their tax liability by filing the election and paying the penalty.

Elimination of Part II Tax

Section 181 imposes a tax of 25% on the amount by which a corporation purchasing its shares in the open market makes a payment therefor in excess of the lesser of the paid-up capital of the shares and the paid-up capital limit of the corporation. Section 182 imposes a tax of 20% on premiums paid on redemption or acquisition of preferred shares. Bill C-11 proposes to eliminate these taxes—Clauses 81 and 82.

Tax on Excessive Elections

Corporations electing in accordance with sub-section 83(1) of the Act to pay dividends out of tax-paid undistributed surplus on hand (1971 undistributed income less 15% tax paid thereon) and 1971 capital surplus on hand were required to pay a 100% tax on the amount of the dividend in excess of the amount remaining in the account elected. It is proposed (Clause 83) that the tax be repealed for payments of dividends after 1978 and for the interim period the tax on the excess be limited to 50% of the amount overpaid. It is also proposed that tax on excess elections made pursuant to Subsection 83(2) of the Act out of a private company's capital dividend account be reduced from 100% to 75% of the excess.

Change of Control

Change of control of a corporation may have many important tax ramifications. Under the present Act, undeducted exploration and development expenses may no longer be deductible and capital and non-capital loss carry forward positions may be lost and in certain cases a private corporation's capital dividend account may be eliminated.

Clause 99(1) of the Bill proposes that persons shall be deemed not to have acquired control of a particular corporation by virtue of the acquisition of shares by persons related to the corporation or by executors of an estate or by beneficiaries related to the deceased.

The Minister of Finance has introduced an amendment before the Committee of the Whole of the House of Commons that, if adopted, will deem administrators and trustees of estates not to acquire control of corporations by virtue of the acquisition of shares.

Your Committee considers these amendments represent a positive step in the direction of the consolidation of corporate tax returns and are beneficial as they will facilitate corporate reorganizations. This is to say, these amendments will facilitate the joining together of profitable and non-profitable corporations.

Investment Tax Credit

Taxpayers acquiring qualified depreciable property are entitled to a credit that is deductible in full against the first $15,000 of federal tax otherwise payable and to the extent of one-half of any such tax in excess of $15,000. The maximum credit presently available is 5% of the capital cost of the qualified property acquired in the year and in the five previous years. It is proposed (Clauses 61(2) and following) that the credit (i) be made available in respect of scientific research, (ii) be extended three years to July 1, 1980 and (iii) be increased to 7½% for qualified property acquired primarily for use in the provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Northern Ontario and designated regions in Quebec other than the Gaspé Peninsula and to 10% for qualified property acquired primarily for use in the Atlantic Provinces and the Gaspé Peninsula.

EMPLOYEE AND SHAREHOLDER LOANS

Heretofore companies have been able to extend low interest and interest-free loans to employees and shareholders without a taxable benefit arising therefrom. This form of tax-free compensation has been abused and the Bill proposes to tax the benefit on loans made without interest or at favourable interest rates to employees and shareholders—Clause 35. Such benefits will be taxable to the extent the prescribed rate exceeds the actual rate of interest charged. The prescribed rate will be adjusted yearly by reference to the prime rate charged by chartered banks. To encourage labour mobility in Canada, relocation loans of up to $50,000 made by an employer to facilitate the purchase of a home by an employee will be excluded from the proposed taxable benefit. It is to be noted that the exclusion will not apply to an employee transferring to Canada from elsewhere. Consideration should be given to extending the exclusion. Furthermore, loans made to officers and employees to enable them to purchase their employer corporation's shares will not be deemed a taxable benefit. An exclusion will also be made for small loans by taxing only the benefit in excess of $500 per year. This will ensure that no taxable benefit will arise on interest-free loans of $6250 or less. These measures will become effective January 1, 1979.

It is also proposed (Clause 8(3)) to extend the rules requiring the loan to a shareholder of a corporation to be included in that shareholder's income to persons with whom he does not deal at arm's length and to loans made by a related corporation or a partnership of which the corporation or related corporation is a member.

INVENTORY ALLOWANCE

The Bill proposes (Clause 14) an annual deduction, in computing business income, of 3% of the cost amount of the taxpayer's inventory at the commencement of his fiscal year that will consist of tangible moveable property of a business. This deduction will be available for fiscal periods commencing after the end of 1976 and for periods ending after March 31, 1977.

It should be noted that companies with fiscal periods commencing prior to January 1, 1977 will be prejudiced as they will lose the benefit of computing the period from January 1, 1977 to March 31, 1977 in determining the inventory allowance.

RESOURCE PROPERTIES

Successor Corporations

Bill C-11 contains several rules (Clause 29(5)) respecting the transfer of resource properties from one corporation (a predecessor corporation) to another corporation (a successor corporation). A successor corporation is entitled to deduct a predecessor's undeducted exploration or development expenses with certain limitations. The Bill proposes to extend the benefits available to successor corporations.

The Act presently requires a successor corporation to acquire all or substantially all the property of the predecessor corporation used by it in carrying on business in Canada to preserve the undeducted expenses incurred by the predecessor corporation. The new rule will require only the acquisition of the predecessor's resource business properties.

It is proposed that a successor corporation need no longer be a principal business corporation (a corporation primarily engaged in the resource industry) to have the right to deduct without limit the predecessor's exploration expenses. Prior to the Bill a successor corporation was obliged to be a principal business corporation.

The Bill will also allow income arising from the disposition by a successor corporation of resource properties acquired from a predecessor corporation to be reduced by the amount of the predecessor corporation's exploration or development accounts.

The Act presently provides that a predecessor corporation must have the right to take or remove the resource from the property before the income from that property qualifies as income that could be offset by the carried-across exploration and development expenses. This caused problems where predecessor corporations had an interest in a resource property but did not have the right to take or remove the resources from that property. Bill C-11 will eliminate this restriction.

Expropriation of Resource Properties

It is proposed (Clause 24(1)) that taxpayers who, within ten years after an involuntary disposition of a Canadian resource property, invest their proceeds in Canadian exploration or Canadian development expenses, will not attract tax otherwise payable on the deemed disposition.

REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS (RRSP's) AND REGISTERED HOME OWNERSHIP SAVINGS PLANS (RHOSP's)

The Bill proposes amendments to prevent further abuses of RRSP's and curtail the benefits extended by RHOSP's.

Taxpayers were entitled in 1976 to deduct contributions to RRSP's under which their spouses were annuitants. This enabled taxpayers whose spouses received little or no income to share part of their income with their spouses by contributing to a plan and having the spouse immediately thereafter remove the amount contributed to the plan. The spouse would then be taxed at a low rate or not taxed at all on amounts that would have otherwise been taxable in the taxpayer's hands. To prevent this abuse, the Bill provides (Clauses 72(2) to (4)) that taxpayers contributing to plans, of which their spouses are annuitants, will include in their income amounts paid and deducted by them in the year of withdrawal and the two preceding taxation years. This rule will not apply in the year of a taxpayer's death. Your Committee questions whether the proposed amendment will be adequate in preventing further abuse. It is suggested that consideration be given to extending the period during which amounts paid and deducted are included in the taxpayer's income.

The following changes are proposed with respect to RHOSP's:

(a) A transfer of funds from an RHOSP to an RRSP or pension plan will no longer be permitted. Taxpayers may still purchase an income averaging annuity with the proceeds received from an RHOSP.

(b) The maximum time allowed for accumulation of savings and eventual investment in an owner-occupied home be limited to twenty years from the time of creation of the plan. Thereafter, funds accumulated in the plan will be included in the beneficiary's income.

(c) For 1978 and subsequent years, neither a taxpayer wishing to deduct contributions to an RHOSP nor his spouse with whom he is residing may own a home in Canada or elsewhere. Heretofore, a taxpayer living with a spouse who owned a home in Canada was able to deduct contributions to an RHOSP.

(d) The purchase of home furnishings will no longer qualify for tax-free withdrawal of funds as of January 1, 1978.

(e) Taxpayers will be entitled to deduct contributions made in the year they acquire a home.

(f) Measures are included to prevent tax-free refunds of excess contributions.

OTHER BENEFITS TO INDIVIDUALS

Federal Tax Deduction

Individual taxpayers are entitled to a federal tax deduction equal to the greater of $200 or 9% of tax otherwise payable. The maximum deductible is $500. Bill C-11 proposes to aid lower income families by entitling every taxpayer to a deduction of at least $300 for 1978 only and adding a deduction of $50 per dependent child under eighteen resident in Canada. The maximum deduction of $500 will remain—Clause 57(2).

Employment Expense Deduction

It is proposed that the amount of deduction from net employment income on account of expenses incurred in earning employment income be increased from $150 to $250—Clause 4(1).

Annuity Income

Taxpayers over sixty-five are entitled to deduct up to $1000 of pension income received in the year. Bill C-11 proposes that such taxpayers be entitled to elect to have the taxable portion of annuity income (other than annuity payments under Registered Retirement Savings Plans, Deferred Profit Sharing Plans or Income Averaging Annuity Contracts) be deemed to be interest. Should they so elect, such annuity income would qualify for the $1000 deduction available for interest and dividend income. This will benefit taxpayers receiving pension income but little or no investment income as they will be able to claim two deductions in respect of annuity income, namely, the pension income deduction of $1000 and the interest and dividend deduction of $1000—Clauses 52(3) and 53(1).

Interest and Dividend Deduction

Individuals and testamentary trusts have been able since 1974 to deduct in computing taxable income the amount of their interest income to a maximum of $1000 per year. They were entitled in 1975 and subsequent taxation years to include grossed-up dividends in arriving at their deduction. Clause 52(1) proposes that such taxpayers be entitled to include their taxable capital gains incurred from dispositions of Canadian securities for 1977 and subsequent years in determining the $1000 deduction.

The Bill also proposes that the $1000 deduction available would be reduced by amounts deducted as related interest expenses. Taxpayers would otherwise be entitled to a double deduction in respect of interest paid on monies borrowed to acquire securities.

Capital Losses

It is proposed to entitle taxpayers to deduct net capital losses incurred in the year preceding death as well as the year of death against other income received by an individual in those years—Clauses 32(1) and 54(3).

The amount of allowable capital losses an individual may deduct from other income will be increased from $1000 to $2000—Clause 1.

Stock Options

Under the present Act, employees acquiring shares pursuant to stock option plans are taxable in the year they acquire shares on an amount by which the value of the shares at the time acquired exceeds the amount payable by them therefor. They are also taxable on the ultimate disposition of those shares should they incur any capital gain. This tax treatment has discouraged the use of stock options as a means of employment incentive.

Bill C-11 proposes (Clause 3(2)) that employees of Canadian controlled private corporations be only taxable upon the ultimate disposition of shares received by them pursuant to stock option plans on one-half the difference between the proceeds of disposition and the option price paid by them. Your Committee welcomes this amendment as providing employee incentive and assisting estate planning.

NIL ASSESSMENTS

Last year, in its review of Bill C-22, your Committee studied proposed amendments designed to give taxpayers relief from an anomalous situation they might find themselves in if they received a "nil" assessment. Jurisprudence has held that a nil assessment is an assessment of tax and not of income and therefore no appeal may lie. Reference is made to the decision of the Supreme Court in Okalta Oils Ltd. v. M.N.R. (1964) C.T.C. 562. In referring to the clause in question found in Bill C-22, your Committee noted in part:

"Your Committee notes, however, that this Clause, as presently drafted, does not oblige the Minister to determine the amount of a taxpayer's loss. It is felt that in the absence of such obligation, the taxpayer may be left with the same problem if the Minister refuses to determine a taxpayer's losses and issues a "nil" assessment. Your Committee feels that the Act should be amended to provide that an assessment showing no tax payable shall be deemed to be an assessment. Alternatively, your Committee suggests that in recognition of the administrative difficulties which the Department of National Revenue might face if it had to determine all taxpayers' losses, the amendment proposed in Clause 61(1) could be modified to oblige the Minister to assess if a loss is applied against prior or subsequent years' profits by a taxpayer or upon a taxpayer's request."

In response to your Committee's report the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue undertook to amend the Act to conform to the following statement made by the Minister of National Revenue in a letter dated December 23, 1976, and addressed to your Committee's Chairman:

"Where my Department has determined the amount of a taxpayer's loss, and that amount differs from the loss reported by the taxpayer, our official determination of the loss will be issued when the taxpayer requests it. This will allow the taxpayer to appeal the determination immediately in all cases where he wishes to do so. My Department will be publishing information to taxpayers to explain how they may obtain a loss determination."

Pursuant to such undertaking, Clause 76 of Bill C-11 was inserted. Your Committee notes that this clause, as drafted, is deficient in giving taxpayers the desired result. It only gives a taxpayer the right to force the Minister to make a determination of his loss if the Minister should ascertain his loss to be different from that reported. An official of Revenue Canada has indicated to your Committee that it is rare that the Minister will ascertain the amount of a taxpayer's loss. In most cases, the provisions of Clause 76 will not apply to allow a taxpayer to obtain a determination of his loss and the procedure set forth in Clause 76 will not be available to him. We have been advised that it will be the Department's practice to make a determination of a taxpayer's loss upon request. We feel that this right should be provided by statute. It is your Committee's wish that taxpayers be provided the right in all cases to require the Minister to make a determination of their losses.

ADVERTISING EXPENSES

Taxpayers are not entitled to make deductions for advertising in periodicals the contents of which are substantially the same as the contents of an issue of a periodical that was printed, edited or published outside Canada (Section 19 of the Act). When studying Bill C-58, which came before your Committee during the last session of Parliament, the Minister of Revenue Canada undertook to define the phrase "substantially the same" in the Act.

Your Committee is pleased to note that clause 12(1) defines "substantially the same" as being more than 20% the same.

COMMUNAL ORGANIZATIONS

Clause 71 of the Bill proposes that for 1977 and subsequent years, Hutterites and other communal organizations, other than charities, which carry on business and whose members live communally and do not own property in their own right as a matter of religious conviction, be required to pay tax as though such organizations were an inter vivos trust, but be given an option to calculate their tax payable as the aggregate of the taxes that would have been payable by the families in the organizations had the income of the organizations been apportioned and taxed in the families' hands. The proposal would approximate the present tax treatment extended by way of informal agreement with Revenue Canada.

As has been pointed out by counsel for the Lehrerleut Hutterian Brethren, organizations prevented from electing to have their income so apportioned and taxed would be greatly prejudiced. As inter vivos trusts, they would be taxed at minimum rates of 48½% in Alberta without the benefit of any exemptions or deductions. One of the conditions precedent to being able to make an election is contained in paragraph 143(3)(b) to the effect that all tax, interest and penalties payable under Part I of the Act have been paid within the time required. Your Committee feels such proposal is too inflexible as any late payment of tax or instalment thereof, or even a miscalculation of tax payable made in good faith could prevent future elections being made. It is recommended that more flexible provisions be inserted in the Bill.

CATTLE HERD SALES

It has been suggested that changes be made in the Act for the benefit of farmers who have disposed or who may have to dispose of herds because of severe drought conditions in certain areas of Canada. Remedial legislation could be made to apply to dispositions under distress conditions.

No amendments to this end are contemplated in Bill C-11. Before appropriate remedies are proposed, evidence of need for relief would have to be considered by the governmental departments concerned.

CONCLUSION

As a review of this report will indicate, your Committee has examined and considered Bill C-11 in accordance with its terms of reference. It should be noted it has reviewed the Bill in advance of it coming before the Senate, heard witnesses, prepared a report and made recommendations with respect thereto (a summary of which follows as an Appendix) before the House of Commons has completed its consideration of the Bill.

It is to be noted that proposed amendments to the Bill have been introduced that conform to your Committee's recommendations made with respect to the tax treatment afforded to (i) policyholders repaying loans, (ii) policyholders making interest payments with respect to policy loans made for the purpose of earning income from a business or from property and (iii) officers and employees transferring to Canada from elsewhere receiving low interest and interest-free loans. Whether such amendments will appear in the Bill when it reaches the Senate will depend on whether they are dealt with prior to time limitation being imposed in the House of Commons.

There will be further sittings of the Committee, as part of its examination and consideration of the Bill, to hear the Minister of Finance.

The Bill is a lengthy one. It represents substantial amendment to our income tax legislation, primarily with a view to facilitating corporate reorganization, relief to most taxpayers and, in some instances, the correction of deficiencies in the Act. A bill of such proportion will necessarily contain deficiencies, some of which have come to the attention of your Committee and are noted above. Nevertheless, in view of the substantial benefits extended to taxpayers, many of which have been urged by your Committee in the past, your Committee strongly supports the Bill.

Your Committee wishes to express its appreciation for the services rendered in the review of the Bill by Messrs. Charles Albert Poissant, Helmut Birk and Thomas S. Gillespie.

Respectfully submitted,

SALTER A. HAYDEN,
Chairman.

APPENDIX TO REPORT

BILL C-11

SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Policy Loans

(a) Bill C-11 be amended to entitle policyholders repaying loans to deduct from income in the year of repayment such portion of loans previously taxable.

(b) Consideration be given to exempting from tax the following policy loans:

(i) policy loans made within a reasonable period of time prior to death;

(ii) policy loans repaid within one year; and

(iii) policy loans made for the purposes of acquiring dwelling houses, shares of corporations of which the policyholder is an officer or employee, or the purchase of automobiles to be used in the performance of the policyholder's duties as an officer or employee.

2. Interest on Policy Loans

The Bill be amended to entitle policyholders who borrow for purposes of earning income from a business or from property to deduct interest payments. Other policyholders would be entitled to increase the adjusted cost base of their policies.

3. Losses on Disposition of Debt Instruments

A study be made of the proposal to disallow deductions for losses incurred on prior dispositions of low yielding debt instruments together with the proposal to extend compensating benefits and the results of the study made public.

4. Elimination of Pre-1972 Surplus Accounts

The conflict between the time limit placed on 'tax-free' corporate distributions and restrictions imposed by guidelines issued by the Anti-Inflation Board be quickly resolved.

5. Part IV Tax

Further consideration be given to extending the exemption from Part IV tax to all dividends between private corporations in which more than a 10% interest is held where neither corporation benefits any longer from the small business deduction.

6. Employee and Shareholder Loans

Consideration be given to excluding from tax low interest or interest-free loans made to employees transferring to Canada from elsewhere.

7. Registered Retirement Savings Plans

Consideration be given to extending the period during which amounts paid to a spouse's registered retirement savings plan are included in a taxpayer's income.

8. Nil Assessments

The Minister should undertake to study the Committee's recommendation that all taxpayers be provided the right in all cases to require the Minister of Revenue Canada to make a determination of their losses.

9. Communal Organizations

The Bill be amended to provide more flexibility in order that communal organizations wishing to allocate income of the organizations among the families comprised therein be prevented from doing so solely because such families have not paid the full amount of tax, interest and penalties owing by them within the time required by the Act.

APPENDIX "B"

(See p. 226)

NORTH ATLANTIC ASSEMBLY RESOLUTION ON INCREASED CO-OPERATION IN ALLIANCE ARMS PROCUREMENT PRESENTED JOINTLY BY THE ECONOMIC COMMITTEE AND THE POLITICAL COMMITTEE—PARIS, FRANCE

The Assembly,

Recognising that greater co-operation in the research, development and production of armaments would considerably enhance the collective security of the Alliance by ensuring a more efficient and cost effective use of the combined resources allocated to NATO's defence;

Recognising, however, that standardisation alone does not represent a complete panacea to NATO's problems, but certain that if co-operation is pursued on a selective and fully coordinated basis it will bring significant advantages in terms of military efficiency, shared economic benefits, and greater political cohesion;

Stressing the considerable economic and political benefits to be gained from greater standardisation through eliminating waste, realising economies of scale, spreading economic benefits, mitigating divisive competition for arms sales, and strengthening political and economic relations between North America and Europe;

Concerned, however, that as these benefits are long term they are normally obscured by more immediate requirements of a national, and frequently parochial nature, particularly the reluctance of member states to adopt weapon systems which they cannot themselves produce;

Convinced that these obstacles can only be overcome by giving co-operation in arms procurement political visibility and involvement at the highest levels;

Convinced that co-operation in arms procurement can only work successfully through the establishment of a coordinated programme within which offsets and compensation can be viewed across a board spectrum;

Recognising the need to develop a more balanced relationship between the European and North American members of the Alliance in the procurement of defence equipment;

Recognising the need for a coordinated European approach to armaments planning and the necessity for the European allies to organise themselves into a cohesive unit in order to negotiate effectively with North America;

Welcoming the progress made so far by the European Programme Group (EPG) but hoping that the Group will now produce concrete results and particularly establish a trans-atlantic dialogue with North America;

Concerned that despite repeated Assembly exhortations there has been insufficient support for cooperative efforts in the respective national legislatures to mandate the requisite level of co-operation;

Welcoming the public commitments to increased co-operation made by both the United States Administration and Congress and hoping that the European allies will make similar supportive commitments;

Anticipating that these statements of intent will be followed by positive action;

Recognising that in the short term many measures short of standardisation can be implemented that would improve NATO's combat effectiveness, particularly measures to increase the interoperability of NATO's forces and weapons;

URGES

(a) member countries of the Alliance:

1. to give armaments co-operation maximum political visibility and support by giving direct responsibility for procurement co-operation to officials of the highest rank and authority;
2. to take the necessary actions in their respective legislative bodies to increase awareness and concern for the goals of interoperability and standardisation and to make their commitment to these goals publicly known;
3. to intensify their efforts to establish an overall mechanism within which to coordinate effectively armaments co-operation on a large scale;
4. to ensure maximum implementation of the recommendations of the NATO Ad Hoc Group on Interoperability.
5. to establish a NATO procurement committee with authority to investigate industrial capabilities and determine equipment requirements for the combined NATO Forces Europe.

(b) member countries of the European Programme Group:

1. to intensify their efforts to develop a coordinated European approach to armaments planning including the formation of a permanent secretariat;
2. to move as rapidly as possible to establishing a dialogue with North America.

THE SENATE

Monday, December 12, 1977

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE EUGENE A. FORSEY

NEWSPAPER REPORT—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege which affects not only myself but the Honourable Senator Graham. In fact, I think it affects the Honourable Senator Graham rather more than it does me. But, in his absence, I am going to venture to raise it.

This afternoon I received, by the kindness of Her Honour The Speaker,—

[Translation]

—a clipping from a Granby newspaper, La Voix de l'Est, which, on November 16 published an article by a certain Mr. Gerald R. Scott, a Conservative candidate, in which I find this, which, frankly, honourable senators, surprised me a little:

"It must not be forgotten," says Mr. Scott, "that the President of the Liberal Party of Canada is Mr. Eugene Forsey, a unilingual anglophone, who is far from being known as an avant-garde figure."

Well, first of all, honourable senators, I don't know whether I am avant-garde or not; perhaps yes, perhaps no. If it is a question of sculpture or painting, as Senator Grosart can bear witness, perhaps I am a bit behind the times, but I leave that aside. However, when I am promoted to the position of President of the Liberal Party of Canada, that surprises me considerably. I do not say it shocks me, but it did considerably surprise me, and I think Senator Graham has cause for complaint.

As for my being a unilingual anglophone: I am very conscious of the deficiencies of my French, but, at the same time, the word "unilingual" wounds me a little, because I think my French, poor as it may be, is not altogether pidgin-French. Frankly, I flatter myself on being, let's say, almost or partially bilingual.

So I have raised the question of privilege to correct this worthy Mr. Scott, who is a trifle odd, it seems, and poorly informed. I have also sent a letter to the editor of La Voix de l'Est, but I thought it my duty to raise the question of privilege in the Senate.

Senator Bourget: I hope you will send that to the newspapers.

Senator Marchand: Mr. Scott is a unilingual anglophone.

[English]

THE SENATE

HEATING OF OFFICES—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Senator Macdonald: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. I have a complaint to make. I do not know to whom it should be made, so I will address it to the Leader of the Government.

As some of you may know, my office on the fifth floor, room 571-S, is a large one and probably one of the nicest in the building. However, the temperature in that room today never got above 68 degrees Fahrenheit. While I am all for conserving energy, my first obligation is to conserve myself, and with that in mind I would ask that someone do something about getting more heat into my office.

Senator Cook: Mine, too.

Senator Bourget: Yours is not the only office without sufficient heat.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I understand that there is some sort of informal investigation under way with respect to the alleged abnormally low temperatures, during cold weather, in at least some of the offices in the Parliament Buildings. It may be that there has been a malfunction in the system.

Senator Hicks: Honourable senators, to preserve the balance, my complaint is quite a different one. My office was very warm and stuffy when I arrived this evening, and I couldn't open the windows because they were frozen closed.

Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): You can't please everyone.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton) had been substituted for that of Mr. McCleave on the list of members appointed to serve on the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

● (2010)

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 3, 1977-78

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-15, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1978.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, including its financial statements and auditors' report, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 33 of the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act, Chapter C-13, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of letters, dated December 9, 1977, from the Prime Minister of Canada to the provincial First Ministers relating to the future development of the Canadian economy.

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, December 13, 1977, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

PENITENTIARIES

QUALIFICATIONS OF NEW COMMISSIONER—QUESTION

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a question about Mr. Yeomans, the newly appointed Commissioner of Penitentiaries. The question is: What knowledge or experience does this gentleman possess in the field of criminology?

I ask the question because the official announcement of his appointment is wholly silent on this point, although it has an immense amount to say about his managerial experience and his being a professional engineer and a professional industrial accountant.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, if available, that information will be obtained as quickly as possible and provided for senators.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

INCOME TAX

CONSIDERATION OF FIRST REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON ADVANCE STUDY—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, December 8, 1977:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce entitled: "First Report on the advance study of the Budget Resolutions respecting income tax and any bill or other matter relating thereto," tabled in the Senate on December 8, 1977.

He said: Honourable senators, last Thursday I tabled the first report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce in connection with its study of the subject matter of the several budget resolutions of March 31 and October 20, and the proposed legislation to implement the same. Tonight I propose discussing, although not in great detail, the provisions of that report.

First, I think I should indicate the scope of the report. It deals with the subject matter of the budget resolutions and the contemplated implementing legislation. For that reason the members of the committee felt that they should be a little more exhaustive in their study of the various clauses and provisions in the bill. When the bill itself comes to us, we will try to be a little more particular in the manner in which we present various points to the Senate, but we felt that in dealing with the subject matter we should expose the whole scope and extent and application of the bill.

That is why you find the report to be quite a lengthy document involving some 43 or 44 typewritten pages. It had to be lengthy in order to indicate the present state of the law in relation to the various subjects dealt with; to indicate what difficulties, if any, have been experienced in connection with administration; and to show the reasons why amending legislation has been put forward. So much for the report.

The bill itself is remarkable, and the budget resolutions in connection with it are remarkable documents in themselves. It is not often—even in my experience with income tax bills, which goes back over quite a number of years—that you find so much that is so good for so many people. That is a remarkable thing, and the only explanation I can offer for expecting to find, and finding, that proposed in the present implementing legislation is that the effect of the measures—many of them proposed—would be to leave more money in the hands of individuals, and in the hands of industry and business, on the assumption that such money will increase the purchasing power of these various groups and classes of people. This should be a good stimulus to the economy.

• (2020)

Having said that, I do not want honourable senators to think that all the proposals are decked in garlands, and that we had no criticism of any of the sections that came before us. As might be expected, there are zealous people even in the departments charged with determining tax policy, and honourable senators will find, as I develop the position held in our report, that there are some things in the report that do not partake of the quality of goodness about which I spoke earlier. I propose to deal with those right away. They have to do with life insurance policies, and the treatment that was proposed in connection with them and with the policyholders and life insurance companies.

First, with regard to life insurance companies, the bill proposes to repeal the provision under which a 15 per cent tax was levied some years ago on the investment income of life insurance companies, the theory being at that time that while the investment may be referable to the policyholders and their so-called investment interest in a policy practical difficulties in respect of administration presented themselves. We were told in committee at that time that by levying a tax on life insurance companies, the tax on investment income was accomplished; and, sure enough, the life insurance companies rearranged their accounts as between themselves and their policyholders so that the ultimate payer of the tax was the policyholder.

In the budget resolutions of March 31, 1977, it was proposed, in connection with life insurance policies which mature at death, that there be a determination of the gain made by the policyholder, by virtue of what he paid in order to get the insurance and the larger amount that came out at the end of the road when he died. It was proposed, therefore, that the excess between the cash surrender value of the policy at that time and the cost to the policyholder would be treated as a gain, and would be taxable as income in the hands of the policyholder's estate, because at that time, on maturity, he would have died.

There were many protests at the time that this provision was incorporated in Bill C-56, the predecessor of Bill C-11, the present bill, and during the many months that intervened a change was made. It was proposed that there should be a threshold of $10,000, which would mean, in effect, that the policyholder would only be taxed on the excess of the cash surrender value of the policy over his cost plus $10,000. The present Minister of Finance, however, announced in his fiscal statement of October 20 last that he had decided, in effect, to suspend, or not proceed with, the proposal to tax that element in relation to those particular life insurance policies, pending further study of the question. Whether that is the acknowledged way of bowing away from a matter that causes a lot of complaint, and an easy way to forget about it without too many implications, I do not know, and whether there will be any attempt to pick this up again, I do not know, but that is not the end because there were two other provisions in the October 20 fiscal statement which are carried into Bill C-11, the present tax bill.

One of these provisions had to do with policy loans, and the other with interest that was paid by the policyholder on outstanding policy loans. The department, even before the committee at our first hearings, took the position that a policy loan is not a loan, because the company cannot sue the policyholder to repay the loan. There is no covenant in that regard, and therefore the policyholder does not have the true character of a borrower. Some comfort or solace for that was found in a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, but in that decision the principle in issue was something else; it was not as to whether a policy loan was a real loan or as to the character of the loan. In his judgment, one of the judges made the statement that a policy loan was not a true loan; it represented an advance on account of the investment interest that the policyholder had in the proceeds of the policy. All that was happening was that the policyholder was being given an advance payment.

So the proposal was that so far as a policy loan is concerned, it would be brought into the policyholder's income with the cost factors reflected—the difference would be brought into the income of the policyholder in the year in which he negotiated the loan, and then he would pay income tax on that. If he subsequently repaid the loan he was not given the right to deduct the amount of tax that he paid out of his current income, and he was not given the right to deduct the portion of the loan which had been repaid. All he was offered was that the portion of the loan represented by the repayment would be added to the adjusted cost base as and when, at some point in time, a determination would have to be made as to what part of the excess over the cash surrender value was gain or income, and should be brought into the policyholder's income.

The other element was that of interest, and what is proposed in the budget resolution of October 20, and also in Bill C-11, is that interest should not be allowed as a deductible item of expense. It is true that the revenue department issued an interpretation bulletin about a year and a half ago reflecting, over a whole page, the history of the question, "When is a loan not a loan?" and referring to legal decisions.

● (2030)

At the end of the interpretation they decided to treat interest on the policy loan as deductible if it had a business purpose. The bill and the budget resolutions proposed allowing no deduction, so it would stultify the interpretation ruling by the revenue department. This was the situation which confronted your committee.

We heard a group of witnesses from the Life Underwriters Association, the agents representing the policyholders. It could be said there is a more direct point of contact between the life underwriters and the policyholders than between the policyholders and the life companies. Those witnesses presented their case.

We then heard from the departmental officers. At the outset they were adamant in their position that these were not loans, that this was not true interest, and that the provisions in the bill were correct. However, perhaps we wore them down, like drops of water that persistently and continuously fall in the same spot, because ultimately, as a result of our discussions in committee and conferences between the departmental officials and our advisers, including the chairman, and then discussions with the minister, amendments were introduced during the clause-by-clause study at the second reading stage of Bill C-11 in the Commons.

The amendments reflected interest being a deductible item for business purposes. If it is not for business purposes, then the amount of the interest is added to the adjusted cost base of the loan.

So far as policy loans are concerned, the amendment provided that the portion of the policy loan on which tax was paid by the policyholder in the year in which the loan was taken out should be deductible from income of the policyholder in the year in which the loan was repaid. It provided that if, as and when the loan was repaid, that portion would be deductible from the income of the policyholder in the year in which it took place. If the loan was not repaid, then the amount of the loan would be part of the adjusted cost base.

We have dealt with those two amendments in our report. In their clause-by-clause study of the bill in the Commons, it became important that the items to be amended should be dealt with before the Commons' time limitation rule applied, otherwise the proposed amendments would be dead. Fortunately these amendments had been considered in time.

There was one particular amendment that was not so fortunate. The item had not been reached in time, and so the amendment died. The minister, whom we will see in committee tomorrow evening in connection with the various recommendations we made, has already indicated that the amendment he proposed, and which died because of the application of the time limitation, will be reintroduced in the next budget in the next session. So that we are gaining some yards there.

Honourable senators, if I were asked to indicate what I think was one of the substantial functions we performed in our committee study, I would say it was the securing of these amendments, especially when you bear in mind that there are some 12 million policyholders in Canada. While it cannot be said that all of them borrow on their policies, I am sure that many of them do, because of the low interest rates. In many cases the rate is 6 per cent or lower, which is very favourable compared to what they would have to pay in the marketplace, assuming they were creditworthy.

I am not trying to attract undue acknowledgements for the work of the committee, but I think it was a job well done.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Hayden: By a strange coincidence, the next item the committee regarded as being important was that of multinational insurance companies. Some difficulties developed under the present Income Tax Act in relation to the accounting methods that should be followed by these companies. Several methods are set out in the act. You will notice that I am speaking of the act now, not the bill. One is called a "proportional method" of accounting for Canadian investment income, because that element would be taxable in a multinational insurance company. The other is called the "branch accounting method."

By some manipulation, apparently, the companies, in their accounting, have availed themselves of the scope of the provisions in the act. The act requires that a level of assets be determined as a base, and the income on that level of assets is taxed. In building up that level of assets, as the department officials indicated, the insurance companies followed the multinationals. There were two objectives. One was that they acquired low-interest yielding securities—head office properties and things of that kind—which were designated by the departmental officials as being "adverse selection." I am speaking of adverse selection to the revenues of the Crown, not adverse selection to the companies. The other was what they called "short holds." That was accomplished by buying investments in the last month or two of the fiscal year of the company, so that the earning period of interest would not be very great. In this way some of these companies were able to build up a substantial loss-carry-forward position that would take them forward a number of years. This created a non-competitive position as against the domestic insurance companies, who did not have the privilege of using this accounting method. It was stipulated to apply only to the multinational companies.

● (2040)

The bill proposed methods for dealing with this. In other words, the competitive position was going to be re-established by the proposals contained in the bill and by the rules and regulations that are to be brought forward. We did not have the rules and regulations; they had not apparently as yet been brought into being, or had been brought into being in a way in which we could get at them. Therefore, while the methods were going to be developed methods of accounting rules and regulations, we were not in a position to know what they were.

Thus, it was difficult to pass judgment on the merits or demerits, if the objective, as it appeared to be from the statements made before our committee, was to re-establish the competitive position between the two groups of life companies, and to establish compensating features, as they called them, to reduce the amount of the loss carry forward, which would persist, as you know, for a period of five years forward. In doing this it was indicated to us that with the loss carry forward it would be affected in the amount by the adjustment of the actuarial reserves downwards. That sounded pretty awful, to think that they were going to be a factor of computation that would be brought into play to deal with actuarial reserves, because actuarial reserves are designed to give stability and protection, not only to the companies but to their policyholders.

We were in the position where we saw things, but we were not able to get any companies coming forward as witnesses with the explanation, which I thought was that their association was made up of both groups of insurance companies and it was difficult to secure a unanimous presentation. However, one of the smaller companies made a submission in which it said that the proposals would have the effect that they had sold out of their investment portfolio securities of a period which carried a low rate of interest. I think in some cases they paid $100 and the market at the time they sold, because of the low interest rates, was $75 to $78, so they had a substantial loss. They used the money that they got to buy high-interest yielding securities that were available in the current market.

Then they were in the position where they had to include the interest as income on these high-yielding securities. Under these proposed amendments they would not be permitted to make use of the amounts of low interest as a deduction or as a set-off, in whole or in part, or as part of the loss carry forward. We could understand the significance of this, because that was an experience they were undergoing in the normal course of business operations.

The other things that were done with adverse selection and short holds may, I suppose, be designated as manipulating within the framework of the act to achieve the best result for your company. There are some people who say you can do whatever the Income Tax Act allows you to do, even though it was not so intended when the language was settled on and the act brought into being, and until it is corrected it is fair and reasonable for you to carry on that way. So we have recommended that a study of this question be made in the department concerned, and that the report of that study be made available to the public. We have also recommended that when the regulations are prepared they be printed and published, so that if this is our function in another year in connection with any income tax bill arising out of a budget we will be able to make some determination based on facts, and not be in the state in which we are at the present time. The minister is aware that this is one matter we will discuss with him tomorrow evening.

I am sorry I have taken much longer than I intended in discussing these two items, but to me they are the most important. I could mention others. For instance, there is the inventory allowance, which is designed to provide money to a business or a company that has inventory as its stock in trade. It is entitled to an allowance each year. There is no termination date provided in the bill, and the business is allowed to write off 3 per cent of the cost of that inventory each year. This will be of particular benefit, because I am sure a great many inventories of businesses and companies have been slow-moving, yet their acquisition or production has cost money. Therefore, I believe that the inventory allowance is something that is bound to be helpful to the industries and businesses concerned.

The period for the determination of the cost is the end of December 1976, or any fiscal year ending after March 31, 1977. If a business has a fiscal year ending after March 31, 1977, it does not receive the full year's allowance, but an allowance for whatever the period of the inventory acquisition is of the current fiscal period ending after March 31, which would be nine months. That number of days over 365 is the fraction of the 3 per cent of the value of the stock in trade that the business would be entitled to by way of the allowance.

A few of the other items I might mention include that old bugbear with which lawyers and businessmen have to deal, known as designated surplus. This was an invention of the income tax department some years ago to deal with the situation in which there was what they called dividend stripping. By this designated surplus concept they provided that every time there was change of control, the surplus at that point in time became frozen. If one were to make use of it, one had to make use of it in terms which involved meeting that tax collectors and paying them their dues.

● (2050)

There has been a great deal of discussion regarding a "nil assessment". A nil assessment occurs when a taxpayer files a return which shows a loss. The taxpayer gets notice from the Income Tax Department giving him what they call a nil assessment. The courts have held that a nil assessment is not an assessment which is appealable. All the nil assessment determines is whether one owes taxes or not; it does not determine what one's income is.

A year ago we insisted, in the face of this decision, that if a taxpayer requests a determination of his loss position, the minister should undertake to furnish him with that information. An amendment was made to Bill C-11 dealing with this. I received a letter from the minister undertaking to do just this. This letter is dated December 23, 1976. It is addressed to myself as chairman of the committee, and in it the minister states:

Where my Department has determined the amount of a taxpayer's loss, and that amount differs from the loss reported by the taxpayer, our official determination of the loss will be issued when the taxpayer requests it. This will allow the taxpayer to appeal the determination immediately in all cases where he wishes to do so. My Department will be publishing information to taxpayers to explain how they may obtain a loss determination.

Unfortunately, the wording of the proposed amendment does not impose an obligation on the minister to determine the amount of the loss at the request of the taxpayer. The explanation received from representatives of Revenue Canada at our meetings was that they could not afford to commit themselves to giving information to that extent with their present staff. They indicated that they would have to engage substantially more staff to deal with this. We are persistent in our recommendation that this undertaking be implemented. However, this is an item which will be discussed tomorrow night with the minister.

On the other hand, I should point out to you that there was an undertaking given by the minister last year with respect to the bill dealing with advertising in publications published, edited or printed inside Canada the material content of which was substantially the same as the material content of publications published, edited or printed outside Canada. The minister had undertaken to substantially define the same in the law, because we insisted that the percentage should not be determined by the department by regulations or interpreting rules, but that it should be determined by the law. This has been done. In other words, the undertaking has been fully honoured. I thought I should bring that to the attention of the Senate.

There are many other items in the bill, but it is just impossible for me to mention them all this evening. I should point out that in connection with the distribution on pre-1972 surpluses—capital surplus, tax-paid undistributed surplus and undistributed income on hand—the Income Tax Act has contained provisions for a number of years under which this pre-1972 accumulation of different surpluses can be paid up by making an election settling one's amounts and paying a 15 per cent tax on the undistributed income on hand. This bill provides for a termination date, after which one will no longer be able to extract these pre-1972 surpluses, except only the capital surplus, which may be done on liquidation.

At this point I should mention that the obligation to pay the 15 per cent tax which had to be paid under the act before one could start this machinery for distribution has been changed. It is not proposed that you be obliged to pay the 15 per cent. You might be short of money or want to get out of the company at that time. That would not be a sine qua non of starting the distribution of these services. In this regard we found that the Anti-Inflation Board had issued guidelines on dividend policy, and its guidelines on dividend policies did not permit the distributions. The amounts were restricted under the guidelines of the Anti-Inflation Board.

We discussed that with the departmental representatives, and they indicated that they had discussed it with the minister. This is an item which we will deal with in committee tomorrow night. I fully anticipate that the necessary amendments or corrections will be made in the guidelines. It is part of the government's policy to get rid of as much of this pre-1972 surplus as it can. They do not want that haunting them forever because, as time goes on, it becomes more difficult to make a reliable calculation. This is the explanation received. There were also administrative problems in this regard. There are several other items with which I should deal were it not for the time constraints which I have imposed upon myself, and which I have breached already. However, I think I have taken it far enough this evening.

● (2100)

Stock dividends have been honoured in that the bill would provide greater freedom in their declaration. A company can capitalize its surplus, and issue stock dividends with a nil value. Of course, when those stock dividends are disposed of they attract a capital gains tax, but that is something in the future. This provision at least provides an opportunity for distribution now. Under this provision, a public company may pay a stock dividend and that stock dividend, for purposes of the Income Tax Act, would not be subject to tax under the definition of "dividend".

Dealing with gross-up and tax credit on dividends, which was part of the package of income tax proposals in 1970, a dividend of $400, under the current gross-up provisions, is increased by one-third, and on the dividend tax credit side the recipient is entitled to deduct four-fifths of the gross-up figure. Bill C-11 proposes that the gross-up be by one-half. In other words, in the case of a $400 dividend, the gross-up figure would be $600, with the tax credit being three-quarters of the gross-up figure. The result is a more favourable position for the recipient of the dividend. The effect is that it just about equates the tax position in relation to capital gains and dividend tax credits, the idea being to attract greater investment interest in the private sector. Judging by the corporate reaction and the reorganization of capital structures, it is certainly working in that direction.

[Senator Hayden.]

There still remains a lengthy list of what I refer to as "goodies" hanging on this tree. With very few exceptions, one does not expect to find these types of provisions in tax bills year after year. It is a good thing that every once in a while the department thinks of the taxpayers operating in these areas. In order for investors to take the risks associated with private sector ventures, some tax advantages and benefits have to be provided.

Honourable senators, that is about as far as I intend to take the matter this evening. The bill is a good bill. It is a good bill from the point of view of the taxpayers; it is a good bill, in my opinion, from the point of view of stimulating the economy. It is not going to work miracles, but it is at least one measure that is aimed in the right direction, and one which has the right purposes in mind. I am sure that the conclusion of the committee, in its final report, having heard the minister tomorrow evening, will be just that—that the bill is a good bill and should be passed. The problems we have found that have not at this point been corrected can be dealt with by way of undertakings so as to ensure that the bill passes into law as quickly as possible.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to raise one matter dealt with in the committee's report, namely, the one under the heading "Cattle Herd Sales." I do so at this time in the hope, however slim it may be, that some change might still be made to what has properly been described as a good package of income tax amendments for the year 1977.

I want to say at the outset that I appreciate the consideration given to my suggestion in committee regarding cattle herd sales, notwithstanding the fact that the reference to cattle herd sales in the report more or less sets aside or rejects my proposal for amendment of Bill C-11. I am also mindful of the fact that the idea of deferring receipts from cattle herd sales into another year could come up in the next set of budget resolutions and the legislation stemming therefrom. The effects of the drought in some parts of western Canada have been felt in 1977, but any bill that may come out of budget resolutions in the spring of 1978 would not be applicable to 1977.

I know there is little chance of the acceptance of this proposal, but I would like to explain what is involved. In doing so, I shall read briefly from the committee's report, as follows:

It has been suggested that changes be made in the Act for the benefit of farmers who have disposed or who may have to dispose of herds because of severe drought conditions in certain areas of Canada. Remedial legislation could be made to apply to dispositions under distress conditions.

Well, I do not think that remedial legislation could be made to apply to 1977 unless it is dealt with in this particular bill. It may be that remedial action could be taken by some amended interpretation of the tax laws already on the books.

The committee report goes on to state:

No amendments to this end are contemplated in Bill C-11. Before appropriate remedies are proposed, evidence of need for relief would have to be considered by the governmental departments concerned.

That may be the opinion of the departmental officials at this time, but it does not coincide with my opinion of the situation in 1977. I know of a large number of producers who were forced to substantially reduce their cattle herds in 1977 with the intention of replacing those herds as soon as conditions changed. In other words, they would replace their sold cattle as soon as they had grass and water, and whatever else it takes to maintain cattle herds.

● (2110)

But I think I should give a slightly different interpretation of what is involved in this suggestion that I made, and that is that it is not only for relief of distress conditions that arise from drought. There are many instances when it is necessary to dispose of a herd of cattle. It may be because of disease, fire, flood, drought, and it may even be for the purpose of improving the quality of the herd. But under the present tax law, as far as I understand it, there is no way that a farmer or a rancher can dispose of his herd in one taxation year and use the proceeds from the sale to repurchase the herd in a following tax year. There are many other things you can do. You can elect for forward averaging of the income for as long as 15 years or you can make the election for a shorter period; you can also average the income over a five-year period. They are all good provisions, but the fact remains that once the receipts from the sale of a herd of cattle get into taxable income category, whether you do it on forward averaging or averaging over the five-year period, if you are going to repurchase the herd you have to arrange the financing through some other source, because the proceeds of the sale are then in the taxable income stream, and the farmer or the rancher, however you cut it, has to pay tax on that money.

What I am really saying is that we need to have a provision in the Income Tax Act, whether we have drought conditions or not, so that we can use those receipts, provided the farmer does in fact use them for the repurchase of the herd the following year, or even in a later year, when the conditions which first caused him to sell the herd have been remedied, corrected or improved, depending on whether they involve disease or drought or something else.

This is not a new concept in taxation law. There are rollovers and deferments provided for in all kinds of different circumstances to different sectors of the Canadian economy—and for good reason. I know, for example, that you can defer for income tax purposes the receipts from grain sales for one year, if you want to. But I think we have to look behind that to find out what the reason is. The reason is very simple; it is that there is a lumping of receipts in some years on grain that may have been produced over a number of years—years in which the grain could not be sold because of quota restrictions. But when the demand for that particular kind of grain is such that market conditions and quotas allow its sale, if you have been accumulating it over several years and you sell it all in one year, then to have to pay the tax all in one year is not fair.

So a provision was made several years ago whereby you could defer as little or as much as you wanted to of those grain receipts to the following year for the purpose of evening out surpluses or for selling off inventories—which is what it amounted to—inventories produced over a number of years.

I suggest that exactly the same principle is involved in a cattle herd. It is built up over a number of years, and if for any reason you have to sell it in one year so that the receipts become taxable income in that one year, then that is unfair taxation. But there is no provision for deferring it. A more important consideration is that when there is a large dispersal or a complete dispersal of a herd of cattle in one year because of drought or disease or whatever the reason, in most cases the taxpayer intends to repurchase that herd as soon as conditions allow him to do so. I hope that the minister and this committee will try to understand this problem and realize that it is not one that affects only 1977 or is occasioned only by dispersals required because of drought. I hope there is still time to make a suitable change for the 1977 tax year, but if there is not I still think it is useful to understand this problem better than it is understood today so that a suitable change can be made as soon as possible.

Now, honourable senators, as I said, somewhat similar situations arise in other businesses. It is not so long ago—and I was not here at the time that I heard about it—that, for example, lawyers wanted to have a provision in the income tax law whereby if they had done some work in one year and had actually charged the fee and sent the bill in that one year they could have some provision for averaging that income out. I am not sure just what happened to that, but I think they were faced with essentially the same problem. I think there are other provisions in the income tax law, and I am not going to go into them now, that allow you to adjust inventory from time to time so that you are not faced with these “lumped” payments that have to be made.

That is the major reason for my intervening at this point. I think there may still be time for an amendment to the bill when it comes. At any rate I hope so. Apparently it is not convenient to introduce an amendment at the stage the bill has now reached in the House of Commons. But in the event that they cannot make a change in the bill itself—I should never say “cannot” because I know that if everybody is agreeable just about anything is possible—but if it is inconvenient to do it for the year 1977, then I hope that the department will find one of those other provisions that can be interpreted slightly differently so that those people who have had to sell off their herds way beyond what they ever intended to do for ongoing business purposes, and have an opportunity to repurchase the herd in 1978, in the event that conditions are better, will not have all that money going into the taxable income stream so that they will have to do the refinancing through other sources, because those receipts are already in the so-called income tax mill, however you want to average it.

Honourable senators, I should like to conclude my remarks by expressing my appreciation to the chairman and to the members of the committee for considering the proposal I made to them even though they did not recommend a change at this time. I hope I may have been able in some way to persuade them that this is a matter that should be permanently in the Income Tax Act and not just simply for one drought year, because there are a variety of reasons why such consideration is necessary from time to time, and I think it is only just to give a more equitable tax base to people who are in this situation.

Senator Denis: Honourable senators, I am much in sympathy with Senator Olson's case for farmers who are in a special category so that they could make deductions over a five-year period, but not many Canadians are allowed to do that. I know of a worse situation than has been described. I know of a judge who was accused of a crime and his case lasted for years. Finally he was acquitted and he was reimbursed for the years that he had not received any pay. But then he was assessed for tax on the amount of money he received as though it represented his income for one year rather than being that accumulated over a number of years. He told me that it cost him $17,000 more in tax than it would have cost him if the income had been divided over the years, as it is in the case of farmers.

● (2120)

Senator Hayden: If I may I answer Senator Olson, I think I should tell him what information we had before us. I had his letter, which was fairly complete, and the committee members were furnished with copies of it. The matter was discussed by the Department of Finance. We were told about the drought and the risk that could develop, and the need to sell herds this year that could well develop. We were told that the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Finance had been alerted earlier in the year, and had made a full inquiry into the situation. This was their responsibility, and not a particular responsibility of the Senate. They concluded that in their view no need was established for dealing with a situation that might develop by reason of drought.

We had the information before us. It is government policy. We do not set government policy, although we may at times amend it when we think it is not heading in the right direction. But there are two ways of doing it. My friend keeps talking about taxation, but in times of disaster we rely on special legislation—one-shot legislation—dealing with the particular thing. Perhaps what my friend wants is stand-by legislation such as they have in the United States and certain other places—legislation that can be invoked to take care of extraordinary situations. We have not had any presentation of material along those lines, however.

If we had gone any further than we did, we would have looked rather silly because we were not in a position to make such a determination based on drought in this one year. But we have this information from the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Finance, and it does show that they were looking at it; that they were interested in it and that they were alert. Perhaps if there is sufficient pressure something will develop out of it, but the point I am making is that we are not locked into income tax as the sole method of dealing with this problem. Parliament can deal with it by separate legislation. In fact, a bill could be introduced in the Senate, although that might meet a stumbling block, because a bill of this kind would almost inevitably involve the expenditure of money, and bills involving the expenditure of money must be initiated in the House of Commons.

At any rate, there was the practical situation. We went as far as we could and we did give some publicity to the matter. I am sure Senator Olson will follow up and make as good use of this situation as he can. As a matter of fact, we are meeting with the minister tomorrow night, and Senator Olson is entitled to attend the meeting. The matter is part of the report, and I say that as an indication of what might take place.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I appreciate the work the committee has done and I understand the situation. I am not complaining about the committee's activities in that regard.

As to whether a bill could be introduced in the Senate, it is a moot question whether such a bill would either raise or lower taxes. It would provide for averaging out, and to that extent it would be neutral so far as money is concerned. However, I am sure it could be argued that that would, in effect, lower tax receipts in some years. In any event, I still have the problem that I disagree with the findings of those departmental officials who made the survey to find out if there was need for distress legislation in 1977.

I will conclude by saying that in my opinion—and I think this is important—it is a measure that ought to be put in the income tax law on a permanent basis so that the tax law itself does not significantly interfere with good management decisions. Because the law requires every dollar of revenue to be accounted for in the year in which it is received, I am sure that in many cases it interferes with good long-term management decisions.

On motion of Senator Grosart, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, December 13, 1977

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES

CORRECTION IN TRANSLATION

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I am sorry to have to rise again, on what I suppose may be called a question of privilege, to draw your attention to an error in the English translation of what I said in French yesterday. It affects another senator. I refer to yesterday's Hansard, page 227, halfway down the first column. The report in French is correct, but the report in English refers to Senator Grosart where it should be Senator Graham. There are two mentions here of Senator Grosart: the first is correct and the second should be Senator Graham.

I might add that the English translation of what I tried to say in French last night is so monumentally incompetent that anybody reading the English translation will be inclined to say, "Poor Forsey, his French may be pretty bad but, if this is an example, his English is far worse."

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-11, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. The Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), I move that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of Special Report of the Standing Committee on Rules, Elections and Privileges of the Yukon Territorial Council.

RETIREMENT AGE POLICIES

SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF SELECTION PRESENTED

Senator Petten, Chairman of the Committee of Selection, presented the following report:

Tuesday, December 13, 1977

The Committee of Selection appointed to nominate senators to serve on the several select committees during the present session makes its second report as follows:

Your committee has the honour to submit herewith the list of senators nominated by it to serve on the Special Senate Committee on Retirement Age Policies, namely, the Honourable Senators Adams, Bell, Benidickson, Bosa, Buckwold, Cameron, Cottleau, Croll, Deschatelets, Eudes, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Greene, Inman, Lucier, McNamara, Phillips, Quart, Rowe, Steuart and Williams.

Respectfully submitted,

William J. Petten,
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Petten: I move that the report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT ON WHALING—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: On December 6 the Honourable Senator Austin asked:

Does Canada support the recommendation of the Executive Committee of the International Whaling Commission (IWC) to limit the take of North Pacific Sperm Whales to under 800 as opposed to Japanese and Russian desires to have a 6,000 whale quota?

At the June meeting of the IWC in Australia, the Executive Committee agreed to set the North Pacific Sperm Whale quota at 763. This quota was derived from information provided by a scientific committee of the IWC and was based on a mathematical formula. After the quota was adopted, the Japanese and Russian delegations pointed out that, while the formula would restrict the number of whale kills for 1978, the use of the same formula would greatly increase this figure for 1979. They asked whether the scientific committee could re-study this question so as to apportion the whale kills over the two-year period.

On the basis of new information provided by the scientific committee, the IWC agreed at its recent Tokyo meeting to set the North Pacific whale quota for 1978 at 6,444. Canada supported the recommendations of the scientific committee and the setting of this new quota for 1978.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON CONCENTRATION OF CORPORATE POWER

PUBLICATION OF REPORT—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on November 22 the Honourable Senator Benidickson asked a question. I will not read it in its entirety, but it had to do with the royal commission dealing with corporate mergers and monopolies.

I can answer by saying in reply to the honourable senator's question that it now appears that the report, printed in both official languages, together with a number of related studies, will be available in early March.

This report is under the direction of the two remaining commissioners and will be submitted by them.

● (2010)

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 3, 1977-78

SECOND READING

Hon. Douglas D. Everett moved the second reading of Bill C-15, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1978.

He said: Honourable senators, it is customary for the deputy leader, Senator Langlois, to explain appropriation bills. However, he has suffered a loss in his family and cannot be here this week. I extend to him, on behalf of all members of this house, our sincere condolences.

I also seek the sympathy of honourable senators because, being unknowledgeable and unpractised in this art, I will have to fumble my way through as best I can.

Senator Flynn: You don't believe that.

Senator Everett: Before I begin, I would like to reply to some points that were raised by Senator Flynn—

Senator Flynn: I expected that.

Senator Everett:—when he was speaking to the report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on supplementary estimates (A) which are, of course, the subject of this appropriation bill. Senator Flynn had some considerable difficulty with the figures. He pointed out that he or, at least, his researchers calculated the total authorized expenditures so far in 1977-78 at $45.802 billion, and that the amount I had used was $46.493 billion—a difference of $691 million. Senator Flynn thought that this indicated I had not done my homework.

Senator Flynn: No, no.

[Senator Perrault.]

Senator Everett: Indeed, we were both using correct figures. Senator Flynn was using the net authorized expenditures, and I was using the gross figure. The difference of $691 million is composed of $346 million of amounts repaid on previous loans, and $345 million of advances to foreign development banks, which has been charged to the foreign exchange fund.

Additionally, Senator Flynn pointed out that the total of authorized expenditures for the fiscal year ending on March 31, 1977 was $41.224 billion, and the target of actual expenditures given in that year by the President of the Treasury Board was $42.150 billion, which, as he pointed out, was greater than the authorized expenditures themselves. He said that this looked odd in that normally authorized expenditures would be greater than actual expenditures because actual expenditures take into account normal lapses of spending and revision in programs.

However, the reason for the difference is that the 1977-78 figure of net authorized expenditures of $45.802 billion includes statutory non-budgetary expenditures for the very first time. Had those expenditures been included in the 1976-77 estimates, they would have aggregated $2.278 billion. If that amount is added to Senator Flynn's amount of $41.224 billion the total is $43.502 billion, which is comparable to my 1977-78 amount of $46.493 billion. But if you take off the figures for amounts repaid on previous loans and advances to foreign development banks paid out of the foreign exchange fund, as we did with the 1977-78 figures, then you bring that figure to $43.032 billion, which is comparable to Senator Flynn's figure for 1977-78 of $45.802 billion. So to compare the years, we have the following figures. In the year ending March 31, 1977, the net authorized figure was $43.032 billion. The target expenditure is indeed below that figure—it was $42.150 billion—and the actual expenditures in that year were below the target figures and were $41.078 billion. In 1977-78, as I pointed out in my speech on supplementary estimates (A), the net authorized figure, which is Senator Flynn's figure for 1977-78, is $45.802 billion so far this year, and the target expenditures—and the President of the Treasury Board has told us he is on target—are below that figure again. They amount to $44.450 billion, an increase of 8.2 per cent over the actual expenditures last year, which is less than the rate of inflation.

Honourable senators, I might also address some remarks to Senator Grosart in respect of the numbering of these appropriation acts. Senator Grosart has pointed out in the past that it is confusing because while the appropriation acts are numbered on a calendar year basis, the fiscal year does not correspond with the calendar year. As a result, Appropriation Act No. 1 in 1977 dealt with supplementary estimates (D) for the 1976-77 fiscal year; Appropriation Act No. 2 of 1977 dealt with interim supply for the main estimates for 1977-78; and Appropriation Act No. 3 of 1977 dealt with the balance of the main estimates for 1977-78. Normally, the bill we are dealing with here would be Appropriation Act No. 4 for 1977; however, it has been changed to Appropriation Act No. 3 for the fiscal year 1977-78, and this covers supplementary estimates (A) for 1977-78.

Now, as honourable senators know, the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance examined supplementary estimates (A) in detail. Two revisions have been made to those supplementary estimates in the other place, and these revisions are found by comparing supplementary estimates (A) with Bill C-15. The first revision contains vote 31a of the Department of Regional and Economic Expansion. That vote appropriated $22 million to the Cape Breton Development Corporation to pay its losses. The vote sought to amend section 31(2) of the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act to allow grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes on personal property. Section 31(2) of that act permits grants in lieu of taxes, but only for property taxes, not for personal taxes. As a result, the Speaker of the other place found that the amendment was of a legislative nature and it was removed from the appropriation bill.

● (2020)

The second item is vote L56a under the Ministry of Transport. That vote sought an appropriation of $100,000 so that the Minister of Transport, in the right of Canada, could purchase all the shares of VIA rail. It also included an amendment to section 72(5) of the Railway Act, and that amendment was to exempt VIA from the 6 per cent interest limitation on borrowings under the Railway Act. Again it was found to be legislative in nature and it was removed from the estimates.

As I say, this bill is based on supplementary estimates (A) which provide additional expenditures for this year in the amount of $1.911 billion. It was reviewed in detail by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. I will not bore senators with too many details of the appropriation act, because those details can be found in the supplementary estimates (A) and in the report of the committee. However, I would point out that $990 million worth of funds are to be appropriated under Bill C-15. The major items consist of:

(1) $135 million to enable the financial restructuring of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited;

(2) $125 million for increased compensation payments to refiners of imported oil due to higher than anticipated volumes of imported oil and to the drop in the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar;

(3) $111 million to the Canadian International Development Agency primarily for increased food aid grants and the extension of more bilateral grants rather than loans. This item will be totally offset by freezing funds already appropriated, thus actually resulting in no increase in expenditure requirements;

(4) $72 million for formula payments to the provinces for bilingual education programs to cover increased costs and extended programs and adjustments to entitlements for prior years;

(5) $42 million for increased loans to finance regional electrical interconnections under a long-term agreement with the provinces;

(6) $35 million to pay the federal government's contributions, as an employer, to the Quebec health insurance plan;

(7) $33 million for increased federal contributions to various social and educational programs for Indians and Eskimos;

(8) $100 million to expand the government's 1977-78 employment strategy programs such as Canada Works, Young Canada Works, Local Initiatives and student summer employment;

(9) $100 million is provided for the 1977-78 portion of the recently announced $150 million federal labour intensive projects program; and

(10) $68 million for new programs—some $45 million for the Canadian Home Insulation Program and $23 million for the rehabilitation of western rail lines.

Statutory expenditures, totalling $921 million, were reviewed in detail in our committee report, and the committee also examined twenty-five $1 votes in detail.

Honourable senators, the appropriation bill is before you and I shall be glad to answer any questions that I can in respect of it.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I do not think it is necessary for me to take up very much time in the chamber this evening. Senator Everett has given us an excellent and detailed explanation of the appropriation bill, and it was thoroughly discussed both in the National Finance Committee and in the chamber on the presentation of the report of that committee.

I will not comment on the battle of figures that seems to have arisen. Senator Everett has found a way to reconcile his figures with those of Senator Flynn, and I am quite sure they are both right, as usual.

The most interesting aspect of the report that has been given to us by Senator Everett is the action of the Speaker of the House of Commons in carrying out an initiative taken by the Senate—I think it is quite fair to regard it as such—in the matter of complaining about and, where possible, bringing to an end the amending of legislation by appropriation bills. The Senate committee has taken this stand for many years, first of all on $1 votes and then on more substantive votes. In this case I believe the Speaker's intervention has been in the matter of two substantial votes, but it is refreshing to note that the initiative taken by the Senate committee and the Senate itself has now reached the House of Commons, and I think for the second time the Speaker of that house has ruled that certain votes included in an appropriation bill were not properly before the house because they were legislative in nature.

We have complained about this type of legislation before, this expansion of the methodology of bringing expenditure items before Parliament, and I think there is evidence that in the Senate committee we will have to continue to do so.

I was not satisfied with the presentation that was made this year in respect, particularly, to $1 items, because it does seem to me to be much less clear than the kind of presentation that we had insisted on and had been given earlier. It will be important for the National Finance Committee to insist that we have a full explanation of any item that, in the opinion of the Treasury Board, has the effect of amending existing legislation whether that legislation be normal, substantive legislation or appropriation bills themselves.

The Treasury Board tends to defend the position that there is nothing wrong with an appropriation bill amending another appropriation bill. The position that has been taken over and over again in the Finance Committee is that this does not make sense, when some of these appropriation bills may go back 10 or 15 years and were not justified in the first place, for example, in setting up a crown corporation by a vote in an appropriation bill.

The objection we have taken, of course, has been to the effect that there is no discussion of the purpose, the intention nor the scope of a corporation so set up. It has been the position taken over and over again by the committee that this kind of legislation should be effected in the normal way and not be "brought in by the back door," in an appropriation bill.

I might also say that in my view, as I have said before, and I think it is worth repeating, the report of the committee this year was the best I have seen. I believe that the committee is increasing its surveillance of public spending. I was glad to hear Senator Everett make special mention of the statutory items. I have also referred to that before. I hope the time is coming when we will never again hear the phrase, "Oh, half of this was statutory and, therefore, beyond control." We have heard that statement made. Of course, statutory expenditures are not beyond control at any given time.

I compliment the committee and Senator Everett on the presentation of this report. I think that is all that need be said at this time.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, since Senator Everett thought it necessary to discuss my observations, I just want to put on the record the intent of what I said. It is that the situation is worse this year than last year, because last year the real figures were below both the target and the authorized. The real is always below the authorized, of course, but this year the target is $44.450 billion and if we take $1.3 billion away from the authorized amount of $45.802 billion, then the net amount of real expenditure will be $44.502 billion. This is only $2 billion above the target—but $2 billion is something.

● (2030)

I am just mentioning this because you have set the target for the authorized and the real, and according to the figures given in committee we are not doing as well this year as we did last year.

Senator Everett: I feel I must differ with my honourable friend. What we are dealing with is a target for expenditures, and therefore we have to deal with all the spending that is being done. That is why the statutory non-budgetary items now are included. I am pointing out to Senator Flynn that he did not have those figures, and neither did I, but when those figures are added the comparable figure is $43.032 billion and not the figure we had before of $41.224 billion.

Senator Flynn: Then what is this figure of $43 billion?

Senator Everett: That is the net total authorized expenditure for 1976-77. The target was $42.150 billion, which is some $882 million less than the net authorized figure.

Senator Flynn: I am sorry, but in committee it was stated that the target for 1977-78 was $44.450 billion.

Senator Everett: You are always ahead of me, Senator Flynn, I admit, but you are a year ahead. I am still back in 1976-77.

Senator Flynn: No, I am speaking of the present year.

Senator Everett: Well, the same thing obtains this year as obtained last year. The authorized last year was $43 billion, the target was $42 billion, and the actual was $41 billion. There you have the authorized, the target and the actual expenditures. So it has come down. Now, the net authorized this year is $45.802 billion and the target is $44.450 billion, which again is below.

Senator Flynn: And what is the figure for real expenditures?

Senator Everett: We won't know that until the end of the year.

Senator Flynn: The figure of $44.502 billion was mentioned in committee, and this is worse than last year. Of course, it is above the target.

Senator Everett: With respect, senator, I think that those who were in committee will recall that we pressed the President of the Treasury Board very hard to find out exactly where the actual expenditures were in relation to that target of $44.450 billion. He said he was unable to tell us at this time because he could not calculate the lapses in the programs until the end of the year, but he felt confident that despite some of the egregious increases in expenditures, especially the levelling of the tax points with the provinces, he could reach his target of $45.450 billion. I am sorry, but I don't know where the other figure comes from.

Senator Flynn: The figure of $1.3 billion will lapse, as mentioned in committee; if you subtract that figure from the authorized then you come to a figure which is a little over the target.

Senator Everett: That may be so, but I do not recall the $1.3 billion. It is a good point. But I have to say also that the President of the Treasury Board was firm on the fact that he would do better than the target of $44.450 billion.

Senator Flynn: But not as good as last year. That is the only point I wanted to make.

Senator Everett: All right. I have difficulty dealing with the question of whether it is as good as last year or not. I will let you have that point as long as you let me have this point—that the increase in actual expenditures this year over last year is less than the rate of inflation, and therefore there has been improvement in real economic terms by this government.

Senator Flynn: By the target established for last year and this year, we are doing less well this year. I do not think you are justified in saying that the government is doing extremely well.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Everett moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

SAFE CONTAINERS CONVENTION BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, December 8, the debate on the motion of Senator Petten for second reading of Bill S-4, to implement the International Convention for Safe Containers.

Hon. George I. Smith: Honourable senators, I rise to perform what I think is a relatively easy task this evening. The speech of the Honourable Senator Petten was very clear, and explained very well the objectives of this bill and the contents of the Convention. This, of course, is what one would expect from such a distinguished senator, particularly one whose occupation would necessarily make him familiar with the subject matter of this bill. So I do not have much quarrel with the contents of the bill or the convention, except with respect to one point which does not bear, perhaps, on the merits of either but bears on a point on which it seems to me we must be continually and carefully vigilant.

● (2040)

It intrigues me that this convention would be placed before Parliament for approval without having in it even a clause which says that Parliament approves it. You may read this bill as carefully as you like but you cannot find a plain statement that Parliament approves the convention. What other object is there in putting this bill before Parliament?

I have not made a careful search of all the previous bills which sought the concurrence or the authority of Parliament, but one which occurred to me was the Bretton Woods Agreements Act—it occurred to me, I suppose, because we dealt with it a few months ago, in the last session—and I note that in that act there is this plain straightforward statement of law:

The Agreements for an International Monetary Fund and an International Bank for Reconstruction and Development set out in the schedules are hereby approved.

The act then goes on to give the Governor in Council authority to make the regulations that are necessary to implement the approval of Parliament of the agreements of that day.

The reason I want to draw attention to this point is that it seems to me we are today facing a sort of impatience with Parliament, a sort of feeling that the best way to deal with Parliament is to slip by it if you can, and this seems to me to be another example of this tendency. As I say, what object is there in putting this convention before us if we are not to approve it? How simple it would be to have a straightforward statement in the bill that Parliament approves this convention. But it is not there.

I say again, honourable senators, you may read the bill as carefully as you like, but you cannot find anything that says that Parliament approves this convention. Clause 3 says:

—the Governor in Council may make regulations for carrying out and giving effect to the provisions of the Convention.

Surely, in the ordinary way, before dealing with legislation to give the Governor in Council the right to make regulations to implement something, Parliament should set its stamp of approval upon it. I repeat, it is a simple matter, and I cannot understand why such a clause is not contained in this bill.

Of course, when one cannot understand something which seems to bypass Parliament, one naturally begins to wonder and one naturally gets suspicious. This seems to me to be another example of the tendency about which we must be eternally vigilant, the tendency to overlook the authority and importance of Parliament.

On the other hand, it is rather interesting that in the bill there appears a provision in respect of one matter where the Governor in Council is given authority. There is provision for reference to Parliament of an order made by the Governor in Council. That appears in clause 5, which says:

Subject to this section, the Governor in Council may by order amend the schedule to reflect any amendment to the Annexes to the Convention to which Canada has not objected.

Then it goes on to provide that any order made under this clause must be laid before Parliament within ten sitting days of the time the order is made, and that it comes into force on the thirtieth sitting day, or the day named in the order unless—I emphasize “unless”—within twenty sitting days a motion is filed with the Speaker of the House of Commons signed by fifty members of that house, or, if it is filed with the Speaker of the Senate, signed by twenty senators, the object of which is to revoke the order. It then sets out a very detailed method in respect of the way Parliament is to deal with this problem.

Clause 5 then provides that debate on the motion must begin within six sitting days of the time the motion is filed. It then specifies that after there have been five consecutive hours of debate there must be a vote. If the motion is passed, it is then sent to the other house for concurrence. Then the other house must debate the motion within fifteen sitting days, and as soon as it does so for five consecutive hours a vote must be taken. If the motion is passed by both houses—that is, passed by one house and concurred in by the other—the order made is revoked. If, however, either house rejects the motion to revoke, the order comes into force, either forthwith upon such rejection or by the time named in the order.

This to me is an extremely interesting sort of provision, and one, if it were more frequently resorted to, might remove some of the criticism that I think is correctly made so often of the reservation of the right to the Governor in Council to make regulations about so many things.

Of course, it moves me to ask what is so important about an order made by the Governor in Council giving effect to amendments to the convention, which makes it subject to all this great care and preservation of the right of Parliament to deal with it, over and above the importance of what is in clause 3, which gives the Governor in Council the right to make regulations for carrying out and giving effect to the provisions of the convention without, as I say, any base whatever of approval of Parliament for the convention itself.

I am glad to see that whoever was responsible for this bill was seized with a pang of conscience when he came to clause 5, and has demonstrated to us very clearly how the right of Parliament to exercise supervision over what is done by the Governor in Council can be preserved. I recommend to all honourable senators a very careful study of these provisions to which I have referred, and which are set out in detail in clause 5.

I have made inquiry—I do not pretend it was careful research—of some people who are knowledgeable on the subject of containers, and I believe, along with Senator Petten, that this is a bill the principle of which deserves the support of Parliament. Consequently, I do not in any way suggest that it should be rejected by this house. I draw attention emphatically to the matters which I have mentioned, and I wish also to draw attention to one other matter which might be examined carefully in committee.

● (2050)

The whole tenor of the convention is to provide for safety in handling containers. As I am sure all honourable senators know, a very high proportion of freight, international and national, is handled in these large boxes called containers. I see them every day when I am home in Truro because the rail cars pass through the centre of the town carrying these containers to and from Halifax.

They consist of large boxes, two of which will fill a complete flat car, and almost always, when they are being stored upon piers, wharves or other places of storage, are piled or stacked one upon another. They can be a real menace to those who have anything to do with their handling if they are not safely constructed. Therefore, the whole tenor of the bill is to provide some sort of assurance that in international trade the containers will be reasonably safe to handle.

I notice that the convention, in article IV, provides for inspection by each state which adheres to the convention. I understand that there were some 92 states which might be called signatories, of whom only 10 in addition to Canada so far have officially adhered to the convention. However, I believe that it is expected and hoped that all 92 will eventually adhere.

The inspection is to be made in the state or country in which the containers are built, or, if they are already in existence, in which they happen to be at a given time. One might reasonably hope for a careful standard of safety upon which the inspection will be based, and upon a well-trained, and uniformly trained, inspecting staff.

[Senator Smith (Colchester).]

In moving the second reading of this bill, I notice that Senator Petten said—this is not contained in the legislation or in the convention itself—that inspection in Canada would be done by quite a wide variety of people, such as coast guard marine surveyors, the Canadian Transport Commission, rail safety inspectors, civil aeronautics safety inspectors and customs inspectors. While I have not the least criticism of the qualifications of those people in their own fields—I know they are good—it seems to me that in providing for such a wide spectrum of people, with an equally wide spectrum of experience and training, to become inspectors we run the risk of a certain lack of uniformity. When one considers what other countries may do, one realizes that they too may decide that a wide spectrum of their public service people will be made inspectors.

It seems to me that those who are concerned with the convention and its enforcement, and particularly with inspection—"inspection" here means inspection to determine whether the containers are safe and whether the convention is complied with in that respect—must be extremely careful to ensure that there should be an effort made to achieve uniformity of inspection standards—not the standard of construction required, because that is set out in the convention itself, but the standard of inspection.

I am tempted, of course, to deliver myself of some very strong feelings about the importance of containers in today's international trade, the importance of the ports in the region to which Senator Petten and myself have the honour to belong—the Atlantic region—and the importance of ensuring that the advantage, which ports in the Atlantic region have in international trade because of geography, is not minimized by lack of attention by the government; that, indeed, it should be recognized that the geographical advantage, which is of very great importance, be utilized to the greatest possible extent. This perhaps requires more careful attention than has been given in the past.

I thank honourable senators for bearing with me. I repeat that I do not oppose the principle of the bill. I believe it should receive second reading and that it should go to the committee designated by the sponsor of the bill, particularly as I myself have some interest in that committee.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should like to point out that the procedure which Senator Smith (Colchester) has referred to in clause 5 is precisely the kind of procedure that the Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments advocated in its last report. I agree with Senator Smith that that kind of procedure should be used more often with respect to the type of regulation which it is suggested should be made under clause 3.

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, unless any other honourable senator wishes to participate in the debate at this time, I would move the adjournment of the debate.

Senator Grosart: The honourable senator cannot move the adjournment. Someone else will have to do that. It is the honourable senator's own motion.

Senator Croll: Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Croll, debate adjourned.

INCOME TAX

CONSIDERATION OF FIRST REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON ADVANCE STUDY—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the inquiry of Senator Hayden calling the attention of the Senate to the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce entitled: "First Report, on the advance study of the Budget Resolutions respecting income tax and any bill or other matter relating thereto," tabled in the Senate on December 8, 1977.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, when I adjourned the debate I had intended to call the attention of the Senate to the four amendments to Bill C-11 that are recommended in the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. I had also intended to draw attention to some caveats, to some questions raised, to some statements of the committee's feelings and wishes, and so on.

However, we find ourselves in a somewhat unusual position at this time in that Bill C-11 was introduced in the Senate on first reading earlier this evening and we have had a report of the committee, making certain recommendations and suggesting certain changes, before the bill came to us. I am not criticizing that procedure. It is one that we have been developing for some time to enable committees of the Senate, and the Senate itself, to be fully prepared to discuss and pass a bill, when it comes to us, as expeditiously as is reasonable under the circumstances.

For that reason, honourable senators, I have nothing further to say at this time. The bill will be before us tomorrow, in keeping with the motion made for second reading, at which time there will no doubt be comments on the bill itself, on the amendments, and on other suggestions made by the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee which, at the present moment, is meeting to hear the minister.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other honourable senator wishes to participate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

● (2100)

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

SIXTY-FOURTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE, SOFIA, BULGARIA—DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from Wednesday, December 7, the debate on the inquiry of Senator Petten, calling the attention of the Senate to the Sixty-fourth Annual Conference of the Inter-Parliamentary Union held at Sofia, Bulgaria, from 20th to 30th September, 1977, and in particular to the discussions and proceedings of the Conference and the participation therein of the delegation from Canada.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I wish to participate in this debate, but only briefly, because, as was pointed out by Senator Petten when he called our attention to this conference, he, Senator Bélisle and I were the three members from this chamber who attended.

I have to say at the outset that I did not happen to be in the house when the two previous speeches were made, but after reading them it seemed to me almost impossible for both senators to have attended the same conference. My opinion of this conference is that it was probably the most satisfying and the most useful meeting of parliamentarians that I have attended in my entire political career. I have attended a few such conferences, so I did have some feeling for the general activity and the satisfaction that comes out of them. While the discussions I was involved in dealt generally with human rights and that sort of thing, the conference dealt specifically with the whole question of more stable and peaceful relations in the Middle East. To put it more precisely, the subject under discussion was the action of the Israeli authorities in the occupied territories.

The reason why I say this was a particularly satisfying meeting is that it took place in the latter part of September, and I am sure all honourable senators will agree that there has been a dramatic and significant improvement in the situation in the Middle East. A dialogue has begun—a dialogue that has never taken place before in the many years that Israel and the Arab states around Israel have been having problems along their borders.

When we began the discussion of this question in Sofia, it was easy to see that there was a great deal of disagreement. There were charges and countercharges respecting certain violent acts that had been committed by one side or the other against the people in those areas, and during the first two or three days of this debate such animosity was displayed by the delegates from Israel and their Arab neighbours that they would hardly recognize that there were delegates representing the other side of the question. As the debate proceeded into the third, fourth and perhaps even the fifth day, the charges and countercharges were still being made, but the fact that they were talking to each other across the conference room made them acknowledge that the other people were there. It is also fair to say that during the last few days of the conference much softer language was being used, and indeed there was a determination to try to reach some kind of an understanding.

One of the reasons for this happening is that there were delegations present from other countries. Someone has said that there were 72 countries, including the United States and the Soviet Union, represented. Representatives of Canada, Australia, Yugoslavia, and several other middle powers—if you like to refer to them as middle powers—which have no axe to grind or any great international influence to exert in the power play that goes on in the Middle East all the time, constantly expressed their concern for the well-being and rights of the people who are directly concerned, namely, the Palestinians in and near the area in question, as well as the Israeli people who live close to the borders where these skirmishes have been occurring for so many years.

I say to honourable senators that in my opinion, although there may be different views and interpretations as to the usefulness of these international conferences of parliamentarians, they do provide a forum where parliamentarians can get together and discuss their mutual concern for the problems that exist, and thus improve understanding on all sides.

There is, however, another, equally important aspect to be noted, and that is the ability to shift world opinion, however marginally or significantly, at any time. I believe it is fair to say that that did, in fact, happen in Sofia during the latter part of September. I do not want to claim an excessive amount of credit for this, because certainly there were meetings going on in other places in the world. For example, the United Nations itself was seized with this matter at the same time, and sincere efforts were being made to get the Geneva conference functioning again.

As I said, in my opinion this was an opportunity for parliamentarians to bring to a world forum their concern about the rights of the people who are affected by the fighting that goes on across those borders. Therefore, it seems to me that we should take some credit for having made a useful contribution to the present state of affairs.

It is too early to say whether the momentum initiated by President Sadat's visit to Israel is going to lead to a satisfactory conclusion in the area in question, but there has certainly been another step forward. At least people on both sides of the dispute are attempting to talk to each other about it. We should not back too far away from accepting the idea that these meetings are useful, because, as I said earlier, there was a very perceptible change in attitude as the discussions went on.

I was concerned when Senator Bélisle suggested on December 7 that the Canadian delegation did not have the right to do certain things, and that they were almost told what position to take. I want to say categorically that never at any time during the briefing session before we left Canada, or during the discussions in caucus each morning before we went to the meetings, was I told what to think, nor was there any attempt to persuade any of us to take any particular action. We were briefed on what the official Canadian position has been at various meetings in the past, but each delegate was completely free to take any action he wished within the conference rules.

Honourable senators, I do not want to keep you any longer. In my view this was a very useful meeting, and hopefully the negotiations now going on between Israel and her neighbours will come to a successful conclusion. If we can take even the smallest amount of credit for having contributed to this understanding, I think it was an extremely worthwhile exercise.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other honourable senator wishes to participate in this debate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

SCIENCE POLICY

VOLUME 4 OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Lamontagne, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Science Policy, appointed in the last session of Parliament and authorized in that session to consider and report on Canadian government and other expenditures on scientific activities and matters related thereto, entitled: A Science Policy for Canada, Volume 4, Progress and Unfinished Business, tabled in the Senate on Tuesday, 25th October 1977.—(Honourable Senator Grosart).

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to speak to the order standing adjourned in my name at this time for a special reason, which I should perhaps report to the Senate. Although the Senate committee has terminated its hearings, there are one or two important matters still before the Senate in connection with the winding up of that committee. For that reason it has been suggested to me that it would be wise to keep this inquiry before the Senate until those matters are determined. I believe that will be done very shortly. For that reason, I ask that this order stand adjourned in my name until that time.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, December 14, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE HONOURABLE J. CAMPBELL HAIG

TRIBUTES ON RETIREMENT FROM SENATE

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I am sure that you will be very sad to learn that our colleague, Senator Campbell Haig, has decided to retire, and that his retirement will become effective before the end of the year.

We on this side of the house were very unhappy to learn of his having made, for reasons of health, this decision to retire. I want to take this opportunity, since he will not be here tomorrow, to tell Senator Haig how much we have appreciated his contribution to the Senate during the 15 years that he has served here. During several of those years he served as chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications and did an admirable job.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: We wish him well. We wish him the kind of happy and enjoyable retirement he so richly deserves.

I think I should express the hope, since our numbers on this side will have again been diminished, that he will be replaced by someone who will sit with us. I am certain I express the sentiments not only of those who sit in the opposition but of the whole Senate, when I wish you, Campbell, Godspeed, good health, and many years of happy retirement. We thank you, on behalf of the Senate and on behalf of the people of Canada, for what you have done for this country and for the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, certainly those on the government side are more than pleased to join in the well-deserved tribute which has just been paid by the distinguished Leader of the Opposition to our colleague, Senator Campbell Haig. Senator Haig and, indeed, all of the Haig family have a great and exemplary tradition of service to this nation and to Parliament.

It is truly an occasion of regret for all of us that Senator Haig has come to a decision to retire, but we understand that decision. Aided splendidly by his fine and charming wife, Senator Haig has brought ability, civility and humanity to all of his many responsibilities on Parliament Hill during his period of service in our midst.

We shall certainly miss him, and as we honour him today and as he takes his retirement he does so with our warm best wishes. He has served Canada well, he has served his province well and he has served Parliament well.

● (1410)

May I say in passing that it is to be hoped that in the not too distant future, Senator Haig will be replaced in the Senate by a person of equally outstanding ability from opposition ranks. If so, we shall be well served.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I would not want this occasion to pass without saying a word or two.

I served in the Senate with Senator Haig's father, a distinguished parliamentarian in his day, and now we all acknowledge Campbell Haig to be a fine public servant. It should be remembered that in his native province he was active in the field of education, and he did a great deal of work with crippled children. He devoted himself to their cause.

After spending 15 years in the Senate one makes friends here, no matter on what side of the house one sits, and one just doesn't walk away from the Senate without leaving an impression. Senator Haig never really bit too hard politically. He let you know that he was a good oldtime Conservative, but he realized there were others in the world too.

It was a pleasure to serve in this house for 15 years with Senator Haig, and I am sorry to see him leave. Both he and his father served this country admirably.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I, too, wish to say a few words with respect to the retirement of Senator Haig. It came as a great surprise to me to hear this from the Leader of the Opposition today. I did not know it was being contemplated.

Like Senator Croll, I go back to the time Senator Haig's father was a distinguished member of this chamber. When I first came here he was one of the great motive forces in the ranks of the opposition, and subsequently he became Leader of the Government in the Senate.

An historic picture of the Opening of Parliament in the fall of 1957 shows Senator John Haig sitting to the left of Her Majesty the Queen. That is a very important picture, not only for the family but in the history of this institution and this nation.

I am going to say something I have never said to Senator Haig before. I can remember being in the gallery of this chamber many years ago when I was a student at the university here. I was listening to a debate in which his father was taking part. I did not realize it was his father at the time. Senator Forsey might agree with this, or perhaps he will disagree with it violently. I thought the man making the speech was Senator Meighen. After hearing Senator Meighen speak, I was still struck by the resemblance and the kind of delivery they both had and the incisive way they attacked a problem. John Haig was then at the height of his career.

There is one thing that the present Senator Haig should know as he leaves. He has given us good example in committee. He has attended faithfully; he has never attempted to dominate a committee; and he has always asked pertinent questions. But the greatest example he gave us was that he never made a long speech in this chamber.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I hope that Senator Haig's health will continue to improve, and I wish him and his wife, for whom we all have the warmest affection, every happiness in their retirement.

Hon. J. Campbell Haig: Honourable senators, as this will be the last time I shall address this august chamber, having been a member of it for the past fifteen and one-half years, let me say how much I have enjoyed it. I have enjoyed the friendships and the debates we have had, both in committee and in the house. I have enjoyed the leaders under whom I have worked, both on the government side and on the opposition side. I have enjoyed serving under the guidance and direction of the various Speakers who have presided over our deliberations since I have been here. I have now come to the last Speaker under whom I will be serving in this chamber. Madam Speaker, you have done nobly.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Haig: I am greatly impressed with your knowledge, and with the improvement you have brought about in the saying of prayers in the French language.

I want to thank the Leader of the Government in the Senate, Senator Perrault; my leader, Senator Flynn; and Senator David Croll and Senator John Connolly for their kind remarks about both my father and my wife.

[Translation]

THE HONOURABLE JAMES JEROME

ACCIDENT INVOLVING SON OF SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS—MESSAGE OF SYMPATHY

Hon. Jean Marchand: I wonder whether it would be appropriate to inform this house that the son of the Speaker in the other place met with a serious accident yesterday. I feel the Senate should extend its sympathy to the honourable James Jerome for this appalling experience.

[English]

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. MacFarlane had been substituted for that of Mr. Maine on the list of members appointed to serve on the Standing Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. MacFarlane had been substituted for that of Mr. Andres (Lincoln) on the list of members appointed to serve on the Standing Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament.

RESTAURANT OF PARLIAMENT

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. MacFarlane had been substituted for that of Mr. Guay (St. Boniface) on the list of members appointed to serve on the Standing Joint Committee on the Restaurant of Parliament.

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

PROPOSED SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, a message has been received from the House of Commons requesting the Senate to unite with that house in the formation of a special joint committee to consider and report upon matters bearing upon the development of the National Capital Region, including the programs and operations of the National Capital Commission.

● (1420)

Honourable senators, when shall this message be taken into consideration?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that the message be taken into consideration later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of Report, dated November 30, 1977, of the Law Reform Commission of Canada entitled "The Exigibility to Attachment of Remuneration Payable by the Crown in Right of Canada", pursuant to section 18 of the Law Reform Commission Act, Chapter 23 (1st Supplement), R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Department of Transport for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 34 of the Department of Transport Act, Chapter T-15, R.S.C., 1970.

INCOME TAX

SECOND AND FINAL REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON ADVANCE STUDY TABLED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, I desire to table the second and final report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on its advance study of the budget resolutions respecting income tax and any bill or other matter relating thereto. I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent record of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix.)

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, I ask leave to give a short explanation of this report.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Hayden: This report results from the meeting of the committee with the Minister of Finance yesterday evening. At that meeting we dealt with the recommendations contained in the first report of the committee which was tabled on December 8. It will be recalled that subsequently—in fact, on Monday last—I gave an explanation of the substance of the report.

I should point out, in connection with those amendments, that two related to interest on policy loans, to the amount of a policy loan and its relationship to repayment or when repayment is made, and to what happens with respect to taxes paid at the time the loan is granted. The amendments relating to those items, which were introduced by the minister in the other place, were dealt with before the time limitation applied and therefore form part of the bill now before the Senate.

Another amendment, which dealt with employees' loans, tax-free or at low interest, was introduced in the Commons by the Minister of Finance. The item to which that amendment related was not reached before the expiry of the time limit for debate on clause by clause study of Bill C-11, and, as a result, it died on the order paper. The minister last night undertook to arrange to have the amendment introduced in the next budget, and in the income tax bill flowing therefrom.

With regard to the elimination of pre-1972 surpluses proposed in the bill, we found an apparent conflict between the dividend guidelines issued by the Anti-Inflation Board and the proposals for dealing with the elimination of pre-1972 surpluses. The expiry date for the guidelines is October 1978, and the expiry or terminal date for being able to avail oneself of the procedures to clear up those pre-1972 surpluses was very close, in that the bill proposed that the end of the period in which one could deal with them would be December 31, 1978.

We brought that matter to the attention of the minister, who advised that there was a directive in the course of preparation by the Anti-Inflation Board to deal with it, and there would be a public statement issued shortly to remove all fear of there being anything restrictive in the guidelines of the AIB relating to dividends, or anything that would interfere with the exercise of the right to distribute those pre-1972 surpluses.

The minister also dealt with the other phase of the matter, namely, the fact that the plan which the government had in mind in proposing elimination of the pre-1972 surpluses by distribution was intended to remove something that was giving the government great concern, because, as time passes, the records become less and less available to make determinations which are necessary in order to arrive at the amount of the surpluses under the different classifications. The minister undertook that if the time limit of December 31, 1978 did not appear to afford enough time as it worked along to that end, he would introduce an amendment so as to extend the period for at least another year.

● (1430)

In connection with the multinational life insurance companies, the minister undertook that a study would be made of the effect of eliminating certain loss carry-forward positions and deductions arising from the present provisions of the act in respect of which the evidence before us had indicated some so-called "treatment" for the purpose of accounting for Canadian investment income, which was never the intention of the legislation. He undertook that as and when that study was completed it would be provided to us and, of course, the regulations will, of necessity, come to us when they are published. We will then be free to determine whether there is any unfairness in the way of the proposed reductions in actuarial reserves, or in the denial of the right to carry forward losses in relation to the sale of portfolio investments at low prices in relation to their cost.

In connection with the nil assessment, which was quite a bone of contention as far as the committee was concerned, the minister has undertaken to make a study of this himself to determine the right of the taxpayer to be advised as to what is the amount of his loss when a nil assessment has been received. As you will recall, if a taxpayer files a tax return and he shows a loss, the department very often adopts the practice of issuing what they call a "nil assessment". In other words, they do not appear to challenge the amount of the loss. A nil assessment simply means that due to the state of a taxpayer's account no tax is payable.

The courts have held, of course, that a nil assessment is not an appealable assessment. We sought to require that the law be changed so as to require the minister to determine the amount of the loss, and to provide it to the taxpayer at his request. The minister has undertaken to study this himself, and I can safely say that the committee had enough confidence, generated by the minister's general reactions to the questions and the matters that were discussed last night, that it was prepared to accept his undertaking in that regard.

We had submissions from the Hutterites respecting communal organizations. In connection with one of the issues raised we recommended a rewriting of the provisions governing the Hutterites' obligations to pay income taxes. There is a clause in the bill under which they can elect to be treated on an individual basis even though the funds are collected in a central pot or treasury. The returns are filed on an individual basis on behalf of the adult members of the communal organization. There is another provision in the bill under which, if any amount of their taxes or penalties remains unpaid, they lose the right of election. We thought this was too severe a penalty, and the department agreed with us and said that you should never expect there would be such an arrogant administration that a situation like this could develop.

However, the minister has agreed that amendments will be introduced if this situation exposes itself in the administration; if the Revenue Department does not extend all the extra facilities and does not deprive the Hutterite of his obligation to file an income tax return, or to have one filed on his behalf. If the administration does not go that far amendments will be introduced so that some relief will be afforded, the minister undertaking that he will introduce amendments to provide that flexibility.

These are the amendments contained in our report which were discussed with the minister last night, and this is the treatment he proposed. In some cases amendments were actually made; in other cases an undertaking to amend was given; in still other cases an undertaking was given to study or to take under consideration the points of view that were expressed.

In these circumstances, in our second and final report, we recommend in favour of the bill.

Senator Grosart: As a matter of clarification, and speaking only of the amendments where the word "amendment" was used, could Senator Hayden tell us how many of the four amendments proposed are incorporated in the bill as it comes before us? I know he spoke of the first two, in the life insurance field. Are the other two incorporated in the bill as it is now?

Senator Hayden: No, there are no others incorporated in the bill. I told you about the third one which concerns employee loans, which would be interest-free or at a low interest rate. There were conditions attached to this proposal in the bill. One situation that was not covered was that of an employee, by reason of his position, returning to a location in Canada. The minister had agreed when we raised that issue that it should be amended, and he did introduce an amendment in the other place, but it died by reason of the time limitation occurring before the item was reached in their consideration of the bill.

[Senator Hayden.]

Those are the three items in respect of which amendments were undertaken.

There are only two items that are in the bill—the interest on policy loans, and the treatment of the loan itself where the amount of the loan in the first instance becomes taxable income. If it becomes taxable income and is repaid, then in the year in which it is repaid the portion which relates to tax that was paid is deductible from the income of the taxpayer in the year.

Senator Grosart: Then is it correct to say that of the four amendments proposed in the report, two are incorporated in the bill as it is now before us?

Senator Hayden: That is right.

Senator Flynn: Did the minister indicate whether he would like the Senate to adopt the amendment that he did not have time to move in the house?

Senator Hayden: No, he did not. He said he would introduce it at the next session, and we have his undertaking in that regard.

Senator Flynn: With retroactive effect?

Senator Hayden: I am satisfied with either. I still have confidence in the minister's undertaking.

Senator Grosart: Perhaps I may ask a further question. The committee took quite a strong stand on the question of the retroactive effect of one clause, namely, that referring to the elimination of loss carry-forward positions. Was any undertaking given to the committee last night as to what the attitude of the government would be in respect of the committee's quite serious criticism of the potential or possible retroactive effect of that provision in the bill?

• (1440)

Senator Hayden: No, that did not enter into the recommendation that we made. The retroactive effect was a position that we claimed was the effect of what was proposed to be done to the extent of disallowing losses. That would mean that if they were disallowed in 1977, as the losses were earned and accumulated from 1975 to 1977, they could no longer be carried forward. Our position was that that was, in effect, retroactive.

The officials of the department, when they appeared before us, first of all, challenged the statement that it was retroactive. Then, if you read their evidence carefully, you will see that they did go so far as to agree that perhaps it was a teeny-weeny bit retroactive. But that got lost in the bigger question that we did not have sufficient facts to understand the real effect of disallowing this carry-forward of losses, and we did not know what was going to be done in the way of compensatory corrections.

We tried to get that information from the life insurance companies. It was indicated to us, since the association was comprised of domestic life insurance companies and multinational life insurance companies, that there was a difference in viewpoint. The multinationals, of course, had some objections to some features of the proposals. The domestic life insurance companies, who were in some measure to be compensated for their less advantageous position, had the other view. That was indicated to us, and it was also indicated that they could not appear because they could not make a submission that would satisfy all their members.

We felt that we wanted all the facts, so we made a recommendation that the report resulting from the study the department is making be made available to us in order that we may then determine whether there is an essential element of unfairness. We are not in a position to do that at this time.

Senator McDonald: I would like to ask Senator Hayden a question with respect to the provision respecting loans on life insurance policies and the deductibility of interest on those loans. Does this clause apply to loans that are already in effect, or is there a date on which it will come into effect with respect to loans that are already in existence?

Senator Hayden: The legislation takes effect from March 31, 1977. As I said the other night, there is an interpretative ruling in the department that the bill would have destroyed the effect of. That ruling is that the interest on a policy loan that has a business purpose is deductible as an expense, but the bill, if it had not been changed, would have destroyed the effectiveness of that.

Senator Walker: Honourable senators, the manner in which this legislation has been dealt with is an example of the usefulness of the Senate. The Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, under the able and distinguished direction of Senator Hayden, and with the assistance of the opposition, have gone over this bill carefully and made recommendations to the Minister of Finance, the Honourable Mr. Chrétien, who has accepted almost all of them. In respect of those that have not already been included in the bill, we have the minister's undertaking to include them in future legislation. If this is not co-operation in politics, I do not know what is.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

LEGISLATION—QUESTION

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I wish to ask the Leader of the Government, in view of the approaching Christmas adjournment, what legislation we are expected to pass before we adjourn. What is our legislative timetable?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the bills to be assented to before the Christmas recess are three in number: Bill C-11, dealing with income tax; Bill C-15, the supply bill covering supplementary estimates (A) and Bill C-5, the Canada Elections Act. It is also hoped that Bill C-3, respecting Air Canada, can be given third reading in the Senate—most likely with amendments—and if the Commons agree with the amendments the bill could receive royal assent before Christmas.

The Senate should also name the senators who are to be members of the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region before adjourning. This resolution will be debated later this day, as honourable senators are aware.

There is a strong possibility, if events move along at the anticipated pace in the other place, that our work could be completed by Friday evening of this week. We are awaiting a report concerning events in the other place and we hope to know later today. I know that honourable senators have travel plans to make, but if certain events transpire then some of us may be leaving for our respective provinces probably late Friday night or perhaps Saturday morning.

There may be an inclination on the part of honourable senators to deal expeditiously with the measures before us. Most of the measures are not complicated or controversial. In the case of the income tax bill, for example, a great deal of preliminary study has been given by the appropriate standing committee. If this work can be completed we may be able to complete our deliberations on Friday. This is a matter I hope to be able to discuss with the Leader of the Opposition later today, but I would certainly invite the views of honourable senators with respect to their preferences.

Senator Flynn: If the bill on the Canada Elections Act reaches us on Friday afternoon, as I understand may be the case, does the leader think we might adjourn tomorrow and come back to complete our work on Monday or Tuesday?

Senator Perrault: Yes, that is a distinct possibility. However, the Canada Elections Act is not a controversial measure. It relates entirely to the House of Commons and essentially and primarily to matters in that place. It is not a measure which ordinarily would be subject to much debate in our chamber. Certainly, I think the honourable Leader of the Opposition has made a point, and we may know in a few hours the fate of that particular bill in the other place. If other honourable senators wish to express opinions, I know that all of us here would be interested in their views. I would be interested to know whether there is a general inclination to come back Monday, instead of completing the work on Friday.

Senator Croll: I don't know if I speak for all senators, but we want to go home.

● (1450)

Senator Flynn: I know very well that the senator wants to go home. I would rather go home myself than listen to him. My point is a very technical one. If the Elections Act comes to us late Friday afternoon and we pass it then, we may be too late for royal assent, because the House of Commons will be adjourning at 5 o'clock. Therefore, we would have to come back for royal assent on Monday. Now, I know we would only need a corporal's guard and we certainly would not need Senator Croll, but some of us would have to be here in any event. So it seems to me that it would be silly to deal with the Elections Act in a few minutes on Friday to meet a royal assent that may not be. Though the bill is not of direct interest to us, I would suggest that it is of great interest to the people of Canada generally, and I think we should take more than just a few minutes to look into it.

Senator Croll: Honourable senators, I understand that the last measure to be dealt with there will be the labour bill, and that the elections bill will probably be passed tomorrow. This is the information I received this morning.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the situation is this. A special debate has been scheduled in the House of Commons for Monday and Tuesday of next week. It is anticipated that there will be no legislation under discussion in that house during those two days. We have no special debate scheduled in the Senate, of course, during that time. The question of whether or not we return next week is really meaningless to a number of us, because we must be back in Ottawa in any case. However, the interests of the people of Canada must always be well served, and I am sure that we are all in agreement that the remaining measures must be properly considered and debated. I am entirely in agreement with the honourable senator who made a similar observation a moment or two ago. I suggest, however, that we will be unable to know the status of legislation until we receive further information from the other place. If the Elections Bill does come to us late Friday afternoon and it is the opinion of honourable senators that there is no time to give it careful attention, then there is no doubt whatever that we should be back here next week. It may be possible, however, to obtain leave to proceed with the bill, and additionally there is a possibility of scheduling royal assent for Friday night if honourable senators feel that to be appropriate.

Senator Flynn: That is my point. It will not be possible to have royal assent Friday night because the House of Commons adjourns at 5 o'clock, and since they have to come back on Monday they will not stay here for us. That is the difficulty I am pointing out to the leader. I do not want to see the Senate stay here on Friday just waiting, without being certain that if we do wait we will be able to complete our work.

Senator Perrault: I just want to assure honourable senators that it is possible that appropriate arrangements could be made for Friday night if that is their desire.

Senator Flynn: This is impossible unless there is unanimous consent in the other place.

Senator Perrault: Yes. Nevertheless, it is possible, and an indication was given this morning that there is the possibility of obtaining that kind of consent. So I am suggesting that the possibility is very strong that this could be done. However, shall we give it a few hours to see how the legislation proceeds in the other place?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I should like to mention one factor that has not been considered at all, although it does not necessarily change what the Leader of the Opposition has to say about the Elections Act. Not only is this an act that deals with matters that concern only the House of Commons, but, as he knows, it is the subject of an all-party agreement. The legislation has been brought forward with the agreement of all parties in the other place. I mention that for the record as a possible indication of how much time it will be necessary to spend on this bill in the Senate.

[Senator Flynn.]

Senator Smith (Colchester): Perhaps I might be permitted to make an observation or two, not to keep us here any longer but to register an objection to this practice of having our travel plans hanging on some undetermined event over which we have no control. It seems to me that, while my travel plans must be no more difficult to make than anyone else's, it would be far more satisfactory if we made a schedule of work and stuck by it. Should work come to us sooner than we expected it, we would deal with it when we intended to anyway, and if it did not come to us as soon as we expected it, at least we would be here and ready to deal with it. I don't really know whether one can make travel arrangements at the drop of a hat, but my inquiries lead me to believe that there wouldn't be much chance of my changing my travel arrangements to get me home on Friday, and I think that situation would apply to others. It seems to me that a sensible, responsible body like ours should be capable of making plans to deal with legislation that might come to us, and then stick by those plans so that we could take part in the deliberations and also make satisfactory travel arrangements.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, our distinguished colleague from Nova Scotia has had vast experience in the political arena. I, too, have had a number of years of service in that sphere, as have many members of this chamber, and I have yet to come across any legislative body in this country which could be absolutely certain about its sittings and adjournments. This is characteristic of politics. It certainly has been during my entire career, and I am sure it has been in the case of every other assembly, former representatives of which are now serving in this chamber.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Perhaps I might crave the indulgence and leave of the Senate to speak more than once, as my honourable friend the Leader of the Government has. He has not got my point at all. I am saying that we should make our plans so that we know that we are going to be here and available at a time well within the best calculations that can be made, so that the work we are expected to deal with will be before us, and so that we will not have to hang around here on Friday, wondering whether or not the other house is going to do something. That is my point.

I am well aware of the uncertainties of the situation; I am also well aware of the possibility of making plans, and that is all I am asking for.

Senator Perrault: I think it was Burns who said, "The best laid schemes o' mice an' men gang aft a-gley." And this is the case in politics.

If the honourable senator suggests that we should schedule our work rigidly, and, come hell or high water, should depart on a certain date, I suggest to him that under certain circumstances it would thereby be impossible for the public interest to be served.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I do not know why the honourable leader resorts, when he cannot find an answer to a problem, to the argument of "serving the public interest." I am as much concerned with the public interest as he is. The public interest would be better served if we were to plan, as the Leader of the Opposition suggested, to deal with this legislation on Monday, if it reaches us by that time, rather than doing it the way the Leader of the Government suggests—hanging around like a trembling leaf for a high wind to knock down. Surely what we are suggesting is sensible and reasonable. The way to serve the public interest is to do what the Leader of the Opposition has said. That would enable far more of the members of this house to be here, and to apply their experience and abilities to any work that comes before us.

● (1500)

I do not yield for one moment to the Leader of the Government in my concern for the public interest, and I get just a little tired of hearing remarks as though he were the sole guardian of public interest and the rest of us didn't care about it. That is completely unfair of him, and he ought to be careful about the number of occasions on which he uses this expression "public interest" in a way that imputes to the rest of us a lack of concern.

Senator Perrault: I am not imputing any such thing. I am suggesting that in a few hours we may know how that bill is progressing in the other house. If the honourable senator is in the chamber I may be able to advise him on this.

Senator Denis: The adjournment is set for Wednesday, December 21.

Senator Flynn: You did not have to say that.

Senator Denis: I said it just in case you forgot to. All the leader is saying is that if you would like to go home a little earlier it is up to you, it is not up to him. It is up to the House of Commons as to when we will get the bill, and if necessary we will come back on Monday to deal with it. Of course, I can appreciate that this might be too simple for a Tory to understand.

Senator Flynn: It is very simple, especially if, like Senator Denis, you have no travel plans to make. Senator Denis has no problems along these lines, and he doesn't care about the rest of us.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

STATEMENTS BY UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR TO CANADA— QUESTION

Senator Lang: Honourable senators, I should like to change the subject and direct a question to the Leader of the Government regarding a matter of particular concern to me because of my present position as co-chairman of the Canada-United States Inter-Parliamentary Group. It is more particularly of concern not only to me but to so many other parliamentarians, because of the high regard in which we all hold the United States Ambassador to Canada, Mr. Thomas Enders.

My question is: In view of the questions asked in the House of Commons last Friday and last Monday and, I believe, yesterday, and in view of news reports arising out of these questions and the continuing uncertainty with respect to the matter, would the leader inform the Senate whether or not Canada has sent a note or made any representations to the Government of the United States respecting public pronouncements made in Canada by the United States Ambassador to Canada?

Senator Perrault: The answer is emphatically, no.

[Translation]

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

MIRABEL AIRPORT—STRIKE BY BLUE-COLLAR WORKERS

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I do not wish to start a new debate on the matter we discussed previously, but could the Leader of the Government indicate whether the airport snow removal staff have come to an agreement, or will the public be faced with problems during the coming Christmas season?

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the information provided by the Ministry of Transport which I have at my desk indicates that Mirabel airport appears to be the only airport with a current report on their difficulties in this area of clean-up.

The blue-collar workers at Mirabel airport are refusing to clear the runways. Therefore, the only airlines presently using Mirabel appears to be Quebecair and, possibly, KLM, the Royal Dutch Airlines. All other airlines have indicated that they will undertake their landings in and out of Dorval. They would prefer to do this rather than face the difficulties on the runways at Mirabel as a result of the refusal by the blue-collar workers to remove the snow.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 3, 1977-78

THIRD READING

Senator Everett moved the third reading of Bill C-15, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1978.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

SAFE CONTAINERS CONVENTION BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Petten, seconded by the Honourable Senator Buckwold, for the second reading of Bill S-4, intituled: "An Act to implement the International Convention for Safe Containers".—(Honourable Senator Croll).

Senator Croll: I yield to Senator Petten.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Senator Grosart: Is the Honourable Senator Petten closing the debate?

Senator Petten: I am.

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Petten speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on second reading of this bill.

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, a number of questions were asked last Thursday when I introduced this bill on second reading, and again last night by the Honourable Senator Smith (Colchester). If the bill receives second reading I will move that it be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, where officers of the Department of Transport will be present to answer these and any other questions which may arise.

I wish to thank honourable senators for the interest they have shown in this legislation, particularly Senator Smith, whose remarks last evening were very discerning. I am pleased that this bill will be going to the Transport and Communications Committee under his able and distinguished chairmanship.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a third time?

Senator Petten moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

Motion agreed to.

● (1510)

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the second reading of Bill C-11, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds.

He said: Honourable senators, let me say at the outset, for purposes of the record, that it is not to be thought that the Senate is considering Bill C-11 for the first time today. The budget of March 31, 1977 resulted in the introduction of Bill C-56, a bill to amend the Income Tax Act. Bill C-56 died on the Order Paper with the end of the Second Session of the Thirtieth Parliament. A new Minister of Finance was appointed before the opening of the current session, and on October 20 he brought in an economic and fiscal statement, followed by a ways and means motion, subsequent to which Bill C-11 was introduced for first reading in the other place. Both the ways and means motions and Bill C-56 of March-April, 1977 have been modified by the bill now before us.

On November 1 last, the Senate authorized the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee to examine and report upon any bill relating to income tax as well as any ways and means motions for the same purpose. The committee held some 14 meetings on the subject matter of Bill C-11. They were lengthy meetings, consuming a total of some 27 hours or more.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

The first two meetings were devoted to a full discussion of the provisions of the bill. The bill itself is an intricate one, containing some 116 clauses. Our experts on those two occasions gave us an overview of the existing income tax laws and the changes proposed by Bill C-11, as well as the effect of those changes upon the economy.

The individuals who were of such immense assistance to us on those occasions were Mr. Albert Poissant and Mr. Helmut Birk, both chartered accountants, and Mr. Thomas S. Gillespie, a member of the Quebec bar practising in the city and district of Montreal.

In addition to the committee's advisers, we heard evidence from officials of the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue, as well as representatives of such organizations as the Life Underwriters Association, and Mr. D. P. Hayes, who gave us evidence with respect to the position of some communal organizations.

The pre-study of a bill before it formally reaches the second chamber of Parliament, especially a complicated tax bill such as the one now before us, has several consequences. The first of these is that it enables the Senate, and certainly the appropriate committee of the Senate, to become thoroughly familiar with the proposals contained in the legislation and the effect of those proposals on the economy. I think it is proper to say, as Senator Walker said earlier, that the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee has developed a special expertise in this field. The chairman of that committee is himself an expert in the field of tax legislation, and the committee members contribute materially to the work. In addition, the committee profits greatly from the assistance and expertise of the staff the chairman has retained.

A second consequence of pre-studies of this kind is that many of the committee's proposals respecting income tax bills, as the earlier debate in this chamber this afternoon indicated, result in amendments to the bill as it proceeds through the House of Commons. This, of course, has a salutary effect in that it eliminates any question of the right of the Senate to amend a money bill—and certainly such a question could arise were the Senate to amend a money bill and send it back to the other place for approval.

The Leader of the Opposition seems to be wondering whether that is a valid point. It may not be as valid a point in constitutional or parliamentary law as it is in the mind of Stanley Knowles, and for that reason alone I think it is worth noting.

A third consequence of such a pre-study is the removal of the odious issue of what the Chairman of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee sometimes calls "Christmas closure", and which I think can generally be called "adjournment closure". Had there not been this pre-study of the provisions of Bill C-11, it would be virtually impossible for the Senate to give the bill any real consideration in the time between now and the date on which Parliament adjourns for the Christmas recess.

A fourth consequence of the pre-study approach is that it establishes the validity of a new, and an innovative, parliamentary process. I do not think one will find this approach being used in any of the other parliaments of the Commonwealth.

Let me deal for a moment with the reports of the committee. The first report was tabled in the Senate on December 8, and printed as an appendix to Hansard of that date. It consists of some 12 pages, covering 14 areas of concern and explanation, and nine specific recommendations. The second and final report, which covers the committee's meeting with the minister last evening, was tabled earlier today. The first report was thoroughly explained by the chairman on December 12 last, and he explained the second report earlier today. It is not my intention to cover the areas of concern dealt with by Senator Hayden in explaining those two reports.

● (1520)

The present position, therefore, is that we have before us, shortly before the Christmas adjournment, a bill of 225 pages and containing 116 clauses, many of them complicated, full of cross-references, pregnant with changes affecting millions of taxpayers—it hardly makes good Christmas reading! Yet I think we can deal with it honestly, responsibly and expeditiously, principally because of the work done and the recommendations made as a result of the pre-study by the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee of this house.

Honourable senators, perhaps I might touch on one or two of the points already discussed by Senator Hayden. For example, he discussed the question of multinational corporations adequately so I need not do so. The question of the losses on the sale of debt securities he has also covered very well. Perhaps I could say something about corporate distributions and the taxation of dividends from Canadian corporations under clause 36 of the bill. There are now more beneficial rules providing gross-ups to be done at the rate of a half instead of a third, and of dividend credits at the rate of four-fifths instead of three-quarters. I think I should draw the attention of honourable senators to the table on page 5 of Appendix "A" to the Debates of the Senate for December 8, which is the first report of the committee. I would especially draw the attention of individual senators to a rather interesting result in one of the calculations there. In certain brackets it may be more favourable for a taxpayer to seek to have a higher return on dividends and a lower return on capital gains for tax purposes. In other categories, where the reverse situation prevails, it is easier taxwise to have a lower dividend income and a higher capital gain return.

The question of designated surpluses, and the ending of that exercise, has been adequately explained by Senator Hayden.

On the question of stock dividends, perhaps I could say that it is now proposed by clause 98 of this bill not to include stock dividends in income hereafter. They will, of course, be subject to future capital gains or losses. In other words, if stock dividends are paid by a corporation to its shareholders the value of the stock dividend is not to be added to income in the year in which it is received. It may be that when the shareholder receives the dividend the shares have a value of $10 each, and that three or four years later they may be worth $20 each. In that case, the shareholder will have accumulated a capital gain, and will be taxed at the normal rate for capital gains.

Senator Hayden has said sufficient on the question of registered retirement savings plans and the problems we had with that issue. Also, in respect of communal organizations little need be said by me in addition to what Senator Hayden has told us. However, I would like to say something about the policy loan question, although Senator Hayden has discussed the matter twice. It is significant that an amendment was made. I shall give an example rather than try to explain it in a theoretical way.

A loan taken out by a policyholder against the security of the policy of insurance he has been buying contains two elements. One of the elements is the amount of premium he has paid in. The other element is the income earned on the investment of those premiums while they are in the hands of the insurance company. The element that includes the income earned by the premiums paid over the years is treated under the bill—it was treated and still is treated—as a disposition; that is, a payment of interest earned for the policyholder. Because it is a disposition, a transfer to him of interest earned on money he has paid in, it is taxable in the year in which he takes out the loan.

If the income element in the loan is $5,000, and the borrower's marginal rate of tax is 50 per cent, he will then pay $2,500 in tax on that portion of the loan, because it goes into his taxable income. If the loan is repaid at some time, either in that year or in another year, the disposition is, of course, reversed.

Originally, honourable senators, the bill proposed that that $2,500 of tax not be refunded. Now, as a result of the minister's amendment made in the other house and proposed by the Senate committee, and incorporated in the bill before us, there will be a tax credit of the $2,500 in the year in which the loan is repaid. As Senator Hayden said this afternoon, when such a loan is taken out for business purposes then, generally speaking, the interest that is paid by the policyholder is a deductible item in his tax return.

There are a few other changes which are beneficial to the taxpayer which I should like to draw to the attention of the Senate. I have gone over these with Senator Hayden with a view to trying to ensure that I do not overlap with what he has already said.

Clause 4 provides an increase in the general employment and expense deduction from $150 to $250. These are allowances that are given to employees for expenses they incur in connection with the work they do—buying tools, providing uniforms or special equipment, and perhaps even transportation, if that is required. These benefits are not available to the self-employed, who have other means of looking after expenses in connection with their businesses. It is estimated that the cost of this concession to six-and-a-half million taxpayers, is $115 million.

Senator Flynn: Is it applicable to senators?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Well, Senator Flynn, perhaps I had better stop here and say that in the course of the discussion in committee I said to Senator Molson, "I wonder whether that should not apply to senators. I am bragging now, but in the last few months my weight has come down by about 20 pounds, and I have had to go out and buy a whole new wardrobe." He suggested to the chairman of the committee that there be an amendment to look after senators in that situation.

● (1530)

Clause 14 provides an inventory allowance, which is 3 per cent of inventories that are held by people in the private sector. It will start on January 1, 1977 and will apply to fiscal years ending after March 31, 1977. The cost to the treasury will be $300 million in a full year. This is a concession, agreed to in committee, to the inflationary process to which business is subjected.

Under clause 15, current and capital expenses for scientific research may be deducted in the year in which they are incurred. But there are other special concessions with reference to expenses incurred in connection with scientific research. Clause 61 deals with investment tax credit, and its purpose is said to provide special incentives for people to acquire buildings and machinery for the purpose of establishing research facilities.

I propose to give an example of how the clause works, rather than to explain it in a theoretical way. Let us take the case of a company which has a profit of $100,000 and pays income tax of $25,000. If it invests $1 million in building and equipment to be used for scientific purposes, it will have a 5 per cent investment tax credit on that $1 million. The potential credit, therefore—5 per cent of $1 million—will be $50,000. In the first year, the company will be entitled to claim $15,000 of that potential credit of $50,000, plus 50 per cent of the next $10,000.

It will have claimed a total credit of $20,000 in the first year against the total potential credit of $50,000. So in that year its tax, otherwise at $25,000, is reduced by the $20,000 credit to $5,000. It has a remaining tax credit of $30,000 which can be used during the next five years. It is a tax credit carried forward. The cost of that item to the treasury is $485 million.

Clause 27 permits deductions from income of legal fees and land transfer taxes which are incurred when a new house is purchased by a taxpayer.

Senator Hayden referred to clause 35 a little earlier. Interest-free loans and low-interest loans made to employees and shareholders as a way of providing tax-free compensation will hereafter be taxed under the provisions of the bill. However, there are exceptions. Loans made to employees to buy company shares are excepted, and loans to employees up to $50,000 to buy a new home will also be allowed and not taxed in the employees' hands as a benefit.

[Senator Connolly (Ottawa West).]

Under clause 52, the $1,000 "interest" and "dividend" exemption is now extended to "capital gains". Again, rather than explain it in an academic way, let me do it by a practical example. Let us say that an individual has interest income from bonds and bank accounts of $500, and dividend income of $200 and capital gains of $300 in the same year, making a total receipt of $1,000. Under this exemption, the $1,000 wipes out the taxable income. The tax is nil. The cost of this item to the treasury is said to be $10 million.

Taxpayers over 65 years of age can now deduct $1,000 from "pension" income; but if they have an "annuity", they can elect to have the annuity treated as interest or dividend income and get an additional $1,000 deduction. I say that slowly because I consider it to be a very favourable proposal, especially for low income people who are existing on investment income of one form or another. Here they have an exemption of $2,000, because not only "interest" and "dividend" income but also "annuity" income is now to be included.

Perhaps the big saving for the taxpayer will result from the federal tax deduction provided in clause 57. Formerly every taxpayer was entitled to $200 tax deduction, or 9 per cent of the tax which might otherwise be due. For 1978 only, it will be $300 plus $50 for each dependent child under 18. The maximum deduction allowed to any taxpayer under this clause will be $500. The cost to the treasury of this program will be $700 million in the first full year for the $300 tax deduction, and $275 million in the full year for the allowances in respect of children. I am told that 7.5 million taxpayers will benefit from this proposal. The proposal will be reflected in tax deductions at the source during January and February, 1978, and this will result from an amendment to the regulations touching tax deductions at the source.

I understand that a person receiving a salary of $15,000 will have his tax reduced in January and February by $100; a person receiving a salary of $10,000 will have no deductions for income tax in January and February; and a person whose salary is $8,500 or less will pay no federal income tax at all in 1978. These are items which the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce calls "goodies".

Here is an interesting item: heretofore capital losses incurred in the course of the year, when they exceeded capital gains, could be transferred and claimed against other income to the extent of $1,000 only. Now $2,000 worth of capital losses can be claimed if capital losses are incurred. In other words, the limit for capital losses to be offset against other income goes up from $1,000 to $2,000. Let me give an example for the sake of the record. If the capital gain of an individual in a given year is $5,000, and his capital losses are $7,000, the excess of the losses over the gain is $2,000. He can apply that $2,000 of capital loss against his other income, if he wishes, in that year. The cost to the treasury will be $45 million, and some 100,000 taxpayers are expected to benefit.

● (1540)

I am not going to deal with the changes to facilitate corporate reorganization. I think, in one way or another, they have been touched upon adequately by the Chairman of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee in his various reports, and they were certainly considered by the committee.

Clause 60 refers to the production of sulphur from natural gas. There is a reduced rate of tax now available to those processors. The tax is to equate to that of other manufacturers and processors. The rate, I understand, is to be 30 per cent rather than 36 per cent.

The regulations will also provide enhanced depletion rates for high cost gas and oil. The normal depletion rate for those properties is 33⅓ per cent. The enhanced depletion rate will be 66⅔ per cent. The cost to the treasury will be $20 million.

Honourable senators, by regulation, equipment to control pollution of water and air can now be written off in two years. This privilege has now been extended to December 31, 1979 and it has been done by an amendment to the capital cost allowance regulations.

Home insulation programs, I think, should be mentioned because they were mentioned in the budget papers. The money is provided by way of a grant from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The maximum grant for such home insulation is $350 and, in any event, it will cover no more than two-thirds of the cost of insulating materials.

Honourable senators, I do not think there is anything more difficult than trying to explain, on second reading, a bill to amend the Income Tax Act. It has been said in this chamber before that there is no principle in these bills; they are unprincipled bills! However, one has to talk a little about specific clauses—although that is not really appropriate on second reading—if one is to be intelligible at all. I hope I have given the kind of explanation that is satisfactory to the chamber.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to take up a great deal of the time of the chamber in commenting on this bill for the very good reason mentioned by Senator Hayden in discussing the two reports, and by Senator Connolly in introducing the bill on second reading, namely, that this bill has been thoroughly considered over a long period of time by a committee of the Senate and is the subject of two reports.

As Senator Connolly mentioned—I believe this is the first time it has been said in the chamber—we are dealing with an extraordinary innovation in the whole legislative procedure. Senator Connolly said he believed there is no other two-chamber parliament or legislature in the world which has discovered what I have called on earlier occasions “the Hayden formula.” I hasten to say I am in no way critical of that innovation. It is one of the most ingenious suggestions that has been made during my time here as to how we can improve the work of the Senate, particularly on difficult bills such as this one. It is a real innovation for which Senator Hayden and his committee deserve very great credit. I have been told that a study is being made of this innovation, and an article describing it will appear in a learned journal.

Having said that, perhaps it should also be said that this is not a static formula. It is very much an ongoing formula, and it has changed greatly since it was first adopted by the Senate. Senators will recall when the formula was merely that either the subject matter of a white paper or, later, the subject matter of a bill, should be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. This then developed to a further stage where the bill itself was referred to the committee before it came to us—that is, while it was under discussion in the House of Commons. In those cases the committee, in its wisdom, found various mixed types of methodologies for achieving its purpose—its purpose generally being to improve the bill and sometimes to make fairly fundamental changes to it.

As a result, we have had this unique situation of a Senate committee discussing a bill and hearing witnesses at the same time as the bill is either being debated in the Commons or being considered by a committee of that house. Therefore, there has been this cross-exchange of viewpoints and suggestions going on between the two houses. It seems to me the Senate does not very often get the credit it deserves for improving legislation. I believe this particular bill is a prime example of that.

On other occasions I have expressed the hope that as often as possible amendments suggested by the Senate would be moved and passed in the Senate, so that the amended bill could be sent back to the House of Commons. From the point of view of the Senate, that is probably the preferable method for two reasons. The first, of course, is that in time the Senate should begin to get credit for excellent work that has been done and is being done by this and other committees. My second reason is that I believe in time both the Senate and the House of Commons would get used to having amended bills sent back from the Senate.

At the present time there is concern on the part of some senators that this might upset certain people in the House of Commons who do not like the Senate—and no doubt it would. From the point of view of the Commons, I think they would get used to it, and it would be a good thing for them to assume that when a bill is sent to the Senate it will not automatically be passed without amendment. I believe that once both houses get used to this it will remove some of the objections that have arisen in the past to amending a bill even when there is a consensus that it should be amended.

● (1550)

The obvious answer to that from the point of view of the committee is that the committee has certain purposes, and it is up to it to achieve those purposes in the most practical way. It is clear that the method used by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has, over the years, proved to be the most practical way, if not, as I have suggested, the preferable way. Obviously the committee was concerned with accomplishing its very important purposes, and it has done so. For that reason I am not critical of the method that has been used.

The innovation has now come, I think for the first time, to the stage when the Senate has actually had a report from the committee recommending amendments—not merely suggestions, wishes or feelings, which are the words used in the report, but four amendments—before the bill was before the Senate. Again I am not objecting to that, but it is interesting to note that this is an innovation, and one which would be said, I think, by procedural experts in the other place to run contrary to an old convention, if not a rule—I believe it is a rule in the other place—that the chamber does not discuss a bill that is not before it. Again I have no worries or concern if that old convention or rule, whatever it may be, does not apply any more. It is a good example of the fact that as times change, procedures change and practices change, necessarily, and some of these old apparently sacred rules just die, and should be allowed to die. This is only one of a good many.

Another one, of course, is the suggestion made from time to time that when we dispose of a bill on second reading we have passed the principle of the bill. We have had a good example here of why this is, I was going to say, nonsensical, and I think that is the right word. Obviously when we have passed a bill in principle it makes no sense for one of our committees, as happened in the last session, to come back here and recommend that the bill be not proceeded with. The obvious anomaly here should indicate that there is no validity to the suggestion that we pass the principle of the bill. Our rules say we consider it. Of course we do.

The background of that particular fiction happens to be—for those who wish to read the authorities—that in saying the principle was considered on second reading is to say to the committee, “We have not gone into detail. Now you go into detail.” It was never meant historically to suggest that the committee should not consider the principle of the bill, and the reports we now have before us make this very clear. The reports go very much into the principle of the bill, and rightly so.

I was very interested in the first report. Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) did give us the number of recommendations made. I have forgotten how many; I did not quite catch the number. My figure is 10, but I think he had a different figure for the total number of recommendations made by the committee. I reached 10, so I may have included something else.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): It was nine. Under “Summary of Recommendations” on page 12 of the appendix to Hansard of December 8, there are nine items. That is what I was using.

Senator Grosart: I thank Senator Connolly for that information. I had noted it, but I had found another one in the text that was not in the summary, which is quite understandable. Whether it is nine or 10, it does not matter. The essential fact to keep in mind, I think, is that these recommendations have been made. Some have already been implemented by the government through the introduction of amendments in the other place. Perhaps the two major suggestions are in the life insurance field; they are in the bill. However, as far as I can find out, the others are not.

[Senator Grosart.]

Here we come to an interesting aspect of the development in the committee last night. I am not a member of the committee and I was not there; I am reading from the information before us. The committee sat and the minister appeared before it. The committee said, in effect, “What are you going to do about these other recommendations?” The government appeared to have been trapped by its own closure ruling. Perhaps Senator Connolly, if he has not already done so, would give us some information on the number of amendments the minister said he would make to the bill but did not do so because the government had introduced closure, and, as a commentator said this morning, the minister wound up with egg all over his face. Perhaps he did. The fact of the matter is that he intended to introduce amendments in the other place, but they were not proceeded with because the government had introduced closure. Apparently one of the amendments suggested by our committee met that fate.

What is interesting is that in the second report, which was tabled today by Senator Hayden, we have a complete rundown of the undertakings given by the minister in respect to implementation of various suggestions—nine or 10; there may be others—made by the committee. We see the specific words:

The minister gave the following undertakings to your committee.

They are listed and are nine in number, following the general summary of recommendations made in the report. It is interesting to see what the undertakings given by the minister were. First:

Consideration will be given to amending the Income Tax Act.

That is, to go farther than the present amendments have gone in the field of policy loans.

On branch accounting, I will not go into detail, but the report says that a study will be made. As Senator Hayden told us, the study will be brought before the committee.

On losses on the disposition of debt instruments there is to be a further study.

On the elimination of pre-1972 surplus accounts, where a very important change seems to be necessary, the minister reported that he had discussed this problem with the Anti-Inflation Board, whose guidelines had caused the problem, and that the Anti-Inflation Board was prepared to review requests for exemptions from dividend restrictions and so on, and an amendment will be introduced in the next session extending the time for distribution of pre-1972 surplus accounts where there is sufficient indication that not enough time has been granted by the bill for the distribution of those accounts.

With respect to Part IV tax, further consideration will be given to extending the exemption.

On employee and shareholder loans, an amendment to the act will be introduced.

On Registered Retirement Savings Plans, consideration will be given to extending the period.

On the nil assessments to which Senator Hayden referred, as did Senator Connolly, a study will be made of the committee's recommendation that taxpayers be provided the right in all cases to require the Minister of Revenue Canada to make a determination of their losses. Here again this would appear to be a most important concession to what would seem to be the fundamental rights of a taxpayer to know exactly what disposition the Department of National Revenue would make of his claim to have a loss tax return rather than one showing some gain. Senator Hayden has gone into the detail of that, and I need not say anything further.

● (1600)

It is interesting to know that the minister has undertaken—and there was some indication of reluctance to do so previously—that a study will now be made of certain communal organizations. This has already been referred to. There is an undertaking that an amendment will be introduced to provide more flexibility. I again say that this is a useful, important and significant development of the Hayden formula. We are now at the point where on the night before a bill is being debated on second reading, a minister comes before a committee of the Senate and undertakes to amend the very bill, Bill C-11, and to give consideration to other recommendations.

Again, honourable senators, I say that with this very complete study that has been made, with the clear indications that the will of the Senate is to be implemented or given very serious consideration, there is no more that I need say at this particular time but to renew my compliments to the committee and to these two unique and excellent reports.

On motion of Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

RETIREMENT AGE POLICIES

SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF SELECTION ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the second report of the Committee of Selection which was presented yesterday.

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator McDonald, that the report be now adopted.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—MESSAGE TO COMMONS

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by Senator McDonald:

That the Senate do unite with the House of Commons in the establishment of a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons to consider and report upon matters bearing upon the development of the National Capital Region, including the programs and operations of the National Capital Commission;

That eight members of the Senate, to be designated at a later date, act on behalf of the Senate as members of the said special joint committee;

That the said committee have power to send for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable, and to adjourn from place to place within Canada;

That the said committee present a final report within 90 days of December 13, 1977, taking into account the evidence given before the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region established in June 1975, and the evidence given before the newly established special joint committee;

That the quorum of the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region be fixed at eleven (11) members, provided that both houses are represented, whenever a vote, resolution or other decision is taken, and that the joint chairmen be authorized to hold meetings to receive and authorize the printing of evidence, when a quorum is not present, so long as five (5) members are present, provided that both houses are represented;

That the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region be authorized to retain the services of advisers and such additional professional, stenographic and clerical staff as is required during the committee's consideration and review of matters bearing upon the development of the National Capital Region; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 245)

THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE
ON
BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

---

SECOND AND FINAL REPORT
ON
THE ADVANCE STUDY OF THE BUDGET RESOLUTIONS
RESPECTING INCOME TAX AND ANY BILL
OR OTHER MATTER RELATING THERETO

Wednesday, 14th December, 1977

---

The Honourable Salter A. Hayden, Chairman.

By resolution of the Senate on November 1, 1977, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce was authorized to examine and report upon the subject-matter of any bill relating to income tax based on Budget Resolutions including the 31st March 1977 Budget Resolutions as subsequently changed, in advance of any such bill coming before the Senate, the Ways and Means Motions of October 20th, 1977 to amend the Income Tax Act and Income Tax Application Rules, 1971 or any matter relating thereto.

In accordance with the order of reference, your Committee presented its First Report to the Senate on Thursday, December 8, 1977.

Your Committee has heard the Honourable Jean Chrétien, Minister of Finance, and now reports as follows.

The Minister gave the following undertakings to your Committee:

(1) Policy Loans

Consideration will be given to amending the Income Tax Act to exempt from tax the following policy loans:

- (i) policy loans made within a reasonable period of time prior to death;
- (ii) policy loans repaid within one year; and
- (iii) policy loans made for the purposes of acquiring dwelling houses, shares of corporations of which the policyholder is an officer or employee or the purchase of automobiles to be used in the performance of the policyholder's duties as an officer or employee.

(2) Branch Accounting

A study will be made of the effect of eliminating certain loss carry forward positions and deductions arising from the present provisions of the Act and Regulations as they relate to multinational insurance corporations using the branch accounting method of reporting income. The results of the study will be made available to your Committee.

(3) Losses on Disposition of Debt Instruments

A further study will be made of the proposal to disallow life insurance corporations a deduction for losses incurred on prior dispositions of low yielding debt instruments, together with the proposal to extend to such companies compensating benefits.

(4) Elimination of Pre-1972 Surplus Accounts

The Minister of Finance reported the Anti-Inflation Board has agreed to review requests for exemptions from dividend restrictions and will grant permission where dividends are to be distributed out of pre-1972 surplus accounts. A public announcement to this effect is forthcoming.

An amendment will be introduced at the next Session extending the time for distribution of pre-1972 surplus accounts should there be sufficient indication that not enough time has been granted by the Bill for the distribution of such accounts.

(5) Part IV Tax

Further consideration will be given to extending the exemption from Part IV tax to all dividends between private corporations in which more than a 10% interest is held where neither corporation benefits any longer from the small business deduction.

(6) Employee and Shareholder Loans

An amendment to the Act will be introduced excluding low interest or interest-free loans made to employees transferring to Canada from elsewhere as taxable benefits.

(7) Registered Retirement Savings Plans

Consideration will be given to extending the period during which amounts paid to a spouse's registered retirement savings plan are included in a taxpayer's income.

(8) Nil Assessments

A study will be made of your Committee's recommendation that taxpayers be provided the right in all cases to require the Minister of Revenue Canada to make a determination of their losses.

(9) Communal Organizations

The Minister of Finance reported he had received assurances from Revenue Canada to the effect that Revenue Canada would administer the Act in a reasonable fashion in order not to unjustly deprive communal organizations of the opportunity of electing to allocate the income of the organizations among the families comprised therein solely because the full amount of tax interest and penalties owing had not been paid within the time required by the Act. Amendments will be introduced to provide more flexibility if the Act is not so administered.

Your Committee notes the amendments introduced during the clause-by-clause study of Bill C-11 in Committee of the Whole in the House of Commons in conformity with recommendations made by your Committee in its First Report to the following effect:

(1) Policyholders repaying loans will be entitled to deduct from income in the year of repayment the portion of policy loans previously required to be included in computing income.

(2) Policyholders will be entitled to deduct from income interest payments made by them, except in instances where the interest payments are added to the adjusted cost base of their policies.

In view of the foregoing undertakings by the Minister of Finance, as well as the beneficial provisions of Bill C-11, your Committee recommends the Bill.

Respectfully submitted,

SALTER A. HAYDEN,
Chairman.

THE SENATE

Thursday, December 15, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

REPORT OF LIBRARIAN TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the annual report of the Parliamentary Librarian for the fiscal year 1976-77.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

REPORT APPROVING ADJUSTMENT OF INDEMNITY AND EXPENSE ALLOWANCES TABLED

Senator Laird, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled the following report:

Thursday, December 15, 1977

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has considered the question of the application of the adjustment of indemnity and expense allowances to be paid to senators for the year 1978, pursuant to an Act to Amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, the Salaries Act, and the Parliamentary Secretaries Act, Chapter 44, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76. Using the formula provided in the Anti-inflation Program, it was agreed that honourable senators should receive an increase of $1,700 in the year 1978, consisting of $1,400 in indemnity and $300 in expense allowance, representing an increase of 5.5%.

Respectfully submitted,

Keith Laird,
Chairman.

AIR CANADA BILL, 1977

REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications on Bill C-3, intituled: "An Act respecting the reorganization of Air Canada."

The Clerk Assistant (Reading):

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, to which was referred Bill C-3, intituled: "An Act respecting the reorganization of Air Canada", has in obedience—

Senator Flynn: Dispense. Honourable senators, I think those who were in committee would agree with me that we might as well dispense with the reading of the report, because most of the amendments would not easily be understood without some explanation. There are two or three amendments of some technical difficulty. Therefore, I would suggest that we dispense with the reading of the report.

Senator Bourget: I agree with the Leader of the Opposition.
[The report is as follows:]

THURSDAY, December 15, 1977

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, to which was referred Bill C-3, intituled: "An Act respecting the reorganization of Air Canada" has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, November 23, 1977, examined the said bill and now reports the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 1: Strike out line 10 and substitute therefor the following:

"Chairman pursuant to subsection 7 (6);"

2. Page 3: Strike out line 16 and substitute therefor the following:

"President pursuant to subsection 7 (6)."

3. Page 3: Strike out line 1 and substitute therefor the following:

"(g) subject to subsection (3), acquire and"

4. Page 3: Strike out lines 14 to 17.

5. Page 3: Strike out lines 18 to 20 and substitute therefor the following:

"(2) For the purposes of carrying out the activities referred to in subsection (1), the Corporation has the capacity, rights,"

6. Page 3: Strike out line 22 and substitute therefor the following:

"(3) The Corporation shall not, without the"

7. Page 4: Strike out line 4 and substitute therefor the following:

"appointed pursuant to subsection (6) and not"

8. Page 4: Strike out line 6 and substitute therefor the following:

"(2) In discharging its responsibilities"

9. Page 4: Strike out line 10 and substitute therefor the following:

"(3) No person is eligible to be appointed or"

10. Page 4: Strike out line 15 and substitute therefor the following:

"(4) Each director, other than the Chair—"

11. Page 4: Strike out lines 23 and 24 and substitute therefor the following:

"(5) Subject to subsection (3), any director appointed under subsection (4) is eligible for"

12. Page 4: Strike out line 27 and substitute therefor the following:

"(6) The Chairman of the Board and the"

13. Page 4: Strike out line 34 and substitute therefor the following:

"(7) A director is entitled to receive such"

14. Page 4: Strike out line 39 and substitute therefor the following:

"(8) The Board shall make by-laws not"

15. Page 5: Strike out line 4 and substitute therefor the following:

"(9) In the event of the absence or incapaci—"

16. Page 5: Strike out line 8 and substitute therefor the following:

"(10) Every director and officer of the Cor—"

17. Page 5: Strike out line 12 and substitute therefor the following:

"(11) No provision in a contract, the"

18. Page 5: Strike out lines 18 and 19 and substitute therefor the following:

"(12) A director is not liable under subsection (10) of this section or subsection 117(1)"

19. Page 5: Strike out line 32 and substitute therefor the following:

"(13) The fact that an act of the Corpora—"

20. Page 5: Strike out line 41 and substitute therefor the following:

"(14) The Chairman, the President and"

21. Page 6: Strike out line 6 and substitute therefor the following:

"nature given to it by order of the Governor"

22. Page 11: Strike out lines 9 to 13 and substitute therefor the following:

"(7) Every report laid before Parliament under this section stands permanently referred to any Committee of Parliament established for the purpose of reviewing matters relating to transportation."

23. Page 11: Strike out line 14 and substitute therefor the following:

"(8) The approval of the report referred to"

24. Page 11: Strike out line 17 and substitute therefor the following:

"(9) For the purposes of this section, "year" "

25. Page 12: Strike out line 10 and substitute therefor the following:

PUBLICATION AND AGENCY STATUS

"23. The Corporation is not an agent of"

26. Page 12: Strike out the heading preceding line 13 and strike out lines 13 to 20 and substitute therefor the following:

"24. Any order of the Governor in Council made under section 6 or 8 shall be tabled forthwith in Parliament and published in the Canada Gazette."

TRANSITIONAL, REPEAL AND COMING INTO FORCE

25. The by-laws of the Corporation in effect at the coming into force of this Act shall cease to have effect sixty days after the coming into force of this Act.

26. The Air Canada Act and subsection 16(7) of the Aeronautics Act are repealed.

27. This Act shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation."

Respectfully submitted.

George I. Smith,
Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Smith (Colchester) moved, with leave, that the report be taken into consideration later this day.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday next, December 19, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

● (1410)

As honourable senators are aware, we had hoped to finish the business in the Senate tomorrow and then adjourn for the Christmas recess. We had been working toward that end this week. However, Bill C-5, to amend the Canada Elections Act, has not yet been passed in the House of Commons. The debate has gone on longer than anticipated. My information is that it is not likely to pass in the other place until tomorrow. It will therefore be necessary for the Senate to sit on Monday and Tuesday to deal with Bill C-5 in order that it can receive royal assent before we adjourn for the Christmas holiday.

Senator Rowe: I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government. What about the safe containers convention bill? Is it proposed to hold that over?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, in the judgment of the government it is not essential that that bill be passed before the Christmas recess. I gave a list of bills yesterday which we felt it important and desirable to pass before the recess. The container bill is not in that category.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): That is a Senate bill, anyway.

Senator Grosart: Would the Leader of the Government care to indicate at what time the Senate might be sitting on Tuesday?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is the view of the government that we should sit either Tuesday morning or afternoon in order to expedite our business. This would depart from our usual custom of meeting on Tuesday evening.

Senator Grosart: Would the the leader set 11 a.m. as the time, at least tentatively?

Senator Perrault: Eleven o'clock sounds like a satisfactory time, so far as the government is concerned. Other senators may wish to express views on this point.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORTATION

EXTENSION OF PASSENGER FACILITIES AT WHITEHORSE AND WATSON LAKE AIRPORTS—QUESTION

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. In view of the fact that airport facilities at Whitehorse and Watson Lake in the Yukon are already below standards acceptable under present traffic loads, and certainly will be severely overloaded with the building of the pipeline and other potential development in the Yukon, could the leader advise the Senate of the government's plans to expand passenger facilities at both airports, and would he use his office to make the government aware of the urgency of this situation?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I thank the honourable Senator Lucier for his courtesy in providing prior notice of this question, which is somewhat detailed. It is an important question. I have made inquiries this day and expect an answer shortly. The urgency of the situation has been stressed in the strongest possible terms and if information is received this afternoon before adjournment that information will be provided for the Senate.

PUBLIC WORKS

ILLUMINATION OF GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS—QUESTION

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask the Leader of the Government a question about the illumination of the government buildings on the other side of the river. I have noticed on several occasions recently that they are all lit up like the Gardens of Versailles on July 14. I wonder whether this is altogether consistent with the policy of conserving energy. There may be some technical reason for this, but I hope that something will be done about it, even if it means changing the wiring system, so that the vast illumination is not such an affront to the eyes of economy-minded people.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I undertook a similar inquiry just a few days ago, as a result of other representations made to me. The point made at that time was that the heating and lighting systems are, in some electronic and technological fashion, linked, and to shut off the lights in certain of those buildings would immediately plunge the temperatures to sub-zero levels.

Senator Macdonald: Something like in my office.

Senator Perrault: Be that as it may, I will undertake an inquiry to obtain more detailed information. Whether or not the information I have been given is apocryphal, I shall determine.

Senator Flynn: I suppose the plans and specifications of these buildings were drawn up at a time when there was no problem with energy, probably when Senator Greene was Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and said there wouldn't be an oil shortage for 50 years or more.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) for second reading of Bill C-11, to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I do not have much to add to what has already been said about Bill C-11. Yesterday Senator Grosart discussed the Hayden formula. I wish to join with Senator Grosart in congratulating and showing support for the members and the chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. I think they do excellent, valuable work which is certainly appreciated by the government and particularly by the departments concerned. Obviously the advance study of these very complicated bills is an approach that should be continued. It has given quite good results so far.

But I do not entirely agree that here in the Senate we should always be satisfied with commitments or promises from the minister to bring forth amendments when a new bill is introduced. I think that from time to time, when the issue is important, the Senate should have the guts to make amendments.

• (1620)

Nor do I accept the thesis or, rather, the suggestion from Senator John Connolly that a money bill should not be amended here, as there might be objections from the other place.

I remember that the Senate has not always adopted such an attitude. In any event, from a constitutional point of view, I think that Senator Connolly agrees with me that when it comes to money bills the Senate has exactly the same authority as the House of Commons. This is in our Constitution.

But I come back to the idea that in the past the Senate did amend money bills. I remember particularly the famous "class or kind" bill. The Senate did not hesitate at that time. Of course, the majority was sitting then on the left side of Mr. Speaker and they had a stronger motivation to seek confrontation. In any event, this objection was certainly not voiced by the Senate at that time.

In the present situation, I agree that the amendments we wanted to make are not so important that it is necessary to delay further the adoption of this bill. All taxpayers in Canada have a direct interest in this bill because it derives from measures which, for the most part, were announced on March 31 this year and which have already been implemented or will be implemented on January 1, 1978.

But, in other circumstances, I do not want the Senate to be bound by this Hayden formula and say that we shall never amend an income tax bill or a money bill if we receive the assurance that the government will bring in amendments during the following session, or a commitment, like that made the other night by the Minister of Finance, to study the matter. A commitment to study the matter is not too compromising.

The second thing I wish to say about this bill is that obviously many of the definitions are real improvements for the taxpayer. Obviously, Parliament has generally no objection in that respect.

My final point is that it will have been five years, on January 1 next, since we passed the current Income Tax Act, the so-called fiscal reform act. That may have been fiscal reform, but every year since we have had to pass legislation of this length, and this one is not the lengthiest we have been forced to pass over those five years.

I suggest the fiscal reform generally has been a failure, as far as the taxpayer is concerned, because there is not today a single taxpayer who can really know where he stands and how to use those statutes in his best advantage without the help of experts, whether they be accountants or lawyers. In my own experience, I have never attempted since then to prepare my own income tax return. I have it prepared by accountants, and even then I often notice things they could have used to my advantage but did not suggest. I know full well that in a number of other areas I could take advantage of the multiplicity of exemptions and complications in that statute, were I to put my mind to that. The result is that to take advantage of everything provided in the act, a taxpayer has to be absolutely aware of the value of each individual penny. We are heading for a mess that is beyond description. The real fiscal reform in my view will be a simplification, a significant simplification of our fiscal laws. This is only a dream for the time being, but I submit this is a dream we should address ourselves to, because the way things are going this will be absolutely inextricable. It will be impossible to have any measure of real fairness. Certainly, the result for taxpayers is disparity as regards advantages the act should be providing. When it gets to the point where we attempt to solve each individual case through amendments, where every time someone imagines there may be a loophole, or every time we want to give something to a taxpayer we have to deal with two or three pages of substantive amendments, it will become impossible to find one's way out.

This is my point. In my view the fiscal reform is a failure; the real reform is yet to be done.

[English]

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition has inspired me to rise and speak extemporaneously to this bill. I am somewhat inspired because I agree entirely with his assessment of the effects of the so-called fiscal reform of 1970-71. I remember very well saying to the then Minister of Finance, Mr. John Turner, when he appeared before the Senate committee, "I hope you will immediately consider setting up a commission to study this so-called fiscal reform in order to rectify the disaster now being imposed upon the country in the guise of a new and better income tax act." Since that reform of 1971, I have never had anything very complimentary to say about the amending legislation that has come before us from time to time and in such volume. Obviously, most of the amendments that we have dealt with to date, prior to the introduction of this bill, have been attempts to close loopholes that were opened up by the so-called fiscal reform.

Whenever an over-complication is injected into a tax measure, or radical changes are made to the structure of the tax system, loopholes inevitably result. In almost every one of the cases we have dealt with to date, the number of people taking advantage of these so-called loopholes—and I do not like that word—would amount to about one-tenth of 1 per cent of the whole population of taxpayers. These amendments deal a sledgehammer blow to all the honest, conscientious taxpayers who never knew a loophole existed.

I must say that that description does not apply entirely to this particular bill. This legislation, in my mind, is a rather refreshing breeze of realism that distinguishes itself clearly from the sort of occult imagery of the original legislation of 1970 and the subsequent amendments. There is a realism in these proposals, and there is also an obvious attempt at simplification of an overly complicated structure. For that reason alone, I think this bill deserves the support of every one in this house.

Other speakers have mentioned the work of the committee, and I cannot add much to what they have said. To me, this so-called Hayden formula is one of the most progressive devices that have been adopted by this chamber since I have been here. That was very much in evidence the other night when the Minister of Finance, Mr. Chrétien, appeared before the committee. I congratulate the minister and say that I found his approach to the committee one of intellectual honesty, reasonableness and full co-operation. That, I hope, represents a significant change in attitude among the executive.

The two reports that have been tabled are worth the consideration of all honourable senators. By and large, the major recommendations made by the committee have now been incorporated in the legislation, and the other matters upon which the committee made comment or recommendations are subject to further consideration by the minister, in some cases with his commitment to introduce the changes upon the next amendment to the Income Tax Act.

● (1430)

I am sure we are not at the end of the road for those large volumes such as the Leader of the Opposition was displaying. We will have a lot more of them before the damage done in 1971 is fully repaired and we have a system of taxation in Canada that is, once again, based on the premise that most Canadians are honest and willing taxpayers if they are trusted, and that recognizes it is only a very small minority who try to defeat the long arm of the tax gatherer.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Connolly speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): First of all, I should like to thank Senator Grosart, Senator Flynn and Senator Lang for the comments they have made, on both the bill and the work of the committee.

Senator Grosart said that the work of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce in its pre-study of a bill, as was the case here, is something that is not known or appreciated outside this house. That, of course, is abundantly true. Indeed, I think many members of the Senate may not fully appreciate the value of this new process.

This raises the question of having better public relations for the Senate. Frankly, I am not an expert in this field and really do not know what kind of recommendation to make. There was a time, many years ago, when we had a public relations man who issued press releases about the work of the Senate, but that has been discontinued. When a significant action is taken by, or a process is developed within, the Senate, perhaps it could be the subject of a press release by the Leader of the Government or the chairman of a committee. These are things that could be considered. In respect of publicity, the fact is that the spotlight is on the other chamber. Although today there is someone in the press gallery of this house—

Senator Flynn: That is because you are speaking.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West):—this does not happen very often. The result is that our proceedings are not reported to any degree at all.

There is only one other point I wish to deal with, and this was mentioned by all three previous speakers. It concerns the question of a committee dealing with the minister on a bill it is studying, and the question of whether it should accept undertakings from the minister to remedy situations in future years or make the amendments there and then.

I am sure Senator Flynn will agree immediately when I say that, despite the fact that on this and previous occasions our committee has seen fit to accept undertakings by ministers of finance, the committee is in no way bound to stifle itself or say that it cannot amend a bill. It can do so. This is a very elastic position in which the committee finds itself.

[Senator Lang.]

However, I must say—and I believe all honourable senators know this—that we have had very good results from undertakings given by ministers, even on the far-reaching effects of the tax reform legislation of 1971. At that time there were a great many items to which the Senate committee took objection. The Honourable Edgar Benson, the then Minister of Finance, said that he wished to study some of these items.

He did not stay in that portfolio too long afterwards, and was succeeded by the Honourable John Turner. I am sure those who were members of the committee at that time will remember that at one stage Mr. Turner brought in a bill, and announced that he had carefully gone over all the undertakings given by his predecessor with respect to tax reform and that the bill contained the amendments the Senate committee sought back-dated to the date the tax reform legislation was enacted. That is a pretty good record for us to point to in connection with that procedure. As I said, the committee does not stifle itself by proceeding in this way. It is not establishing a bad precedent if there is an issue about which it feels strongly.

The question of when a bill is a money bill is never too clear. Whenever the Senate amends a bill that has fiscal implications, notwithstanding the fact that it may not be amending a clause with fiscal implications as such, there is always a question of whether it is going beyond its power and jurisdiction.

Senator Flynn: I think you are on the wrong track. The only limitation—and this applies also to the other house—is that we cannot increase the burden on the exchequer; otherwise there is no problem.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I am familiar with that argument. That much is certainly true; the Senate cannot increase the burden. I remember when we were in opposition and there were problems of this kind. When the Leader of the Government presented amendments to a taxing statute, he would say, "It is beyond the jurisdiction of the Senate to amend this bill because it would be interfering with ways and means." What else is a leader to do when he, as a member of the government, is bound by cabinet solidarity and feels he has to get this bill through? That is his job. I remember when we were faced with this problem.

This argument has been going on for many, many years, and I do not think we are going to settle it. An opinion was given one time by Messrs. Geoffrion and Tilley on this very point. I did not think that that opinion was all-inclusive—that it dealt with the whole subject matter—but certainly it covered the point Senator Flynn has just made.

Honourable senators, I have said enough. I appreciate the attention and care that has been given this bill by the Senate, and I thank all those who contributed to this debate.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

● (1440)

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I understand the intention is to have royal assent this evening. That being so, with leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Senator Flynn: Does the Leader of the Government want this bill given royal assent this evening?

Senator Perrault: Yes, if possible.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators have heard the motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

December 15, 1977

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Wishart F. Spence, O.B.E., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 15th day of December, at 5.30 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

AIR CANADA BILL, 1977

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications on Bill C-3, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada, which was presented earlier this day.

Hon. George I. Smith: Honourable senators, I note that copies of the report in the French language have not as yet been distributed. They are now being prepared, and I have a note before me indicating that they will be available within the next few minutes. I am not sure whether it is the wish of the Senate that I proceed before the French language version of the report is available.

Senator Flynn: You can simply explain that fact before moving the adoption of the report.

Senator Grosart: And then you can explain it in French.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Perhaps I will ask you to do that for me, Senator Grosart.

Senator Petten: Hear, hear.

Senator Greene: No, no.

Senator Smith (Colchester): By way of further explanation, the committee continued its deliberations until almost noon today, and the officials have been busy preparing the report and doing the necessary paperwork. I think they have done extremely well in getting before us what they have.

With that explanation, I now seek some indication as to whether or not it is the wish of the Senate that I proceed now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, with leave, I move the adoption of this report.

The Hon. the Speaker: With leave of the Senate, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Smith (Colchester), seconded by the Honourable Senator McElman, that this report be now adopted.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Grosart: Explain.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, as you will have noted, the report contains some 26 amendments. I hasten to add, however, that there are only four amendments of substance, with the balance being consequential amendments to those four. The consequential amendments are almost entirely a matter of the re-numbering of clauses and sub-clauses, and, in some cases, references in one clause of the bill to another clause or subclause of the bill. It is my intention to deal specifically only with the amendments of substance, although I am prepared at any time to answer questions relating to any of the amendments.

The purpose of Bill C-3, as honourable senators are aware, is to reorganize Air Canada, remove it from the umbrella of the CNR, and establish it as a crown corporation responsible directly to the government and to Parliament. To achieve that purpose, it is necessary to provide Air Canada with the powers to carry out whatever activities are necessary to conduct the business of an airline which is in competition nationally and internationally, with other airlines, both large and small. These powers are set out in detail in clause 6(1), paragraphs (a) to (h). Those paragraphs set out the powers which the airline authorities and the minister consider necessary to enable the purpose of the bill to be accomplished. Paragraph (i), which is a usual provision, enables the corporation to do "such other things as are necessary or incidental to the carrying out of its activities."

I think it would be useful to read clause 6(2) into the record. It states:

The Governor in Council may, by order, authorize the Corporation to engage in or carry on any activities not otherwise authorized by this Act.

In considering this subclause, the committee noted that if passed it would give very wide powers—some might say almost unlimited powers—to the Governor in Council to enlarge the scope, or completely change the nature, of the activities being carried on by Air Canada, or which Air Canada might at some future time wish to carry on. These would be powers over and above the powers specifically authorized by clause 6(1).

● (1450)

I should say that the committee had before it as witnesses the chief draftsman of the bill, and the President of Air Canada, and the Honourable the Minister of Transport. The committee was informed by the minister and by the corporation president that the powers set out in clause 6(1) would allow Air Canada to engage in all of the activities which its officers, or the minister, could envisage as now necessary. They stated, however, that in the future the corporation might wish, or find it necessary, to engage in some activity not set out in clause 6(1), and that is the reason for the very wide power given the Governor in Council by clause 6(2). It was also stated that this kind of wide power would, in case of some doubt arising about the corporation's activities in the future, enable the Governor in Council to approve them and thus remove any opportunity for argument that something is ultra vires.

Both the minister and the President of Air Canada indicated to the committee that, if they could have thought of any activity in which they wanted Air Canada to engage, they would have seen that it was specifically listed in clause 6(1).

I think it is correct to say—and I am sure others will correct me if I have made a mistake—that the committee considers that clause 6(2) confers too wide a power on the Governor in Council, because under it he could authorize Air Canada to carry on any activity of any nature at all, except, of course, such activities which are illegal. Some members of the committee suggested that these could include activities completely unrelated to the business of an airline as now envisaged, and, as I understand what was said by the minister and by the President of Air Canada, they did not dispute this view. Moreover, the chief draftsman agreed with that interpretation, and said further that it was precisely what the subclause was intended to do.

[Senator Smith (Colchester).]

The minister dealt with clause 6(2). He told the committee that, naturally, he preferred to have the clause left as it is in the bill, but he also said, if the committee felt it required an amendment, that of the various possible amendments which he had heard about—and he had obviously heard about all the discussion in committee—the option he would prefer is the deletion of the subclause. While I am not sure whether it is proper for me to read his words from the transcript of the committee's proceedings, I can tell the house that it is clear that he said he could live with that option—that is, the option of deletion—if that were the option the committee decided upon. He said, if the committee did decide to take that option, that he would recommend to the government that it accept that deletion, and seek the concurrence of the other place in it.

In due course, after a good deal of discussion and for the reasons I have set out, the committee came to the conclusion that the subclause should be deleted. Perhaps I should just say again that the committee felt that the subclause would give unlimited power to the Governor in Council to enlarge the scope of the activities in which Air Canada might engage. There is the additional objection that that kind of provision would constitute a dangerous precedent which might well find its way into other types of legislation, and the committee thought Parliament would probably not like to accept that.

So for those two reasons—first, because that is too wide a power to the Governor in Council, and, second, because it would be a bad precedent, the committee decided it would recommend to the Senate that subclause (2) of clause 6 be deleted.

I suppose that that is the most substantial of all the amendments in the report. Obviously, if that amendment is adopted, it will necessitate renumbering the remaining subclauses of clause 6 as well as adjusting any references to those subclauses of clause 6 which might be found elsewhere in the bill. That, I think, is done by the other amendments which you find in the report down to amendment 21, which you will see deals with clause 8 found on page 6 of the bill.

Clause 8, which is a short clause, reads as follows:

The Corporation shall, in the exercise of its capacities and the carrying out of its activities, comply with directions of a general nature given to it in writing by the Governor in Council.

Considerable doubt was raised as to whether this particular wording would cause such a direction in writing to be a statutory instrument under the general definition of that term. The committee's opinion is that that uncertainty should be removed, because it is desirable that such a direction be a statutory instrument with all that flows from that. Accordingly, amendment 21 is intended to take out the words "in writing by the Governor in Council," and insert in their place the words "by order of the Governor in Council." The advice we have from counsel, from the chief draftsman of the bill and from the Law Clerk of the Senate is that that change would bring about the effect I have mentioned.

The next amendment is one which I think will meet with the approval of all senators. It makes a change in clause 17, on page 11 of the bill. Clause 17(6.1) reads as follows:

Every report tabled under this section stands permanently referred to any Committee of the House of Commons established for the purpose of reviewing matters relating to transportation.

● (1500)

Amendment 22 is intended to ensure that any committee of this house would have the same right to receive any report of Air Canada as any committee of the other house.

The next amendment which I believe to be of substance is number 26. In order to gather its import, one has to look at the last page of the bill. It will be seen that there is a new clause recommended to be inserted by the amendment. It will be clause 24, which provides:

Any order of the Governor in Council made under section 6 or 8—

Those are the two sections that I mentioned earlier.

—shall be tabled forthwith in Parliament and published in the Canada Gazette.

The other amendments are simply consequential and, in my view, have no particular substance.

Honourable senators, I believe I have dealt with the substantial amendments. I shall be glad to try to answer any question on the amendments I have mentioned, or the consequential amendments, of which, if my arithmetic is correct, there are 21.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, the chairman of the committee, the Honourable Senator Smith (Colchester), has explained well and fully the major amendments contained in the report. I would simply support and reinforce his statement that the clause which drew the most attention and concern of the members of the committee was clause 6(2), which required a good deal of discussion and negotiation. Tribute is due to the chairman and the deputy chairman of the committee, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and the Minister of Transport, the Honourable Otto Lang, who was most co-operative and understanding even though he did not entirely agree with those of us who found the clause not to our liking.

In my view, the work done by the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, under the chairmanship of Senator Smith (Colchester), was the result of excellent co-operation among members of the committee and others. It is a good example of what can be done with a spirit of co-operation in this chamber.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Greene: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator McElman: Yes.

Senator Greene: The airline game is not a pink tea party. It is a tough world competitive game. Can I take it, from the assurances of both Senator Smith (Colchester) and yourself, that the President of Air Canada, speaking for the executive of the company, feels that even with these amendments the corporation will have a vehicle which will enable it to be competitive in the tough game of world airlines?

Senator McElman: Yes, I believe it fair to say that the views of Air Canada, as expressed by the president, Mr. Claude Taylor, are that this is a bill with which they are very pleased. As a matter of fact, he suggested this morning that they would consider it a mighty fine present for the holiday season if the bill should receive royal assent before the end of the current year, in which the company celebrated its fortieth anniversary.

It goes without saying that Air Canada would have been happier had clause 6(2) been retained. However, they have stated that its principal purpose was to take care of things that might develop some years down the road. The view was expressed by some of the witnesses from Air Canada—I cannot attribute it directly to Mr. Taylor; I believe it came from one of his senior officials as well as from the principal departmental draftsman—that it had taken some 10 years to get the bill to its present stage in Parliament. The assumption from that comment is that Parliament, or someone, acted too slowly, and that the company had to be in a position to grasp business opportunities which arise suddenly.

There were those of us who expressed the counterview that we did not consider it a very substantial argument; the purpose of Parliament was not to make a nuisance of itself, but to express the will of the people, and to ensure that those things that are done by airlines and other crown corporations are only those things which have received the prior approval of Parliament and not necessarily of some other intervening authority.

To return to the honourable senator's question, Air Canada does feel that this bill will put it in a position to compete with other world-scale airlines, of which there are ten. Air Canada might be said to be one of the "big ten" today. The provisions of paragraphs 6(1)(a) to 6(1)(h) are rather substantial in respect of the activities in which Air Canada may engage. The answer to the honourable senator's question is yes.

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I intervene simply to say how sorry I am that I was not able to stay for the whole of the committee's meeting this morning. Had I been able to stay, I hope I would have drawn attention to what I think is a bad translation in English of the phrase in the first and second lines of the French version on page 4, which is as follows:

La société est dirigée par un conseil composé du président du conseil et—

The English version is:

The Corporation shall be under the management of a Board of Directors comprised of the Chairman and—

That is surely very bad English. It should be "composed of". The word "comprised" means "included".

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill, as amended, be read the third time?

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill, as amended, be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator McElman, seconded by the Honourable Senator Smith (Colchester), that this bill, as amended, be now read the third time.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, we have granted leave because the committee has done such an extremely good job. By giving leave, we wanted to compliment the members of the committee.

Senator McDonald: And the chairman.

● (1510)

Senator Smith (Colchester): I rise, honourable senators, only to ask leave to say a word of appreciation to the committee, and, in particular, to the staff of the committee and of the Senate, who have worked really hard to get this report in shape so that we could consider it this afternoon. I think we owe a real debt of gratitude to them for their efforts.

[Translation]

Senator Bourget: I am certainly pleased to support this motion of Senator Smith.

[English]

Motion agreed to and bill, as amended, read third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.30 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Wishart F. Spence, O.B.E., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bill:

An Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to provide other authority for the raising of funds.

The Honourable James Jerome, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1978.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, December 19, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, December 19, 1977

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

GREEN PAPER ON LEGISLATION ON PUBLIC ACCESS TO GOVERNMENT DOCUMENTS—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the Green Paper on Legislation on Public Access to Government Documents had been referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-5, to amend the Canada Elections Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Reports of the Atlantic Pilotage Authority, the Laurentian Pilotage Authority, the Great Lakes Pilotage Authority, Ltd., and the Pacific Pilotage Authority, including accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 28 of the Pilotage Act, Chapter 52, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

Copies of Progress Report of the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability in the Government of Canada, dated November 29, 1977, appointed by Order in Council P.C. 1976-2884, dated November 22, 1976, as revised and amended by Orders in Council P.C. 1976-3322 and P.C. 1977-45, dated December 24, 1976 and January 13, 1977, respectively, pursuant to Part I of the Inquiries Act (Mr. Allen Thomas Lambert, Chairman).

Copies of Progress Report on the Measurement of Performance in the Public Service of Canada, issued by the President of the Treasury Board on December 16, 1977.

Copies of Report of the Grain Handling and Transportation Commission, Volume 3, entitled "Grain and Rail in Western Canada", appointed by Orders in Council P.C. 1975-872 and P.C. 1975-1067, dated April 18 and May 9, 1975, respectively, pursuant to Part I of the Inquiries Act (Hon. Emmett M. Hall, C.C., Q.C., Chief Commissioner).

Report of the Department of National Health and Welfare for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 13 of the Department of National Health and Welfare Act, Chapter N-9, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Reports of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting certain compensation plans, as follows:

1. Cassiar Asbestos Corporation Limited, Vancouver, British Columbia and the group of its Clinton Mine hourly rated employees, represented by the Canadian Mine Workers, Local No. 1. Order dated December 13, 1977.

2. Laiterie Leclerc Inc., Sherbrooke, Quebec and the group of its unionized employees, represented by Le Syndicat National des produits laitiers de Sherbrooke (CSD). Order dated December 15, 1977.

Report of the Director of Investigation and Research, Combines Investigation Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 49 of the said Act, Chapter C-23, R.S.C., 1970.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Azellus Denis moved the second reading of Bill C-5, to amend the Canada Elections Act.

[Translation]

He said: Honourable senators, I do not wish to mar the passage of this bill on second reading, since it was carried almost unanimously in the other place.

Anyhow, since we must follow the ordinary procedure rules, I should point out that an election legislation should be adjusted to the ever-changing living conditions. New needs are constantly being felt and as legislators we should be conscious of them. In 1970, we undertook a complete review of the Canada Elections Act.

More recently, that is, some four years ago, I had the pleasure of piloting the election expenses bill through the Senate—without too much difficulty, I might add. That bill, amending the Canada Elections Act, as well as the Income Tax Act and the Broadcasting Act, unmistakably signalled the beginning of a new era in Canadian federal elections.

A while ago I pointed out to the Leader of the Opposition that we did not have that kind of elections in those days; 1974 is fairly recent and now election expenses are restricted, whereas we were not entitled to any refund if we lost or even if we won the elections.

However, other changes have been deemed necessary since then. This is why we are considering today a new bill amending the Canada Elections Act. A few of the many amendments contained in this bill are relatively minor; others, on the other hand, have a long-reaching effect.

Generally, the amendments found in Bill C-5 include a series of housekeeping measures suggested by the Chief Electoral Officer to facilitate the administration of the act. Another group of amendments are mainly aimed at making it easier for the greatest possible number of Canadians to exercise the right to vote.

When the new Election Expenses Act was given royal assent in January 1974, all parties agreed, I think, that this was a bold legislation which might prove extremely complex and difficult to administer. It incorporated new ideas in several areas and proposed innovations which were audacious, to say the least.

In order to make things easier for all concerned, the Chief Electoral Officer called a meeting of the representatives of the four political parties with elected members in the House of Commons. At this first meeting was born a task force which has been looking into this legislation on a continuing basis, not only with respect to its application, but also to help the Chief Electoral Officer draft various guidelines and instructions.

While carrying out its duties, the task force has noted, however, a number of changes to the act which are not only desirable, but even necessary, to prevent abuses. For instance, the current provisions concerning the registration of political parties are not stringent enough to make sure that only serious political groups may have access to the rights and privileges resulting from the registration of a political party. The purpose of the bill before us is to correct this situation, without imposing conditions which would be so difficult to meet that they would preclude the registration of serious groups.

The administrative amendments are the result of a supplementary report which the Chief Electoral Officer made to the Speaker of the House of Commons in February 1976. Pursuant to section 59(1) of the Canada Elections Act, the Chief Electoral Officer must make a report to the Speaker of the House of Commons setting out any amendments which, in his opinion, are desirable for the better administration of the act. In general, these are amendments which will allow election officers at all levels to do a better job and better serve the population they cover.

Finally, many amendments are designed to improve conditions or to create new facilities for exercising the right to vote. For instance, in urban areas the returning officer will have to take the necessary measures so that incapacitated electors can vote at an advance polling station by locating those polls in appropriate locations or by issuing transfer certificates authorizing people confined to wheel chairs or other disabled persons to vote at an advance poll with level access. On the other hand, any voter who cannot go to an ordinary or advance poll will be allowed to vote in the office of the returning officer in the last two weeks before the election. This measure could be quite useful to a great many voters who otherwise might lose their right to vote or who would have to vote by proxy as it is presently permitted in some cases, such as for sailors, mining prospectors and fishermen. Airmen, who were not allowed to vote by proxy, have been added with the present amendments.

● (2010)

Among the other amendments, I would refer to the provision allowing an elector to identify himself without having to take an oath. As you probably know, many people of good faith refuse to take an oath. They believe it is a very important and dangerous thing. Consequently, the deputy returning officer will be able to identify the person who comes to the poll by asking him questions or checking his driving licence or his social insurance card, as bank managers do when they want to check the identity of someone who is asking for a loan.

Another amendment is the right for a student to vote in the community where he works during his holidays. This was another weakness in the previous legislation.

Ordinary polling stations will receive voters from 9 o'clock in the morning to 8 o'clock in the evening, instead of 8 to 7, local time. As those who have already taken part in an election probably know, at 7 p.m. there were usually two dozen people inside who wanted to vote and the polling places had to be closed because people usually came there around 7 o'clock.

The revision will last for three days instead of two. A written approval will be required from the auditor who acts as such for a political candidate or party and he will have to be a qualified accountant. This is an additional guarantee for the serious candidate or the registered party. It means it is not a candidate or a party which has registered simply to do a disservice. Consequently, the auditor, who will be a chartered accountant, will have to give his approval in writing to act as auditor for this candidate or party.

Those few examples illustrate the very positive aspect of this legislation. Our electoral system has always served well the Canadian people. The proposed amendments should make it even more flexible and better adjusted to modern living conditions and they should serve the best interests of all of us.

Therefore, I commend this bill to your favourable consideration.

The amendments which this legislation will bring about in the electoral procedure will, of course, require considerable adjustments. I am told that the Chief Electoral Officer will need a period of about three months to make the necessary adjustments. Therefore, it would be highly desirable that we pass this bill before the Christmas recess, especially if these new provisions—which, as I said earlier, are for the benefit of all electors—are to be implemented during an election that could take place in the spring or summer of 1978.

Honourable senators, as I have just talked about the Chief Electoral Officer, I must add that he will be at the disposal of honourable senators to answer any questions they would like to ask him, if they deem it necessary to refer the bill to a committee.

To close my remarks, I take the opportunity to pay a particular homage to Mr. Hamel, the Chief Electoral Officer, whose broad competence is appreciated by all those who deal with him. He has won the friendship and the admiration of all national political parties thanks to his integrity, his fair-mindedness, his desire to be of assistance, and his well-known availability.

Once again, it is to him that we owe to a very large extent the advantages which the amendments contained in the bill will provide Canadians. It is to him that we owe the organization of the members from the different political parties who constituted a special committee, which is responsible for a good many of the amendments presented in this bill. It is to him that we owe the corrections and the amendments to the present law through his annual reports to the Speaker of the House of Commons.

I think I will meet the approval of all honourable senators in taking this opportunity to pay a very special homage of admiration and gratitude to Mr. Hamel and to thank sincerely the various political parties for their constructive contribution to this bill.

Honourable senators, I am honoured to propose the second reading of this bill.

[English]

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the sponsor of the bill a question if I may.

Senator Denis: I shall answer it with great pleasure, if I can.

Senator Grosart: I am quite sure the honourable senator will be able to.

As some very important amendments were made to the bill at the last minute before it came to us, could the honourable senator indicate what the present position is with regard to provisions in the bill concerning anonymous donors and the indexing of the limits?

[Translation]

Senator Denis: Honourable senators, I think it was following comments by the major political parties that the proposed indexing of allowable expenses and anonymous donations were initially proposed for adoption, but following the protests of the Conservative party, the New Democratic party and certain Liberal members, they were deleted.

With respect to anonymous donations, the law now says that it is forbidden to make anonymous donations for the good and simple reason that when he makes his report, the official agent has to mention the names of the donors, not only the donors who gave more than $100, but he has to divide by categories of donors those who made donations—that is, individuals, companies with or without share capital, unions, governments, and so on. He would have to report them by categories because out of $1,000, for instance, $500 would have been paid by unions, $100 by individuals and $100 by companies, and so on. Consequently, those without names cannot be reported. They cannot say whether they are individuals or companies. Consequently, it is impossible to report them, they do not have the right to report them. The change as it stands now is that, previously, in spite of the fact that it was forbidden, they did not know what to do with the money given through those anonymous donations. The law now provides for that. Those anonymous donations will be reported to the Chief Electoral Officer, and will be paid into the consolidated fund of Canada.

• (2020)

[English]

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I must compliment Senator Denis on an excellent explanation of this bill, and particularly on an excellent answer—from the point of view of the government—to the two questions which I asked. However, I shall have some comments to make as I go along.

The first thing that strikes me is the indication of urgency in respect of the passage of this bill. Honourable senators are aware that there were some changes from the original suggestion of the all-party committee made by the government when this bill was introduced. As Senator Denis has indicated, there were some strenuous objections to these particular changes, which were made by the government after they had been turned down by the all-party ad hoc committee which was set up after the passage of the Election Expenses Act in 1974. The government is very anxious to have this bill passed as quickly as possible because, as Senator Denis indicated, they actually agreed to the deletion of their own additions and to the suggestions made and agreed upon unanimously by the all-party committee.

In his introduction of the bill, Senator Denis indicated that the urgency of the passage of this bill might be attributed to an election that is contemplated very soon—I think he said perhaps in the spring.

Senator Bourget: He doesn't know.

Senator Grosart: I would be interested to know if he has any further comments to make on that aspect when he closes the debate. I am sure all honourable senators will be very interested to know the relationship between the government's insistence on early passage of this bill and any intentions they might have for the future. I wonder if Senator Denis is privy to any such thinking on the part of the government.

Senator Denis: I do not know any secrets.

Senator Grosart: If he does know some secrets I am sure he would be anxious to share them with his colleagues in the Senate. I will not address the question to the Leader of the Government, but will welcome any comment he might care to make during the debate on the bill.

As Senator Denis has said, this bill contains a great many amendments to the Canada Elections Act, and particularly to certain provisions dealing with expenses, administrative procedures, and the extension of voting facilities. I am sure we all welcome many of these amendments, even though as senators we do not have the same particular individual interest in the Canada Elections Act that members of the other place have. The interest of the House of Commons in this bill is indicated by the fact that it was debated last month for a considerable length of time, and is the subject of no fewer than nine reports from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

We welcome, of course, the improvements in the administrative procedures which, as Senator Denis has indicated, were suggested by the Chief Electoral Officer. And I join him in paying compliments to the Chief Electoral Officer, who is certainly a worthy successor to Mr. Castonguay, whom I had more to do with. We have been fortunate in the high calibre of chief electoral officers we have had in my time, including, of course, Mr. Castonguay's distinguished father. I am sure many senators here have good reason to agree with me that we have been fortunate in the calibre of chief electoral officers that we have had in this country.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Grosart: Many of the amendments incorporated in this bill, as finally passed by the House of Commons, were suggested by Mr. Hamel, the Chief Electoral Officer. Others were suggested by the ad hoc committee. There is an interesting history to this. As I have indicated, after the passage of the Election Expenses Act in January 1974, this ad hoc committee, consisting of all parties was convened under the chairmanship of the Chief Electoral Officer. This committee proposed many of the amendments incorporated in this bill, but when the bill was introduced by the Honourable Norman Cafik, Minister of State for Multiculturalism, it contained two provisions which created great concern to many members, including members of that committee. To their surprise they found that the government intended to provide for the indexing of the reimbursement of expenditures and the limitation to candidates, dating back to 1974, in spite of the fact that the all-party committee had rejected a proposal that it should be indexed back to 1976.

Various suggestions were made as to why the cabinet, apparently without consulting caucus, decided to provide for this indexing. I cannot vouch for it, but there was some indication that it was a pure cabinet decision to provide for an indexing of these amounts so that, apart from other costs, there would be a cost to the public treasury of at least $12 million for various reasons. The opposition parties strenuously objected to this, and the government withdrew the provision from the bill. I compliment the government for that.

A more serious new provision, and one that had not been agreed to by the all-party committee, would have permitted anonymous contributions of any limit to be made to a candidate without recourse. As Senator Denis has indicated, there were difficulties there and this seemed to go against the principle of the amendments made in 1974. The principle was to open up this whole business of financing political parties. And here, suddenly, from the government came a suggestion that it should be closed up again, and that anonymous contributions should be permitted. Again all the evidence appears to indicate that this was a cabinet decision, that for some reason it was in the party's interest, if not the public's interest, to permit anonymous, unidentified, under-the-table contributions to public parties in defiance of the spirit of the act and of 10 or 12 years of parliamentary scrutiny.

● (2030)

Fortunately, the opposition stood firmly on this and made it very clear to the government that there was no way that this act would be passed before Christmas if the government insisted on this provision. The government wisely withdrew it, and again I compliment them. I am sure that it was only because of the urgency of getting these amendments to the act passed that the government was persuaded not to stand on one infamous provision, the validity of which is doubtful in terms of the public interest.

I am sure all honourable senators agree with the general provisions of these recent acts, which provide for some reimbursement to candidates and which limit the expenditures in relation to the size and other characteristics of constituencies. They have had the effect of clearing away a great many problems that have arisen and caused suspicions and concerns in the mind of the public with respect to the manner in which persons are elected to Parliament and the kind of financial support they are given. By and large, these are provisions which came about at a time when there was minority government, and some say that these major changes in the electoral system might be one of the arguments supporting the contention that minority government is not one of the worst things that can happen in a democracy such as ours.

I must say that my experience in the elections in which I have had some responsibility in the past has been on the expenditure side, rather than the money-raising side. The principle I always bore in mind was stated, I believe, by an American senator who said that everyone agrees that half the money spent on a political campaign is wasted, the trouble being that no one can agree on which half. I believe that many senators, with their wide experience in this area, will agree with that.

I notice that Senator Denis departed from his notes several times and became particularly impassioned and informative when he was speaking of that great problem that has confronted everyone concerned with the process of getting votes in ballot boxes. When he spoke of those provisions which make it easier to get a vote in the ballot box he demonstrated a knowledge and expertise in that area for which I compliment him.

Honourable senators, as I said, many amendments have been made to the bill that was originally introduced in October. I am not concerned at the moment to question any of them, other than the two of which I have spoken. I say again that I welcome the extensions. As senators we have an interest in the public aspect of elections, particularly the extensions of voting arrangements for the handicapped and those who are unable, at certain specific times provided in earlier acts, to vote. The accessibility of the ballot box to the public will be increased by the legislation which is now before us.

Senator Denis raised the question of whether it is necessary to refer this bill to committee. It is my view—and a view with which the Leader of the Opposition is in agreement—that it is not necessary, because this is a bill which concerns members of the House of Commons more than it does the Senate. The opposition derives a great deal of satisfaction from the fact that the government did withdraw the two provisions to which there was considerable objection and, therefore, we see no reason for prolonging debate on this measure.

Senator Greene: Honourable senators, I wish to address one important point in Senator Grosart's able argument. Whenever the government heeds the arguments of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, he imputes motives of partisanship or political gain—

Senator Flynn: How could we?

Senator Greene:—or some sort of improper motive. To me, that is the very negation of the theory of Parliament. A wise and truly national government, with the national interest at heart, should often heed the persuasions of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, because it is just that—loyal. I believe the opposition has proved itself to be Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in both this and the other house.

I deprecate the tendency of the honourable senator to always impute improper motives to the government whenever it heeds the legitimate arguments of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in respect of amending or in any way improving a bill. We should rejoice in the contribution of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in the way of improving legislation, whether it be in this or the other house, instead of imputing some improper motive on each occasion on which the government accepts its arguments.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I have been sitting here wondering what I said that could possibly be construed as a suggestion of an improper motivation on the part of the government. As far as I am concerned, the only motivation I suggested was the urgency of an election, and I cannot think of anything more proper in the public interest than that.

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if Senator Denis speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Denis: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Grosart for his courtesy and his very important contribution to this debate. I found it interesting that he was criticizing what we did not do, namely, the indexing of election expenses to the cost of living. However, he failed to point out that we did not do so because his own party was against it.

• (2040)

Senator Grosart: It was a good try.

Senator Denis: When we decided to index taxation rates to the cost of living, he approved; when we decided to index family allowances and old age pensions to the cost of living, he approved. The government, therefore, thinking it might cost much more to fund an election in the future, decided to index election expenses to the cost of living, and did so in good faith. However, after hearing the arguments of certain learned members of the opposition, it was decided to forego indexation.

Dealing with the matter of urgency, it is revealing no secret to say that there is an election in the offing, and it will take three months from the passage of this bill to implement fully its proposals.

I have nothing further to add, except to quote the words of the Leader of the Opposition in the other place, as reported at page 435 of the House of Commons Hansard of October 31 last:

Mr. Speaker, I think I can say, on behalf of my colleagues in this party, that we are happy to have the amendments in relation to the Canada Elections Act and election law before the house. We are particularly pleased that so many of the proposals made in the all-party committee referred to by the minister have been accepted.

At page 438, Mr. Symes, the New Democratic member for Sault Ste. Marie, said:

I should like at this time to pay tribute to the Chief Electoral Officer, his staff and those who sat on the parliamentary committee, as well as on the ad hoc committee, and proposed changes and clarifications to the act. I think we have before us a number of improvements, clarification of language and terms, and some improvements for which members on both sides of the house and members of the general public have asked.

I have a thousand other citations, but I think I should stop there.

Senator Flynn: So do I.

An Hon. Senator: Don't push your luck.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Denis moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

THE SENATE

Senator Paterson: Honourable senators, with your permission I should like to impress upon the new senators—to me, of course, all members of this house are new—how fortunate they are to be members of this honourable body.

When I was appointed to the Senate there were two main protagonists: the leader on our side, the late Honourable Raoul Dandurand, P.C., and the leader on the other side, the late Right Honourable Arthur Meighen, P.C. They say that the tongue is like a rapier. Well, both those gentlemen had sharp rapiers, and in those days it was seldom that other senators had an opportunity to participate to any great extent in debate. Both leaders were personal in their remarks, and they would say anything hurtful that came to mind. We have no such exhibition in the Senate today.

A very nice thing happened to me this morning. Some time ago I was rude to Senator Keith Davey. Well, it seems he has forgiven me, because this morning I received his good wishes in a lovely Christmas card, and I want to respond.

I beseech all new senators to help keep this house as honourable as it is at present. We are so fortunate in having two leaders who keep us well informed, while at the same time avoiding bitter altercations.

Honourable senators, before taking my seat I wish everyone the compliments of the season and a Happy New Year.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, to the extent that I can speak for the new senators, I should like to respond to Senator Paterson. As to our appreciating our appointments, we do; as to striving to keep the chamber in the honourable state that it is and making our contribution to it, we shall try our best. And we thank Senator Paterson for his good wishes.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

---

THE SENATE

Tuesday, December 20, 1977

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Committee on the Concept of the Ombudsman, dated July 1977 (Mr. J. D. Love, Chairman).

PRIVATE BILLS

MARRIAGE LAW EXEMPTION (JAMES RICHARD BORDEN AND JUDY ANN BORDEN)—FIRST READING

Senator Bourget presented Bill S-5, to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of James Richard Borden and Judy Ann Borden.

Bill read the first time.

Senator Bourget moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday, January 31, 1978.

Motion agreed to.

MARRIAGE LAW EXEMPTION (EUGÈNE WADDELL AND MARGUERITE BENOIT)—FIRST READING

Senator Bourget presented Bill S-6, to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of Eugène Waddell and Marguerite Benoit.

Bill read first time.

Senator Bourget moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday, January 31, 1978.

Motion agreed to.

MARRIAGE LAW EXEMPTION (LUCIEN ROCH JOSEPH MORIN AND MARIE ROSE HÉLÈNE MORIN)—FIRST READING

Senator Deschatelets presented Bill S-7, to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of Lucien Roch Joseph Morin and Marie Rose Hélène Morin.

Bill read first time.

Senator Deschatelets moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday, January 31, 1978.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

THIRD REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF SELECTION PRESENTED AND ADOPTED

Senator Petten, Chairman of the Committee of Selection, presented the following report:

Tuesday, December 20, 1977

The Committee of Selection appointed to nominate senators to serve on the several select committees during the present session makes its third report as follows:

Your committee has the honour to submit herewith the list of senators nominated by it to serve on the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region, namely, the Honourable Senators Asselin, Barrow, Bélisle, Buckwold, Deschatelets, Lafond, McDonald, and Marchand.

Respectfully submitted,

William J. Petten,
Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved that the report be adopted now.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

● (1410)

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING SOUTH AFRICA AND OTHER COUNTRIES—QUESTIONS

Senator Lang: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. It is rather extensive. I was unable to give the leader adequate notice, and I presume that under the circumstances he will take my question as notice. It is as follows:

In view of the announcement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the House of Commons yesterday that Canada is phasing out all its government-sponsored, commercially supported activities in South Africa, and that the reason therefor is to display and demonstrate our disapproval of the present regime, our disapproval of apartheid, and our strong belief that what must come in South Africa is the destruction of that kind of system the introduction of the principle of one man, one vote, and of the normal democratic process;

And anticipating an answer based on that most questionable hypothesis that South Africa has a declared and unequivocal policy, which makes decisions affecting human rights on the basis of race and colour, which stands it apart from all other countries in the world;

Would the Leader of the Government advise this chamber if for the same reasons—namely, the introduction of the principle of one man, one vote, and of the normal democratic process—Canada is considering phasing out government-sponsored, commercially supported activities now carried on in any of the 17 civilian-ruled, one-party states, and the 10 military dictatorships which exist elsewhere in Africa;

By way of supplementary: Is Canada, for the same reasons, considering phasing out any government-sponsored, commercially supported activities elsewhere in the world, specifically in Argentina, Chile, China, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Haiti, Hungary, Korea, Poland, Rumania or Russia?

Finally, honourable senators, in respect of both questions I ask: If not, why not?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I appreciate the fact that Senator Lang gave me at least some prior notice of this question. Unfortunately, the replies which he has requested are not immediately available. I shall undertake to provide a fuller explanation of Canada's trading policy at a future date, which I hope will be soon.

ALASKA HIGHWAY PIPELINE

USE OF CANADIAN MATERIALS—QUESTION

Senator Greene: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government. In light of questions previously posed by myself and other members of the Senate, can the leader now give any assurance that all pipe used on the Canadian section of the Alaska Highway pipeline, transmitting Alaska gas to U.S. markets, will be entirely Canadian-manufactured pipe?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a number of assurances have already been given to the effect that it is anticipated that a substantial part of the materials to be employed in the construction of this important natural gas pipeline will be manufactured in Canada.

So far as there being in existence a contract to specify that only Canadian pipe will be used, it is my understanding that at the present time no such contract is in existence. However, as soon as further information becomes available it will be provided for the Senate.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Senator Denis moved the third reading of Bill C-5, to amend the Canada Elections Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

[Senator Lang.]

RIDEAU HALL OTTAWA GOVERNMENT HOUSE

December 20, 1977

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Wishart F. Spence, O.B.E., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 20th day of December, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,

Madam,

Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate,

Ottawa.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motion:

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, January 31, 1978, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it was anticipated that we would have royal assent this afternoon at approximately 3 o'clock. However, there has been some delay in the debate in the other place, which concerns foreign policy, and for that reason I move that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure, to the call of the bell at approximately 5.40 this afternoon.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.40 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Wishart F. Spence, O.B.E., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bill:

An Act to amend the Canada Elections Act

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General: On behalf of His Excellency the Governor General, I wish all members of the Senate a very happy Christmas.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, before I move the adjournment, I would like to wish all senators on both sides of the house a very merry Christmas and a happy and prosperous New Year.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, January 31, 1978, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, January 31, 1978

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

RESTAURANT OF PARLIAMENT

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Mitges had been substituted for that of Mr. Lawrence on the list of members appointed to serve on the Standing Joint Committee on the Restaurant of Parliament.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND AND TO ESTABLISH THE EMPLOYMENT TAX CREDIT PROGRAM—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-23, to amend the Income Tax Act and to establish the Employment Tax Credit Program.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Perrault, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 14 of the Surplus Crown Assets Act, Chapter S-20 and sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Amending Order No. 7, amending the Federal Court Rules, made by the Judges of the Federal Court of Canada on October 28, 1977, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1977-3376, dated December 1, 1977, approving same, pursuant to section 46(5) of the Federal Court Act, Chapter 10 (2nd Supplement), R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Fisheries Prices Support Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 7 of the Fisheries Prices Support Act, Chapter F-23, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of the Report of the Mackenzie Valley Pipeline Inquiry, Volume II, entitled "Northern Frontier, Northern Homeland", dated November 30, 1977 (The Honourable Mr. Justice Thomas R. Berger, Commissioner), issued by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Report of the National Harbours Board, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 32 of the National Harbours Board Act, Chapter N-8, and sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Reports of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting certain compensation plans, as follows:

1. British Columbia School Trustees Association East Kootenay Employers' Organization, British Columbia and the group of its clerical and maintenance employees, represented by the Canadian Union of Public Employees Locals 343, 729, 979, 1333, 1556 and 2091 (formerly 343). Order dated January 12, 1978.

2. British Columbia School Trustees Association West Kootenay Employers' Organization, British Columbia and the group of its clerical and maintenance employees, represented by the Canadian Union of Public Employees Locals 748, 1285, 1298, 1341 and 2098 (formerly 343). Order dated December 28, 1977.

3. British Columbia Transport Labour Relations, acting on behalf of all Member Companies in the cartage industry, and the group of employees, represented by the Teamsters Union Locals 31 and 213. Order dated January 13, 1978.

4. Canadian International Paper Company, Container and Single Service Divisions at Markham, Ontario; the Container Division at Rexdale, Ontario; Burlington, Ontario; London, Ontario and Pointe-aux-Trembles, Quebec and its plant employees, represented by the Canadian Paperworkers Union and Canadian Chemical Workers Union. Order dated January 13, 1978.

5. Carleton University, Ottawa, Ontario and the group of its security guards, represented by the Canadian Guards Association, Local 103. Order dated January 10, 1978.

6. Port-aux-Basques Integrated School Board and the group of its janitors and secretaries, represented by the Newfoundland Association of Public Employees. Order dated January 6, 1978.

7. Bell Canada, Montreal, Quebec and the group of its craft and services employees, represented by the Communications Workers of Canada. Order dated January 19, 1978.

8. McAllister Towing and Salvage Company Limited and two of its groups, the captains and engineers, represented by the Canadian Marine Officers Union. Orders dated January 17, 1978.

9. Villa Youville Inc., Ste. Anne, Manitoba and the group of its executive employees. Order dated January 19, 1978.

Report of operations under the International River Improvements Act for the year ended December 31, 1977, pursuant to section 10 of the said Act, Chapter I-22, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of Canadian Arsenals Limited, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Reports of the Anti-Inflation Board to the Governor in Council, pursuant to section 17(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, reporting its reference to the Administrator of the said Act of certain proposed changes in compensation plans, as follows:

1. County of Lacombe No. 14, Alberta and certain groups of its employees, viz., the executive group, maintenance and custodian group, office administrative and other group, public works' group, school secretarial and aides and other group, and the transportation group, dated January 13, 1978.

2. Homewood Sanitarium of Guelph Ontario Ltd., medical staff, dated January 13, 1978.

3. School District No. 70 (Alberni) and its non-teaching employees, members of C.U.P.E. Local 727, dated January 13, 1978.

4. Price Company Ltd. and its 269 Mont-Joli Québec employees, represented by le Syndicat national de l'industrie du bois de Price, Inc. (Confédération des syndicats nationaux) group 27, dated January 13, 1978.

5. Becker Milk Company Limited (Cameron Dairy) and the employees represented by the Milk and Bread Drivers, Dairy Employees Caterers and Allied Employees, Local 647, dated December 16, 1977.

6. Municipal School Board of Pictou County and the Secretary-Treasurer employee, dated December 14, 1977.

7. City of Drumheller, Alberta and the executive group, consisting of the City Manager and the City Engineer, dated December 14, 1977.

8. Domtar Packaging Limited, Corrugated Containers Division, Kitchener, Ontario and Canadian Paperworkers Union, Local 1196, dated December 14, 1977.

9. Hardisty Nursing Home Ltd. and the Registered Nurses, represented by the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses, dated December 14, 1977.

Report of the Fitness and Amateur Sport Branch for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 13 of the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act, Chapter F-25, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 6 of the Department of Agriculture Act, Chapter A-10, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Report of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting compensation plan between Dauphin-Ochre School Area No. 1, Dauphin, Manitoba and the group of its executive employees. Order dated January 20, 1978.

Report of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 10 of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs Act, Chapter C-27, R.S.C., 1970.

Revised Capital Budget of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the year ended December 31, 1977, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, as approved by Order in Council P.C. 1977-3578, dated December 15, 1977.

Report of the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada on Trust and Loan Companies for the year ended December 31, 1976, pursuant to section 8 of the Department of Insurance Act, Chapter I-17, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Minister of Transport on the administration of the Motor Vehicle Safety Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 20 of the said Act, Chapter 26 (1st Supplement), R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 22 of the Ministries and Ministers of State Act, Part IV of Chapter 42, Statutes of Canada 1970-71-72.

Report on Government Annuities, together with the Auditor General's Report on the Accounts and Financial Statements, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 18 of the Government Annuities Improvement Act, Chapter 83, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76.

Report of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 7 of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development Act, Chapter I-7, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 5 of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources Act, Chapter E-6, R.S.C., 1970.

FUGITIVE OFFENDERS BILL

FIRST READING

Senator Perrault presented Bill S-8, respecting fugitive offenders in Canada.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a second time?

Senator Perrault moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

SENATE REFORM

PRESS REPORT OF STATEMENT BY LEADER OF THE GOVERNMENT—QUESTION

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I am glad to see all of you looking so well and apparently eager to work, especially the Leader of the Government, who appears to have been basking in the B.C. sunshine.

I gather that during the recess the Leader of the Government was busy giving press conferences on the state of the Senate. During one of those conferences he is supposed to have said that we could expect significant changes to Canada's parliamentary institutions, particularly the Senate, in the very near future. There were some qualifications after that, but that is what he said to begin with. He spoke, it seems, of greater provincial input into the selection of senators, of an elected Senate, or a Senate appointed on a very different basis, and so on.

Would the government leader be kind enough to tell the Senate itself what it is he has been telling the rest of Canada about Senate reform?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I welcome the opportunity to clarify a quotation which appeared in the press during the recess.

First of all, my brief comments were made in the context of the current general national discussion about the future of institutions in Canada: Parliament, the role of provincial assemblies, the Senate, the House of Commons, the Supreme Court, and so on. Secondly, no formal statement was made by me, nor was there any press conference on the subject of the Senate. There were only one or two random questions asked at the conclusion of a meeting in Victoria, where I had gone to announce a grant to the city of Victoria to improve harbour facilities. During the course of those very brief comments, a tape of which I understand to be available, I did not advocate that there be extensive changes in the Senate but stated, in reply to one reporter who asked me a question about the future of the Senate, that I expected changes would take place here, just as I suggested there would be changes in the House of Commons. I suggested that senators were very interested in this process and that many of them had excellent ideas about the future shape of the Senate. My comments did not constitute any announcement of new government policy with respect to possible changes in the Senate. I was contributing in a personal way to the dialogue about the future of our parliamentary institutions.

[Senator Perrault.]

I have made the point that I feel that parliamentarians and other Canadians must work more diligently to develop better understanding among the regions of Canada. In this respect I have suggested that we should make our parliamentary institutions as relevant as possible to make them responsive to the needs of Canadians in all parts of this country. Senators from all parties are concerned about this process. For anyone to portray the Senate as constituting a group of people who are being dragged kicking and struggling into any reform process is a totally warped and distorted view of what all of us know to be a very fine and effective institution.

Senator Flynn: It seems that the press exaggerated the urgency and specific nature of the comments of the government leader. In other words, it was a continuing debate and nothing really to be immediately concerned about.

• (2010)

Senator Perrault: No, it was not an announcement concerning any imminent government policy statement. Incidentally, I believe that the person who covered this press encounter has never visited the Senate nor has he had the opportunity to come to Ottawa.

Senator Flynn: He is not the only one.

Senator Perrault: All of us would welcome the presence of more people from the media in the Senate gallery during the course of our deliberations. Honourable senators, I believe that as we review the future of our country, as we face the challenge of national unity, that dialogue must involve all of us.

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Perrault: I think all members of this chamber have ideas about how the Senate can be made increasingly effective, and I know that honourable senators welcome the opportunity to join in that dialogue in order to make all of Parliament more relevant. Certainly, in this regard I would welcome an opportunity to meet personally with the distinguished Leader of the Opposition to discuss his views on the subject.

Senator Flynn: How long should that dialogue go on?

Senator Perrault: There are some people engaged in the discussion about Canada and its future who suggest that over the next two-year period there will have to be some important decisions made.

Honourable senators, there will be a referendum in at least one Canadian province; there are discussions being conducted now by the National Unity Task Force; there are many voluntary organizations engaged in a discussion about the future of institutions in this country, and I would expect there will be much more speculation in the months to come about the future of the Senate, the House of Commons, and the court system. I feel it is perfectly legitimate that these discussions go ahead. I think it is very important that all senators be involved in these discussions and that it not be left exclusively to others to determine the future of our parliamentary institutions and other Canadian institutions.

Senator Flynn: Will the government have specific proposals before the referendum to which my friend referred?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a number of discussions have been held in recent months involving provincial first ministers, the Right Honourable the Prime Minister, federal ministers and their provincial counterparts. A number of provincial representatives have discussed their desire to have greater input in the process of selecting senators. I have discussed the "pros" and "cons" of that idea personally. This is one of the options being discussed by many people. I welcome a free and open dialogue on the subject.

It seems to me, honourable senators, that in 1867 the Fathers of Confederation performed a monumental task in bringing about Confederation. Their plan, their format, was based upon the information and knowledge they had available to them at that time, and the Canada that existed then. In the next few months we will engage in the process of discussing what may be described as "re-Confederation." We should welcome discussion of the options. We have facts available to us in 1978 that were not available to the Fathers of Confederation, who created the original Confederation designed to meet the needs of the regions as they existed in 1867. They did the best they could with the resources and knowledge they had available. We should do the same in 1978.

Senator Flynn: Did I understand correctly that you said that in the next few months we should be able to propose something concrete? Is that a clear understanding of the Leader of the Government's proposal?

Senator Perrault: No, it is not a clear understanding. The press report, if the honourable senator will read on, further states that, when I was questioned with respect to my statement, I said I would expect that many of our institutions would be changed and modified in the next two to five years.

Senator Flynn: It may come after the referendum and mean nothing at all then.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is really speculation at this stage. The honourable senator realizes that there are ten provinces and two very important territories in Canada. We have a very complex Confederation, and to bring about any agreement concerning the future of our parliamentary institutions might take some time; it is very difficult to say.

Senator Flynn: I am not talking of an agreement. I understand that that may take some years. I am talking of specific proposals by the government, so that we know what the government has in mind before the referendum.

Senator Perrault: No decision has been taken on that subject as yet.

Senator Forsey: I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question. I was looking at the Speech from the Throne, and I find there the statement:

The government will also be placing before Parliament, and in this way before the people of Canada, later in this Session, a measure that will contain a number of proposals relating to the Constitution of Canada.

I assumed that when the Leader of the Government was making those statements in British Columbia, which appear to have been badly reported, he was perhaps making some reference to the statement in the Speech from the Throne. I might add, perhaps, that in view of that paragraph in the Speech from the Throne and the numerous rumours that are circulating, I feel particularly strongly about the matter that I intend to raise on Thursday next.

Senator Perrault: Yes, the Speech from the Throne did contain that reference. It may well be that the government will have some proposals to place before Parliament in these areas, but no final decision has been taken. The other day I expressed only a personal view that we should look forward to some changes within the next two to five years. That was my personal assessment of the situation. Change could come sooner than that.

Senator Côté: Have any discussions been held, even though a decision has not yet been made?

Senator Perrault: I would assume that discussions are being held. I understand that discussions have been held. Certainly, meetings have been held with provincial premiers, asking them for their views with respect to federal institutions. I would think that perhaps we on the federal side may have some counter proposals with respect to the future of certain provincial institutions and responsibilities as well. What I think we are all attempting to do, regardless of party, is to find a way in which we can develop a better and more effective Confederation to serve the needs of Canadians from coast to coast. That search for a better Confederation certainly includes the future of our Canadian parliamentary institutions.

[Later]

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I would like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government. When making his remarks outside the house, without making them first in the Senate chamber, he referred to regional representation. I would like him to elaborate on his remark with respect to regional representation.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, among other things, we are lacking in full regional representation at the present time in view of the fact that there are a number of Senate vacancies. It seems to me that it would be a useful action on the part of the government to make these Senate appointments as soon as possible and practicable.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: I understand that negotiations are under way involving the party represented here by the Leader of the Opposition—a number of his colleagues—and the government. I hope those negotiations will lead soon to an increase in opposition strength in the Senate. However, the regions can only be represented adequately by active, working senators and presently we are under our total of 104 senators. I would hope that our numbers will be brought up to complement as soon as possible.

Senator Riley: I have a supplementary question, honourable senators. Is there any indication on the part of the government that these vacancies will be filled before the next election?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that is a decision which is the exclusive prerogative of the Right Honourable the Prime Minister of Canada, and I cannot presume to say when these vacancies will be filled. However, I certainly hope that there will be additional representation soon from all of the regions where vacancies exist.

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question arising out of that last answer, because I was under the impression that appointments to the Senate were not constitutionally made in quite the manner described by the Leader of the Government. Is the Leader of the Government aware that on May 1, 1896 the Government of Sir Charles Tupper passed an order in council which set forth a list of the prerogatives of the Prime Minister, which was re-passed over and over again down to 1935? I believe it has not been re-passed since. But it set forth that it was one of the exclusive prerogatives of the Prime Minister to make recommendations on the appointment of senators and of the chief justices of provincial courts and so forth. But the context clearly indicates that this meant recommendations to Council, rather than advice to the Governor General. I was under the impression—and I should like the Leader of the Government to clear this up—that in fact the advice was tendered by the cabinet, through the Prime Minister, of course, and that it was the exclusive prerogative of the Prime Minister simply to make recommendations to Council. I wonder if the Leader of the Government could clear that up for me? It is often said that the Prime Minister does the whole thing, but I wonder if that is constitutionally correct?

Senator Perrault: Well, honourable senators—

Senator Flynn: How were you appointed?

Senator Perrault: Let me say that it can be said with great truth that Prime Ministers have a great influence on the selection of members of this chamber. However, most certainly proposed Senate appointments are discussed in Council and—

Senator Flynn: Not for too long.

Senator Perrault: Some discussions take longer than others.

Senator Flynn: You don't know about yours.

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I should like to put another question to the Leader of the Government in the

[Senator Perrault.]

Senate. Is there any indication that the western provinces will have increased representation in the Senate?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I understand that several months ago a proposal along these lines was contained in a letter sent to the western premiers. That correspondence was tabled in this chamber in February 1977. It was to the effect that one possible alteration in Senate representation would be increased representation from certain western provinces because of rapid population growth. The proposal involved, I believe, increased representation for Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia. I believe all four western provinces were involved.

This proposal—and I understand that it was merely a proposal—was set forth in view of the fact that the western provinces generally are under-represented on the basis of population. However, one should bear in mind that the Senate has never been a body which has seen representation merely on the basis of population.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING SOUTH AFRICA AND OTHER COUNTRIES—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a question was asked by Senator Lang on Tuesday, December 20, with respect to South Africa. He asked whether:

—Canada is considering phasing out government-sponsored, commercially-supported activities now carried on in any of the 17 civilian-ruled, one-party states, and the 10 military dictatorships which exist elsewhere in Africa.

The answer is no.

He next asked:

Is Canada, for the same reasons, considering phasing out any government-sponsored, commercially-supported activities elsewhere in the world?

A number of countries were listed. The answer is no.

The honourable senator's third question was: If no is the answer to either question, then why not?

As the Secretary of State for External Affairs pointed out in his statement of December 19, 1977, while there are clear violations of and disregard for human rights in other countries of the world, South Africa "stands apart as a country which makes decisions affecting human beings on the basis of race and colour." It is for this reason that the government decided that South Africa was a unique situation warranting exceptional measures.

PENITENTIARIES

QUALIFICATIONS OF NEW COMMISSIONER—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on December 12 of last year, Senator Forsey referred to Mr. Yeomans, the newly appointed Commissioner of Penitentiaries, and asked:

What knowledge or experience does this gentleman possess in the field of criminology?

As indicated in the press release announcing Mr. Yeomans' appointment—I have a full copy of this release, which I would not presume to read at this time—Mr. Yeomans has had considerable experience as a manager in the private sector and in the public service. However, he has had no direct involvement in criminology. I have a list of the positions he has held, which I will be pleased to make available to Senator Forsey. If the honourable senator would like to have this as part of the Senate record at some point, the Senate could be asked to concur in that request.

Senator Forsey: I have it already.

TRANSPORTATION

EXTENSION OF PASSENGER FACILITIES AT WHITEHORSE AND WATSON LAKE AIRPORTS—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, Senator Lucier is not present this evening, but on December 15 he asked a question about the extension of passenger facilities at Whitehorse and Watson Lake Airports. He stated that the airport facilities at these two points are below standards acceptable under present traffic loads, and certainly will be severely overloaded with the building of the pipeline and other potential development in the Yukon.

● (2020)

The reply which I have received from the office of the Minister of Transport is in the form of tables. I would ask the leave of the Senate to have these tables appear as part of today's record.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The tables follow:)

WHITEHORSE

Project Recently Completed

Air Terminal Building Renovation	$50,000.00	Completed	April 1977
----------------------------------	-------------	-----------	------------

Project Pending Completion

Preliminary Lot Grading	$50,000.00	Completion to	be March 1978
-------------------------	-------------	---------------	---------------

Approved Program

	1978/79	1979/80	After 1984
Replace Water and Sewer System	$342,000.00	$744,000.00
* New Air Terminal Building		$6,951,000.00
* New Fire Hall			$429,000.00
* Sand Storage Building			$110,000.00
* Aviation Commercial Development Services			$960,800.00
Repairs to Taxiway L	$94,100.00	(Contract let—work to start 1978)
 Repairs to Hangar B Apron	$152,700.00	(Funds yet to be identified)

Project Under Development

New Taxiway to Commercial Area—Phase 1

WATSON LAKE

Approved Program

* Extend Runway 08-26		After 1984
		$801,000.00

Watson Lake Extend Runway project is under review at present, CPA has asked for a major extension, but as there were questions about the proper alignment and major topographical constraints, a complete review and alternative cost estimates are underway. A Regional decision will be made about February 1, 1978 whether this item will be included in the Five Year Plan. If a 1000-1200 foot extension is required the TEC could be $3 or $4 million.

	1978/79	1979/80	1980/81	1982/83	After 1984
*—Improvements to Airport Entrance Road				$374,000.00
*—Expansion of Air Terminal Building					$795,000.00
—Reconstruct portion of Air Terminal Building and Air Craft Parking Apron		$42,600.00		$81,100.00
—Pave Maintenance Garage Parking Apron

	1978/79	1979/80	1980/81	1982/83	After 1984
—New Power House Distribution Load Centre		$245,400.00
—Provide Blast Pads, Approaches to Runway 08-26					$77,000.00
—Stop Lights Public Entrance Road			$36,800.00
—Replace Aeradio Receiver					$25,000.00
—ILS RVR Runway 26	$320,200.00	$133,600.00
*—Replace 5 Houses					$275,000.00

* Program Approval Documents not approved.

**Source of funding not yet identified.

THE HONOURABLE MARTIAL ASSELIN, P.C.

FELICITATIONS ON RETURN TO CHAMBER

[Translation]

Senator Flynn: At this point, I want to extend our welcome to Senator Asselin.

He has been ill but, indeed, looks very fit today. I am sure all of us here are happy to see him again, especially we of the opposition who have great need of his support and talent.

Senator Perrault: I am very happy to welcome our colleague Senator Asselin who comes back to us this evening apparently in good health. We extend our very best wishes to him.

Senator Bourget: Honourable senators, I join Senator Flynn and the Leader of the Government in the Senate in saying how happy we are to see Senator Asselin back with us again.

I have already told him—I did so when we met elsewhere—how fit he looks. I trust he will remain with us a long time. I am sure all senators join us in telling him how very happy we are that he is back with us.

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, naturally, after several months of absence, after a rather serious illness, I am deeply moved to be back with my friends of the Senate. I must say I missed them tremendously. What encouraged me most was the fact that I received from my colleagues, on both sides of this chamber, "get well soon" wishes. I can assure you they did wonders for my morale during my recovery which I trust will last a long time.

I also thank you, Madam Speaker, for the wishes you sent me when I was in hospital in Chicoutimi.

I can tell you the doctors say I am in great shape. I have come back, first of all, to help my party continue to defend the rights of the loyal opposition, and, secondly, to help the Senate achieve its objective and play its role with regard to the Canadian nation. I thank you.

[English]

● (2030)

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I should like to add my word of welcome to Senator Asselin. Like Senator Côté, I understand very well some of the problems he had. All I can wish for him is the kind of recovery that the doctors who looked after Senator Côté and myself brought about. Since he is such a young man, I am sure that that is entirely possible, and I hope it will happen very soon.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND AND TO ESTABLISH THE EMPLOYMENT TAX CREDIT PROGRAM—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the second reading of Bill C-23, to amend the Income Tax Act and to establish the Employment Tax Credit Program.

He said: Honourable senators, I begin by apologizing for overexposure. One of the last speeches you heard before the Christmas recess was from me on taxation.

Senator Flynn: How do you know we remember?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not say you do, but perhaps you do remember that at that time I wished you all a good Christmas season. Now, on your first attendance in the Senate in the new year, you are again to be inflicted with a speech from me, and again on taxation. However, it does give me an opportunity to wish all honourable senators a good 1978.

Bill C-23, by clauses 1 to 6, amends the Income Tax Act, and by clause 7—which is an unusual piece of draftsmanship—it establishes what is to be known as the Employment Tax Credit Program. The purpose of the program is to foster employment in the private sector, and the first six clauses of the bill indicate the way in which this will be done through the medium of the Income Tax Act.

The encouragement that is to be given to the provision of employment in the private sector is distinguished from the encouragement to be provided through the public sector by way of the Canada Works Program, the Young Canada Works Program, the Labour Intensive Program, and others, all of which involve the expenditure of funds directly through the public sector. I am told that some $600 million has already been allocated to that purpose for this fiscal year.

The Employment Tax Credit Program is an incentive to Canadian business by reducing the cost of wages paid for new jobs which employers create. A new job, generally, may be defined as one that has been created primarily because of this program and which would not be created were the program not in place.

We are not talking here about cash payments to business. We are not talking about grants, subsidies, or subventions. This is a tax credit to business. It will result in a deduction from the tax otherwise payable by the employer. The program will be administered by the Canada Employment Immigration Commission, which operates the programs of the Department of Employment and Immigration as well as the programs of the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

This program is designed, in the first instance, to last for two years. The credit which employers may build up through the program will be reflected in the income tax returns of those businesses which earn the credit. This credit, of course, will also be monitored by the tax department through the filing of tax returns which will reflect those credits.

Let me say a word, first of all, about the amount of the credit, which will be higher in regions of higher unemployment. It will be $2 per hour per worker in the four provinces of the Atlantic region, and in the Gaspé Peninsula as it is defined in the bill. It will be $1.75 per hour per worker in regions prescribed under the Regional Development Incentives Act. These are parts of Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta, British Columbia, the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories and the whole of Saskatchewan. It will be $1.50 per hour per worker in all the other regions of Canada.

Honourable senators may find this somewhat confusing without having a map in front of them and not knowing precisely the designated regions outside the Atlantic region. I have the maps with me, but this is a bill which should be considered by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce at the appropriate time, and in committee, if honourable senators are interested in specific areas and the amount of credit applicable to those areas, the maps will be available and the officials will be able to indicate for each region the amount that applies.

Today, honourable senators, businesses, both incorporated and unincorporated, usually have their income tax returns prepared by accountants. When those directing the business look at the report that the accountants make they will see, first of all, that all the expenses incurred in wages and salaries, including the expenses incurred in creating the new jobs which this program envisages, continue to be deductible expenses. So the expenses incurred through the creation of these new jobs will be deductible, as are any other legitimate expenses of the business.

Having made that provision in the tax return, the auditor will, of course, be able to compute the tax credit on the basis of the number of hours worked at the rate applicable in the region where the work is carried out. The auditor will have a special tax schedule to support the claim for the tax credit which is to be filed by the business concerned.

The auditor will then compute the taxpayer's taxable income. That income, I should add, will, as a result of this legislation, if it is passed, include the actual "amount" of the tax credit as part of the income and I shall give an example of that later.

The auditor, having computed the taxable income of the business, will then deduct the full amount of the employment tax credit from the tax which would otherwise be payable by that business.

In order to give you an example of that, honourable senators, let me take, first of all, the case of an employer in the Atlantic region who creates one job for which he is going to pay $5 an hour. It is a job that involves working a 40-hour week, and for the sake of easy figuring let us say that it lasts for 30 weeks. That job, then, entails 1,200 hours, and at $5 an hour it will cost the employer $6,000.

• (2040)

The employment tax credit for that job will be based on the $2 rate for the Atlantic region times the 1,200 hours, which means that the employment tax credit will be $2,400. As I have said, this credit is taxable so it is included now in the income of the taxpayer. The accountant, having added the $2,400, the amount of the tax credit, to the employer's other business income, and having computed the tax payable by that business for that taxation year, will then deduct from that computed tax the $2,400 tax credit.

Honourable senators, the top rate of corporate income tax in Canada is 46 to 48 per cent, depending upon the province, but I should like to use a rate of 50 per cent to simplify my example. The average rate for a small business might be 25 per cent. I should, therefore, like to use these rates of 50 per cent and 25 per cent to illustrate how this program will work for a large business—a taxpayer who pays up to the maximum of the marginal rate in the Atlantic region—as well as for a small business in the region. I am talking now about the situation where the tax credit is $2,400, made up of 1,200 hours of work at $2 an hour.

For a large business, one whose marginal rate of tax is 50 per cent, the tax on $2,400 would be $1,200. So the saving, the incentive, the net benefit to the large employer, would be $1,200. For the small business, whose rate of tax is 25 per cent, the tax would be $600, and the saving, the incentive or the net benefit for the small business would be $1,800.

Senator Flynn: It would get a credit.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): The wage bill for that job at $5 an hour for 1,200 hours is $6,000. But the incentive that the taxpayer will enjoy, if it is a big business, is $1,200. So the job will actually cost $4,800 instead of $6,000.

Senator Flynn: But in tax. You said that it is a credit on the tax and not on the balance sheet.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Oh, yes, of course.

Senator Flynn: But if it has to pay $1,200 in income tax it gets a credit of $1,800, as you said before. It would get a credit. The government would have to reimburse it $600. Is that it?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): No. I am afraid the honourable senator has not followed my example.

Senator Flynn: I am sorry.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Let me finish with the small business. It is going to cost the small businessman the same $5 an hour for 1,200 hours, or $6,000. On the tax credit that was computed of $2,400, he would have paid $600 tax. So he has an incentive, a saving, or a net benefit of $1,800, after having paid his $600 of tax. He has a saving of $1,800 on a $6,000 job, which job now costs him only $4,200.

The larger company, which I was dealing with when Senator Flynn asked his question, having a wage bill of $6,000 normally will have paid a 50 per cent tax on the amount of the credit of $2,400, or $1,200. It will have had a saving, an incentive, or a net benefit of $1,200, so the cost of the $6,000 job for that company is going to be $4,800.

Senator Flynn: But this is my question: Is the credit applied to the income, the net income, or to the tax payable? From the way it was explained it appeared that it was applied to the tax payable, which is quite different.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I am not making myself as clear as I should. Perhaps I can explain it by saying that the credit in this case is computed in a simple arithmetical way—$2 times 1,200 hours equals $2,400. That is not a grant and it is not a loan, and, all other considerations apart, that is not the only figure you work on.

Senator Flynn: Agreed.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): You must remember that the proposal in the measure is to tax the amount of that credit as income. Having taxed it as income at the marginal rate which the employer pays, his overall tax is then determined. When that overall tax is determined, the $2,400 is a tax credit that is applied to that overall tax payable to reduce it by $2,400.

I see Senator Flynn shaking his head. Well, I shook my head many times before I finished trying to work out this arithmetic, and I really think it will take some consideration in the committee to get it clear. However, once it has been clarified it will not be too difficult to understand.

It is obvious from what I have said, honourable senators, that the greater incentive for the creation of new jobs is given to the small business enterprise. In each case, both for the large taxpayer and for the small taxpayer, there is, as you see from my example, a considerable incentive, because it will cost the large taxpayer $4,800 to provide a $6,000 job while it will cost the small taxpayer $4,200 to provide a $6,000 job.

I am informed, honourable senators, that the tax credit is more generous than a non-taxed grant would be. It may be more difficult to understand, but apparently it is more generous, because for the same cost to the treasury a non-taxable credit, I am informed, would be about one-third lower. Instead of rates of $2, $1.75 and $1.50, which are the rates proposed in the bill, they would be $1.33, $1.17 and $1 if it were an untaxed grant.

In one year the estimated cost of the program is $100 million. That is worked out as follows: The value of the credits which it is expected will be granted will be $140 million. By taxing the amount of the credit first, before allowing for the deduction of the credit, the tax take will be $40 million or about one-third of the value of the credits. Therefore the balance will be $100 million. That is the expected cost of the program to the treasury.

● (2050)

I am also informed that provincial revenues will increase by $14 million because of the taxation of the credit.

Senator Flynn: Are you suggesting that the provinces will adopt the same policy, or will amend their income tax acts?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): This is independent of any provincial program. Because of the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements which prevail, I am told that the provinces will have their revenues increased by $14 million. I understand that is an estimate.

It is expected that 50,000 jobs will be created in each of the two years of the program. However, it is obvious that an imaginative response will be required from the private sector in order to make the program work.

I should mention also that the tax credits that are available in the program may be carried forward for five years if they are not needed in the immediate year in which they are earned.

There are a few terms that are used in clause 7(6) of the bill which I believe merit some attention. First there are the words "eligible employment." What is the type of employment that is eligible under the program, and what is the nature of the job? The answer is that the job must last for at least three months for the employer to receive the benefit of the tax deduction, and the benefit will continue for a period of nine months in a taxation year. There is provision in the bill whereby—this will be fixed by regulation—the credit could be earned during 12 months instead of during nine months as now suggested.

It is hoped that most of the newly created jobs will be permanent, but it is estimated that only 25 per cent can be relatively assured of being permanent.

The term "eligible employee" is used. To be eligible for the program an employee must be registered at the Manpower Centre employment office; he must have been unemployed for eight weeks, and looking for work. He will be referred to the new job by the Manpower Centre, which will issue a certificate to him to the effect that he is, in fact, an employee eligible for the program.

An eligible employer can be a business, incorporated or unincorporated, which pays taxes. The credit is not the only incentive for employers to join the program, because the deductions can also apply to the tax instalment payments which corporations are required to make monthly.

I should explain that excluded from the program are temporary jobs, jobs providing a personal service such as performed by maids, chauffeurs, butlers, and so on, and jobs created for relatives of the owner or of senior management of an employer company.

I am told that the regulations will require the completion of a simple form of agreement which the employer will make at the time he informs the employment office of the existence of a new job. To qualify for the tax credit the employer must certify to the Manpower office that the job would have been impossible for him to create without the tax incentive. Probably the agreement will show the nature of the job, the rate of pay, the hours of work, the fact that there is prospect of it's becoming a permanent job, and that the employer will comply with both the act and the regulations.

The Manpower offices will be the agencies which will refer eligible employees to eligible employers.

It is expected that the program will commence on March 31, 1978. All agreements with reference to the program must be signed, completed and in being within two years, namely, by March 31, 1980. However, there is provision that if agreements are made toward the end of the two-year period, they can run out through March 31, 1981.

There are one or two other minor incidental changes which are referred to in clauses 2, 3 and 4. They refer to the capital cost of depreciable assets, the deductible portion of expenditures for scientific research, and the adjusted cost base of the depreciable property.

Since all of these investment incentives reduce the cost of items of capital investment, such as buildings and equipment, the capital cost for depreciation purposes under the tax act will now be reduced by the amount of these incentives. These clauses of this bill ensure that if a taxpayer does not claim his investment tax credit—because, for example, for certain years he was not taxable—the capital cost of the investment will not be reduced for the purposes of depreciation. I believe that to be a very simple but very important point to understand.

Clause 5 provides that if a company entitled to employment tax credit amalgamates with another company, the tax credit will follow the amalgamation into the resulting company. Likewise, if a company's subsidiary is wound up by the parent, the parent company can assert the tax credit which the former subsidiary could have asserted.

Clause 5(2) deals with co-operatives, and provides that the tax credit can be deducted from the 15 per cent tax which is withheld from patronage dividends. It also provides that the tax earned by a trust, as an employer, can be apportioned among the beneficiaries of the trust.

Honourable senators, I recommend the bill to the Senate.

Senator Denis: May I ask the honourable senator a question? In giving the estimate of the cost as being around $100 million, was there taken into account the amount of money that would be paid back by the employee who would himself be paying income tax? Was any consideration given to the amount of money the employee would receive from unemployment insurance? Also, because of his having a new employee, an employer would earn more money and would therefore pay more tax. Were those three points taken into account by the honourable senator in giving us the estimate of cost?

• (2100)

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Actually, the information that I have been given about the cost of the program did not include references to the two matters that the honourable senator has raised. I think it might be rather difficult to estimate what the take might be from the tax payable by people who are employed under this program. While there is a provision that the hourly rate must not be less than the amount of the allocated or established amount for the region—$2.00, $1.75, or $1.50—perhaps some of these jobs will be such that the employee will not be taxable. There are a good many people in this country who are working, and earning, and who still pay no income tax. There may, however, be some help to the exchequer on that point.

Certainly, if a person who is hired for one of these jobs had been on unemployment insurance, those unemployment insurance payments would not be made, and they would, of course, be of assistance to the treasury.

Senator Manning: Does the bill impose a limitation on the number of employees that any one employer can hire under the tax incentive program?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I think not. I think the number is immaterial, providing the employer can satisfy the officials who administer the scheme that without the program it would be impossible for the employer to create the jobs in question. I think that is the only test. It has to be a new job that it would not have been possible to offer if it were not for the incentive provided by the program.

Senator Manning: May I ask a supplementary to that? Take a small new industry that might be made financially feasible by virtue of this type of tax assistance. It seems to me that unless there is some provision made to distinguish between existing businesses and new businesses which could be started up under this program, and taken full advantage of in that way, you might have all the employees qualifying, in such new businesses, as against those of industries of the same type that have already been in business, and where there might be opportunity to create only one or two new positions. Obviously, this would create a pretty serious discrimination as between the respective positions of those two companies with regard to the amount of public assistance given to them. Is that type of situation taken care of in the bill?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): There is no specific reference to that in the proposed legislation, but the question was raised in Committee of the Whole in the House of Commons, and it was clearly stated by the minister who had the carriage of the bill that new businesses just starting would not qualify for this program. It would be, I think, highly unfair for existing businesses to have new businesses come in and qualify for the program, even though it is only a two-year program.

Senator Flynn: When you say "new businesses," do you mean a new corporation, or a new operation of an existing company?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I think the wording of the regulations will have to be very clear on that. I would think that a new employer coming into being as an employer, and never having been a taxpayer before, would not be able to qualify. Again, I think that is a point for the committee.

Senator Forsey: I wonder if I might ask Senator Connolly a question. I may have missed some part of his explanation on this, and if so I apologize; but on clause 6 I wonder if there is any particular reason for leaving the definition of the terms "eligible employee", "eligible employment", and "eligible worker", to the Treasury Board, on the recommendation of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I wonder why those definitions could not be included in the legislation?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Did the honourable senator refer to clause 6 of the bill?

Senator Forsey: Yes. Wait a minute. I am sorry. It is clause 7, subclause (6).

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I am afraid that because the honourable senator referred to clause 6 I was paying attention to that clause instead of to what he was saying. Would he repeat his question? I am afraid I did not hear it.

Senator Forsey: I am sorry. It was my stupid mistake.

In clause 7, subclause (6), on page 8 of the bill, we have the following:

(6) On the recommendation of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Treasury Board may make regulations

(a) defining the terms "eligible employer", "eligible employment" and "eligible worker";

I wondered if I had missed an explanation which the honourable senator had given of the reason for leaving those terms to be defined by regulation rather than defining them in the legislation itself. It is not obvious to me why that should be done.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I have that same difficulty, I confess. I thought perhaps they might have been able to spell that out, although it would have made the bill a good deal longer.

What I have given by way of explanation of those terms, I am told, is going to be the substance of the regulation that will be made with respect to this. With regard to whether the procedure is a good one or not, perhaps the honourable senator would come to the committee and question the officials when that time comes.

Senator Forsey: I shall.

On motion of Senator Phillips, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 1, 1978

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

[Translation]

THE HONOURABLE JEAN MARCHAND, P.C.

NEWSPAPER ARTICLE—PRIVILEGE

Hon. Jean Marchand: Honourable senators, I should like to speak very briefly on a question of privilege and rectify a situation that concerns me, and also concerns the Senate as a whole because I feel the Senate has the right to know what happens publicly that can affect any one of its members.

In today's newspapers and on television last night, mention was made of my public apology to the Crown attorney, Mr. Berzins, who was in charge of the case resulting from a car accident in which I was involved a few years ago.

I have no intention of altering the statement I made jointly with Mr. Berzins. I should not want to involve the Senate in any way, directly or indirectly, in that debate.

So, what I said about Mr. Berzins—that is, the statement I made about Mr. Berzins which I withdrew—I have withdrawn. I do not want to criticize what has been the subject of lengthy discussions. However, there are two points I should like to draw to the attention of honourable senators.

First, I am sorry that the Globe and Mail, for instance, published only part of my statement—that is the one that refers to Mr. Berzins—and that it did not publish the part which concerns me and which was also signed by Mr. Berzins.

Second, though it may be true that I may have misinterpreted or even, let us say, did in fact misinterpret the case before the court, and that I held Mr. Berzins responsible for something for which he was not, I have not changed my mind about it. The fact remains that, in that case, not only do I have the impression but I have the conviction that I was not treated like an honourable citizen, or fairly.

[English]

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—COMMONS MEMBERS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following message had been received from the House of Commons:

Ordered,—That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that the following Members have been appointed to serve on the part of this House on the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region, namely: Messrs. Baker (Grenville-Carleton), Clermont, Corbin, Darling, Ellis, Francis, Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier), Harquail, Isabelle and La Salle, Mrs. Pigott and Messrs. Poulin, Rondeau, Saltsman and Stewart (Cochrane).

Alistair Fraser

The Clerk of the House of Commons.

AIR CANADA BILL, 1977

CONCURRENCE BY COMMONS IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that they had agreed to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-3, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada, without amendment.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I rise to point out that in the course of the discussion of the Senate amendments in the other chamber, lavish praise was heaped upon members of the Senate for the excellent work they did with respect to improving this particular bill. I think it is worth pointing this out because from time to time the Senate is attacked and criticized by the uninformed.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, may I point out that the lavish praise was given by the opposition and not by government members.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Perrault: Surely we must keep politics out of things like this?

Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, in a non-political way, it is an honour to table the following documents:

Capital Budgets of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and Eldorado Aviation Limited for the year ended December 31, 1977, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, together with copies of Order in Council P.C. 1977-600, dated March 10, 1977, approving same.

Report of the Department of Supply and Services, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 12 of the Department of Supply and Services Act, Chapter S-18, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Report of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting compensation plan between Treasury Board of Canada,

Ottawa, Ontario and the group of its hospital services employees, represented by the Public Service Alliance of Canada. Order dated January 26, 1978.

Report of the National Capital Commission, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

THE SENATE

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, when Senator Marchand rose on a point of privilege, I was wondering whether he was going to deny the rumour that he is soon to replace the present Leader of the Government in the Senate. Has the leader some comment about that?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DOCUMENTARY PROGRAM THE FIFTH ESTATE—QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 1—by Senator Bosca:

1. Why did the CBC Fifth Estate documentary dealing with Canada's foreign aid program, shown on the national network on 4th October, 1977, lump together a perfectly honest and worthwhile project of assistance to the earthquake victims of Friuli, Italy, and other controversial and much criticized foreign aid programs?

2. Why were Mrs. Claudia Persi-Haynes and Mr. Maragna, who live in Canada, asked for their opinions of the Friuli project, instead of consulting the residents of the area involved who will benefit from the aid program?

3. Were Mrs. Persi-Haynes and Mr. Maragna invited to Friuli for the filming of the documentary and, if so, were their expenses paid by the CBC and did they receive any compensation for taking part in the program?

4. Is it the intention of the CBC to broadcast an objective account of the assistance Canada has given the Friuli earthquake region?

Senator Perrault: Answered.

1. The program in question was an examination of international disaster aid as a general topic and it was therefore necessary to make reference to a number of examples in order to deal with the specified theme. The aid programs mentioned were spread over some years and varied in their size and the success of their results.

2. Both Mrs. Persi-Haynes and Mr. Maragna were interviewed in the program as Italian-speaking people with good English who were present on the scene and held opinions relevant to the theme of the program. Mr. Maragna, an architect, had been involved personally in the aid project. Their contributions did not exclude the opinions of local residents, a number of whom were also interviewed.

3. Mrs. Persi-Haynes, who lives in Canada, was in Italy on vacation at her own expense. The CBC production team arranged with her to provide some on-the-spot assistance, essentially as a translator, in the course of the filming assignment. She was paid the usual fee for these services. Mr. Maragna's contribution was purely that of an interview subject. He received no fee from the CBC, and the Corporation was in no way involved in his presence in Italy.

4. Although no definite program plans exist at present, it is the CBC's intention to continue to watch developments in the field of Canadian aid to the Friuli earthquake region as well as to other overseas disaster zones, against the possibility of future reports where events seem to justify them.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND AND TO ESTABLISH THE EMPLOYMENT TAX CREDIT PROGRAM—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) for the second reading of Bill C-23, to amend the Income Tax Act and to establish the Employment Tax Credit Program.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, my first remarks must be to congratulate Senator Connolly on his explanation of Bill C-23. It is interesting to note that Senator Connolly's explanations have improved since he resigned as Leader of the Government in the Senate. This may be a coincidence but, on the other hand, I am sure we are all looking forward to the day when the Honourable Senator Perrault joins the other three dozen of the federal cabinet in resigning, and we are looking forward to the election of a new government. Then I am sure that in this chamber we will have a very explicit explanation, one that I am sure Senator Connolly was attempting to achieve last night.

● (1410)

The unemployment problem has been one that has occupied this chamber occasionally, and it has taken up the time of the other place on numerous occasions. Apparently it has now become almost mundane to mention the word "unemployment". The efforts of this government have been fruitless in many ways in many fields, but the efforts of this government in dealing with unemployment can only be described as absolutely barren.

We should recognize the fact that over one and one-quarter million Canadians are looking for work at the present time, and their numbers increase by approximately 50,000 per month. If this bill is to achieve its most inflated or most hopeful expectations it will provide 50,000 jobs per year.

We are now in the month of February, and the number of unemployed will, according to government statistics, increase. This does not include those who were not invited to join these statistics. Honourable senators will recall that in, I believe it was, April of last year I moved a motion drawing the attention of the Senate to this problem, and at that time I explained that many Canadians were not included in the unemployment statistics.

In the month of February, the number of unemployed will increase by 50,000. And what does this bill provide? It provides, at its most optimistic or, put more popularly, its most inflated figure, 50,000 jobs per annum. In other words, honourable senators, you are looking after February's unemployment increase. You are doing nothing more than taking part in a comedy, as 50,000 people will become unemployed next month. Honourable senators, what are you doing about March, April, May and June? You are doing nothing.

It would be unfair of me to suggest that Bill C-23 has a motivation other than in connection with the record number of unemployed. It would be unfair of me to suggest that the government has in mind certain events which are coming up, possibly, I hope, in June. It would be really unfair of me to suggest that the government is trying to hide these figures and keep them from the electorate. Therefore, I will be my usual fair self and not suggest that. However, I am sure you will forgive me if I have a quiet little chuckle when the unemployment figures come out in May—that is, if they come out in May which I really doubt because there will be an election in June and I expect them to be smothered, condensed, or whatever you wish.

Honourable senators, this bill has had a rather unusual introduction. It began back before the last session ended, when the Conservative Party was asking for some tax relief. Then, of course, we had a Throne Speech, to which Senator Forsey made reference last evening. It is rather intriguing to follow the introduction of the government legislation in the Throne Speech, which has no relationship whatsoever. However, this program was announced in October and we must remember that the unemployment figures were becoming rather drastic at that point in time. Then we had the mini-budget, with all its publicity. The government, by buying half the TV time available, spent half the amount available under this bill to publicize it.

Senator Perrault: Public information.

Senator Phillips: Public information; but you had no information to give, Senator Perrault.

Mr. Chrétien went on to suggest godsend. The term "Santa Claus" has an awful lot of variations. In Holland I believe he is a sort of chimney-sweep, but the government did not even come close to being a chimney-sweep.

● (1420)

Honourable senators, I was intrigued by the manner in which the Minister of Finance made his announcement on television. There was considerable difference between the announcement made on television and that which was made before Parliament. On television he was more elaborate and lucid when asked what the final result might possibly be, when he replied, "Well, I don't know. It could be 10 per cent or about 10,000 jobs, or it could be successful and provide the maximum number of jobs we suggested."

As I say, I was rather intrigued by this. I thought that the minister was being honest, and when you have a Liberal cabinet minister being honest you have to sit up and take notice. But then I suddenly understood the problem—Chrétien did not have sufficient knowledge of the tax credit program, and the government had not completed its study; it had only set an objective and was attempting to get away with just that.

Honourable senators, we can expect 10,000 jobs rather than the 50,000 jobs talked about by Senator Connolly yesterday. It is interesting to compare Senator Connolly's introduction of this bill in the Senate with the introduction made in the other place. There is just no one there of his calibre to do the job. The individual who introduced the bill in the Commons said, "Well, a lot of our problems are due to international problems. You know, the government can't really be responsible for what goes on in the rest of the world."

Honourable senators, can you tell me how Idi Amin, for example, has created any unemployment problems in Canada? I doubt if you can. The truth of the matter is that our problems are of our own making. Our problems are simply that we have had 15 years of Liberal administration, and now is the time to end it. It has to end. There is no excuse for the present situation. We must consider alternatives to Bill C-23. The Progressive Conservative Party has recommended a general tax reduction in the hope that such a measure, along with a reduction in corporate tax and the restoration of confidence in our dollar, will result in the employment of more people.

Apparently, however, the government is not of the same view. According to the Honourable Mr. Cullen, the "Minister of Unemployment", tax reduction is too simple. The next time any one of you receives a phone call from someone who is unemployed, as I often do, I hope you will say that you find it too simple a matter to deal with and refer the caller to Mr. Cullen.

Honourable senators, this government is ignoring a million and a quarter unemployed Canadians. I remind the government that on June 15 of last year I initiated a debate in the Senate on unemployment. That debate was adjourned by Senator Croll and he has yet to speak on it. I find that rather confusing. Is the government simply not interested in the million and a quarter Canadians who are looking for work?

The concept behind Bill C-23 was copied from a program introduced by the Ontario government through which it offered private industry an amount per hour to employ students. And I don't think that even the Province of Ontario would say that the program came up to their expectations. Indeed, it found that a considerable number of private business firms said, "Nothing doing; we are not interested in a program which involves so many regulations." I think that is something that we must consider carefully. What alternative does the Government of Canada have for students?

● (1430)

Last evening Senator Forsey questioned the fact that it is the Treasury Board which will prescribe and develop regulations. And it is rather interesting, honourable senators, that the bill specifies that this shall be done by Treasury Board. Often in the past I have objected to the fact that the Governor in Council was given the authority to prescribe regulations, but here this power is given to the Treasury Board.

Honourable senators, if this program is going to be developed and put into effect by March 1, then somebody will have to light a fire under the Treasury Board in order to get them going by that date. Senator Croll, they won't get around to it before October 1, and the election will be in June, so you had better get them moving!

One then has to question how the regulations are going to be developed. Regulations made by the Governor in Council will, if we are lucky, be published in the Canada Gazette, but what happens in the case of regulations made by the Treasury Board? Where does a manufacturing firm in, say, Windsor or Truro go to find out about these Treasury Board regulations? It is all very well to say that the government is going to spend $1½ million advertising these programs but, honourable senators, where are they going to advertise them? What are they going to get in return for that $1½ million? You only have to talk to some honourable senators to realize that they do not have too much trust in this. For myself I think it is dangerous for us to approve a bill that provides that the regulations will be published by such-and-such a firm because you can be sure that that firm will not be owned by a known Conservative, but by a known supporter of the government.

It is odd that I should distrust a supporter of the government, isn't it? I have mentioned that I dislike the idea that the Treasury Board should make the regulations, but I dislike even more the idea that three departments of government are to be involved—Treasury Board, Finance and "The Ministry of Unemployment." We are heading for a bureaucratic mess.

Honourable senators, last evening Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) mentioned the regional tax credit disparity. Today I find myself questioning his figures. I do not question them, Senator Connolly, as someone questioning your legal ability, but I would never hire you as a tax accountant, because obviously you forgot certain items.

Let us consider, for instance, a firm that has a taxable income of $100,000, and which then hires a number of employees for $20,000. I do not think you would suggest that that is an unreasonable figure to use. That would then raise the taxable income to $120,000. Am I wrong in my interpretation up to now, Senator Connolly?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): You are doing all right.

Senator Phillips: I am doing all right? Okay. Then federal taxation comes in. That firm, which may have been taxed at the rate of 25 per cent before the $20,000 was added, ends paying a tax of 33½ per cent, or one-third, of the $120,000, which is $40,000. However, without your incentive grant, senator, you end up paying a tax of 25 per cent, or $25,000. Therefore, your figures are not exactly correct. How is that for diplomacy? Instead of saying the honourable senator is wrong, I say that his figures are not exactly correct. The honourable senator has not included in his calculations the provincial tax, which will average between 10 and 12 per cent of the taxable amount. Here again, it applies to the whole of the taxable amount, and Senator Connolly, being a lawyer, should recognize that.

[Senator Phillips.]

• (1440)

Yesterday evening the sponsor of the bill attempted to give us a description of who will be eligible for employment and who will be regarded as an eligible employer. He referred also to several regulations. I should like to ask several questions of the honourable senator in that regard, and I am sure he will be able to provide the answers.

One aspect that concerns me is the fact that the three-month period for eligibility in the employment tax credit program will eliminate a number of small industries. Here I refer to agricultural and fisheries-related industries. Unfortunately Senator Bonnell is not in the chamber, but I will say that his lobster factory produces an excellent pack of canned lobster. The packing season covers a period of only two months, and therefore that packing plant will be eliminated. Let us consider a plant processing and canning agricultural products such as peas, broccoli, and so on. There is a limit to the number of months in which that produce can be packed. The bill eliminates from its provisions two basic industries which have helped to establish and which still maintain the economy of this country, and to that I object most strongly.

May I say, in lighter vein because in mentioning these things I am aware of the serious look on Senator Connolly's face, that neither Senator Connolly nor I are able to hire a butler. When we return home we shall have to hang up our own coats. I do not object to that, but I do object to the fact that part-time employees are to be excluded under the provisions of this bill. Large stores and supermarkets often employ people on a part-time basis. Those in Senator Connolly's profession might well consider whether it would be worthwhile to employ one or two persons on a part-time basis. Among the one and a quarter million Canadians who are at present looking for work, there are many thousands who are seeking part-time employment. No consideration appears to have been given to those people.

Let us consider those who are able to work part time under the Canada Assistance Program. A mother with four or five children, who receives no other support, might only be able to work part time to support her family. By the terms of this bill we are eliminating that person, and saying, "That's it."

It is regrettable that the eight-week eligibility period for drawing unemployment insurance benefits will exclude or eliminate students. That is a major item. We should remember that the federal government blatantly took over this program from the Province of Ontario, which was attempting to provide student employment. This bill is directed toward small businesses in Ontario, and, as I indicated earlier, I do not think that such businesses were really excited about the Ontario program. Their attitude was, "We are dealing with government regulations; we are dealing with something that we do not know; and we do not want to get into something that might cause problems. We do not care if students are unemployed. Let them be unemployed." The Government of Canada, not fully recognizing or understanding the program, has now reintroduced it. I simply point out that eight weeks without assistance is a long time for students to wait.

● (1450)

Honourable senators, I have taken up more time than I intended, so I will condense the rest of what I want to say.

Let me mention the problem of young people. I know that Senator Connolly has taken a special interest in university students, and I would point out to him particularly—he is my only hope; there is no use pointing it out to the rest of the Grits—that students are not included in this program, and ask him to explain how that can be fair. To be eligible, a prospective employee must be unemployed for eight weeks, according to Senator Connolly's explanation of last night, but by the time the students register at Manpower—and let us face the facts: students get damn short shrift at Manpower—and have put in their eight weeks, what have they got left? They have a month. Senator Connolly then went on to say that the job must last at least three months for the employer to receive the benefit of the tax deduction, and that the benefit continues for a period of nine months in a taxation year.

I just do not find it reasonable, Senator Connolly, that you should sponsor a resolution excluding students. Perhaps you have forgotten students, but I have not. I still have students in my family, and I know that when you attempt to get a student a summer job under the Liberal government you find it rather difficult. I hope you will explain these things to me in such a way that I can face students when I tell them they are not included among the unemployed.

I was particularly intrigued by Senator Connolly's reference last evening to the proposal that Canada Manpower—or Canada Unemployment, or whatever you wish to call it; I am not sure of the terminology, but I prefer Canada Unemployment—would present a certificate to the unemployed. Can you imagine anyone who has been unemployed for three months, honourable senators, going to Manpower, looking for a job, and getting this certificate? Can you imagine the children of such an unemployed individual taking such a certificate to school the next day and, in the sort of “show and tell” program that they have in kindergarten and grade school, saying, “Teacher, here is the certificate my father received from the government. He's been out of work for three months and has got this certificate that says he's been out of work for three months, and is now entitled to apply for a job”? We can imagine the answer of those children to a possible question from the teacher—“No, teacher, he didn't get a job, but both Mr. Cullen and Mr. Chrétien signed that certificate. It must be worth something.” Will someone tell me what that certificate is worth? I do not think it is worth a damn.

The only way we can increase employment and bring about growth in the private sector is by reducing taxation. This bill does nothing to stimulate the economy. I can name company after company—and I am thinking of companies like Inco and Massey-Ferguson—but none of them will be hiring employees because of this bill. I would love to hear of one company that will take on more employees because of this measure.

Honourable senators, I am going to close on a grave note. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance were marooned on an island. Apparently it is the function of the Minister of Finance, when he is marooned on an island with the Prime Minister, to do the beachcombing. Mr. Chrétien went down to beachcomb one day, and he found that a lifeboat had drifted ashore. He ran up, just as the Honourable Senator Perrault would, to inform the Prime Minister that he had found a lifeboat. The Prime Minister sauntered down to the beach, looked at the boat, put on his best philosophical air, rubbed his chin, and then said, “Well, good, Mr. Chrétien. Now you can break it up and make a life raft.” This bill does not even attempt to make a life raft. Rather, the government has thrown out debris and said, “Hang on to that.” The million and a quarter Canadians who are looking for work deserve better than the debris that has been thrown to them.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I really had no intention of taking part in this debate, but I realize, as we all do, that the whole question of unemployment is one of the issues that is paramount in society today. It is for that reason that I felt I should say a few words.

We have been saying for a long time that we face two major problems—inflation and unemployment—and, of course, it has been generally accepted that inflation is the greater, the more serious, and perhaps the more universal, of the two. Probably this is true, but in human terms there is no doubt that to the hundreds of thousands of unemployed in this country the most serious and most important problem, and the one we should be trying to solve, is unemployment.

I have quite a few reservations about this bill. I do not think it is a good bill. In principle it is all right, because it is trying to put the load towards—I do not say “on”, but “towards”—the private sector. Any realist knows that the only place where useful jobs are created is the private sector.

● (1500)

When there has been high unemployment it has been usual for governments to spend money to create jobs. As we know, that is absolutely useless. It is of very temporary benefit; in fact, benefit may not even result.

In addition to that, we are always counting on government too much. Whenever we have a problem that we cannot solve we think the government should solve it. The truth of the matter is that the government is not omnipotent. It cannot solve all our problems. The government should create an atmosphere in which our problems can be solved, but unless the rest of us willingly play a part, those problems will not be solved. The government, by itself, cannot correct this unemployment situation. It requires the cooperation of all the employers and employees in the land.

I sometimes think that Parliament is deficient in one respect, because when I consider the members of both houses of Parliament, even with the greatest respect and admiration I have for them, I am forced to conclude that there are few employees and few employers among them. Thus, when we come to deal with matters such as employment, our debates and speeches are pretty hypothetical and not as practical as they might be.

Governments, in their actions in recent years, have been guilty of causing the increase in unemployment. I know that most of those actions can be defended but raising the minimum wage, for example, to an amount beyond that in effect in any state in the country to the south is not likely to reduce unemployment. Permitting wages in the public sector to rise to their present high level is no way to help relieve unemployment. Canada's unequalled strike record is certainly not conducive to a reduction in unemployment. These factors I have mentioned actually create unemployment, and the government is involved in all of them.

Every day in Canada, we hear that we have high costs. We have difficulty selling in world markets which means we also have difficulty protecting our own markets, and that leads to unemployment. There is just no other answer.

In the meantime, I am not personally convinced that unemployment insurance has been handled as well as it should have been. We hear daily of abuses referred to as rip-offs, and of the efforts being made to retrieve some of the money that has been taken—stolen, if you like—from the people of Canada.

Just the other day I heard of an incident parallel to what used to happen some time ago, and which I thought had been eliminated. This involved a person, reaching retirement age and a healthy pension, who was asked if he had applied for unemployment insurance. He replied, "Good, heavens, no, because I am going on my pension," and was then told he should speak to somebody. The pensioner then inquired of an officer in the department whether he was eligible for unemployment insurance. He was asked, "How is your health?" to which he replied, "My health is pretty good." The government servant then said, "Well, if you can get a doctor's certificate certifying that you are not in good health you will be able to draw unemployment insurance."

I do not know whether that is true, but I do know that for some years people going on substantial pensions were drawing unemployment insurance benefits upon their retirement, and this continued for the first twelve months. This is absolutely ridiculous; it is a rip-off of public funds. There are similar abuses today. We hear of them almost every week. The attitude seems to be that public money does not cost anybody anything.

I am a little worried about this bill because I do not think it will reach enough unemployed people, and I have considerable difficulty in believing that the amount of the credit given the employer is substantial enough to make really great inroads in the number of unemployed. I question even the rate of $2 per hour in the maritimes, which is the highest rate. I do not think many employers, with the best will in the world, will create new jobs on this basis.

At the same time, I must admit that it is difficult to devise schemes to relieve unemployment in the short term and, quite honestly, I have no bright suggestion to offer. In the circumstances, then, this is probably as good a device as could be suggested, but we should realize that it is no panacea. It may do some good, but I am not sure how much. However, as I said, I have no better suggestion to offer.

[Senator Molson.]

When the bill is before the committee we may be enlightened as to how it might work, and perhaps find it is better than we thought. In the circumstances, I shall support the bill.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I shall not delay the Senate for more than a few minutes, but I would be remiss if I did not say that we are grateful to Senator Molson for the way he spoke about the problem of unemployment as it exists in this country. As well, we regret the attitude that prevails, unfortunately, in certain places where there is a tendency to feel that what is public property is "my property" and where rip-offs and other practices cost the Canadian taxpayer a great deal of money.

I regret that there was no reporter in the press gallery to hear what Senator Molson had to say, because his are the kind of comments it is valuable to have from the second chamber in our parliamentary system.

● (1510)

Some of the points raised by Senator Phillips merit some comment from me. I know that one of the difficulties about understanding this bill arises from the fact that the tax credit is both taxable and a reduction of tax. I should like to put on the record part of section 12 of the Income Tax Act, which is amended by clause 1 of this bill. Subsection (1) of section 12 of the Income Tax Act reads:

There shall be included in computing the income of a taxpayer for a taxation year as income from a business or property such of the following amounts as are applicable.

Clause 1 of this bill adds a paragraph (q), as follows:

any amount deducted under subsection 127(13) in computing tax otherwise payable by the taxpayer under this Part for the year.

In other words, the amount of the credit, as it is worked out by multiplying the number of hours by the appropriate $2, $1.75 or $1.80 rate, is to be added to the income of the taxpayer, and the authority is in clause 1. It is deemed to be income. Whether it is income or not, the law deems it to be income.

Clause 5(2) of the bill provides for the application of the credit in this way:

Section 127 of the said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(13) There may be deducted from the tax otherwise payable by a taxpayer under this Part for a taxation year an amount not exceeding his employment tax credit at the end of the year . . ."

I put that on the record, honourable senators, simply to supply the authority, which perhaps I should have supplied last night, for the fact that the amount of the tax credit becomes part of income first of all, and finally, when the tax otherwise payable is determined, the amount of the tax credit can be deducted from that computed tax.

Senator Phillips: I am sorry for interrupting the honourable senator, but I should like to ask him if the amount of taxable income he referred to last evening, the amount received at $2 per hour and so on, is not subject to provincial tax. In other words, is the $2,400 that he elaborated on last night not subject to provincial income tax?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): It depends upon what the provincial tax act says. This is a federal program, and what we do here is pass federal legislation. This bill does not affect provincial tax legislation. What we are providing for here is an inclusion in income, for federal purposes, of the amount of the tax credit, and we are providing also that the tax credit may be deducted from the federal tax payable.

Senator Phillips: Will not those provinces that have signed an agreement with the federal government under the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act be able to tax this amount?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I am afraid I cannot answer that question. Perhaps the honourable senator will be able to get an answer in committee from the officials. I think the broad principle I have just stated is the one that should concern us here.

Senator Phillips also asked for clarification of two or three other points. He said that the three-month minimum period for these new jobs created under the program would in fact eliminate elements of the agricultural and fish industries because of the short seasons during which they operate.

Senator Phillips: May I interrupt again? It is two months rather than three.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): I know what you said. I am saying that the program calls for a minimum of three months, and you are complaining about that. What you say is that some of these agricultural and fish industries run for shorter periods, and therefore they will be eliminated from the benefits of this program. That is not so, and for this reason. The three months do not have to run consecutively. For example, if a fish processing plant runs with a certain catch for a certain length of time and then later with another catch for another length of time, and all those periods form part of the taxation year or fiscal year of the company, as the case may be, then they can all be added up and the company will get the credit.

Perhaps the only other thing I need say is that Senator Phillips gave us a fairly lengthy dissertation on economic policy and the wisdom or virtue of having general tax reductions. With respect to the Ontario Government, he cited programs to assist students to find work. Perhaps he should know, as I am informed, that on the question of whether or not general tax reductions are required in the next federal budget this is not a proposal that carries the judgment of the Treasurer of Ontario, who felt that this was not a warranted procedure for the federal government to follow.

Senator Phillips has complained that this program will not help people who work as temporary employees or students. I think that is quite true, unless they can otherwise qualify. I recognize the limitations that Senator Molson has pointed out, but one does not put every kind of program into one bill. This bill is an attempt to have industry create new jobs, innovative jobs on, it is hoped, a permanent basis. Industries are given two years to do it, and they are given an incentive that will last for nine months in any one of those years, which might even be increased to twelve months under the provisions of the bill.

I do not think anybody would claim for this bill that it is a cure-all for the unemployment problems we have in this country. I do think it is another step, as Senator Molson has indicated, in trying to reach a position where we can assist the hundreds of thousands of unemployed people in Canada.

Senator Phillips: Before Senator Connolly resumes his seat, I should like to ask him a question predicated on his remark that I felt the bill was deficient in dealing with the basic industries, such as those in fisheries and agriculture. As I understood Senator Connolly's remarks, these credits can be carried over. In view of the fact that the lobster packing season is eight weeks by federal law, and the broccoli packing season is six weeks by federal law, is the honourable senator telling us that these periods can be carried over into the next year?

● (1520)

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): No, I do not think that is correct. My understanding is that a fish packing plant will not operate for only four or six weeks during a year. I assume that such a plant will operate for many months in a year, as would a vegetable packing plant, if those are the examples we are to take. If there are jobs created under this program by such plants that run for a month or two months, followed by a lay-off of perhaps a month with a continuation thereafter, then the credit will be available to them. In other words, the employment does not have to be continuous for that three-month minimum period.

Senator Phillips: I thank the honourable senator for his explanation that it does not have to be continuous. I really appreciate that sentence.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

THE HONOURABLE GEORGE PORTEOUS, LIEUTENANT
GOVERNOR OF SASKATCHEWAN, AND MRS. PORTEOUS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, on your behalf
I should like to extend a warm welcome to the Honourable

George Porteous, M.B.E., C.M., Lieutenant Governor of Saskatchewan, and Mrs. Porteous, who are honouring us with their presence.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

---

THE SENATE

Thursday, February 2, 1978

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of document entitled "Proposals to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms, errors and other matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, and other Acts subsequent to 1970," issued by the Department of Justice.

Report of the Canada Labour Relations Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 210(2) of the Canada Labour Code, Chapter 18, Statutes of Canada 1972.

Report of Canadian Commercial Corporation, including its accounts and financial statements certified by the Auditor General, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 13(1) of the Canadian Commercial Corporation Act, Chapter C-6, and sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT PROPOSALS

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I am informed that the Honourable the Minister of Justice has tabled in the other place a draft miscellaneous statute law amendment bill, the second in the series of such bills since the inauguration of the miscellaneous statute law amendment program in 1975. It will be recalled that the first such bill became law in June, 1977.

I am advised that it is now the intention to move its reference to the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee of the other place. Later today, as a change in procedure with respect to the first miscellaneous statute law amendment bill, I shall move that the document containing the statute law amendment proposals, which I have just tabled, be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. This change in procedure will enable honourable senators, through this committee, to consider the draft bill and approve it with any changes, if necessary, before it is printed and introduced in the usual way as legislation.

Honourable senators, I thought it might also be useful to remind you of the periodic nature of this program and of the probability of similar bills reaching this house at regular yearly intervals. These bills are designed to omit all controversial material. They do not contain any amendment entailing additional expenditure of public funds nor do they contain amendments to the Criminal Code, the latter being the subject of separate approaches to Parliament from time to time.

Senator Flynn: What the honourable leader is saying is that the errors contemplated here are only technical errors, not substantive errors.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the government is earnest in its desire to bring all of its legislation to an even higher state of perfection.

Senator Flynn: There is room for it.

INCOME TAX ACT

BILL TO AMEND AND TO ESTABLISH THE EMPLOYMENT TAX CREDIT PROGRAM—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Senator Barrow, for Senator Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, to which was referred Bill C-23, to amend the Income Tax Act and to establish the Employment Tax Credit Program, presented the following report:

Thursday, February 2, 1978

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to which was referred Bill C-23, intitled: "An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and to establish the Employment Tax Credit Program," has, in obedience to the order of reference of Wednesday, February 1, 1978, examined the said bill and now reports the same without amendment, but with the following observations:

These observations relate to the principle that your committee has always insisted upon, which is that legislation by regulation is to be avoided. Your committee wishes to point out that it is not abandoning that position; but in view of the temporary and experimental nature of the legislation, which is to be effective only for two years, and the fact that it is dealing with an emergency, your committee does not insist that the definitions to be made by regulation under subclause 7(6) of the bill be incorporated in the act.

It is the view of your committee that the minister should make a report to Parliament from time to time, indicating quite apart from the fiscal aspects, the effectiveness of the operation of the act in providing employment.

Respectfully submitted

Salter A. Hayden,
Chairman

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, as the sponsor of this bill, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I am terribly sorry to disappoint Senator Denis who had suggested to me that I hold my tongue. It is not the first time he has done so. But he will not succeed.

Senator Denis: You know what to do.

Senator Flynn: In any event, honourable senators, study of the bill in committee clearly revealed a lot of weaknesses and also gave rise to a lot of questions. But we at least did clarify how the tax credits or deductions will be granted. As we know, the bill is intended to encourage the creation of new jobs in Canada. What is provided for, at this time, is a reduction, or rather a tax credit, because the reduction will result in lower taxes, based on every job that qualifies, with a maximum of roughly $3,000 per job in areas where unemployment is high and where the worker is paid $2 an hour; and a credit of up to about $1,500 in areas where unemployment is less severe.

In practice—and this I want on the record—in the case of the maximum, $2, the credit or tax reduction will amount to a $1,800 maximum, where the tax rate of the employer concerned is 40 per cent. The minimum tax credit will be $1,200 in the case of the employer who pays at a rate of 60 per cent.

In areas where a credit of only $1 an hour is granted, based on 1,500 hours a year, the maximum tax reduction will be $900 and the minimum $600.

Obviously this job creating formula deserves to be put to the test. But the big question mark remains that no one knows as yet who will be an eligible employer, who will be an eligible worker, or what will be an eligible employment. We have only general information about this. We know, for instance, that an eligible worker will be someone who has been unemployed for eight weeks. In other words, if you create an eligible employment and cannot find an eligible worker, you would not be able to hire someone who is already employed and who is competent for the job, for he would not qualify. This is therefore a very limited program.

We have been told that under a similar policy implemented by the United States, all new jobs are considered as eligible, whether the employer is a corporation or a citizen. But the Canadian government does not want to go that far. It prefers of course to limit the scope of this plan. The fact remains, however, that clause 7(6) of this bill is giving a free hand to the government which can, as it pleases, decide who is an eligible employer, who is an eligible worker and what is an eligible employment. It could even arbitrarily decide to change that every day as long as the program lasts.

Therefore we do not know where we are going. We are giving the government the powers to make this experiment.

In its report, the committee points out that this is an experimental program. Of course, the government wants to see exactly what effects it will have, and will be able to change its direction at any moment during the period of application of this legislation, which is only provisional since it will be in force for only two years, except that all eligible applications sent before March 31, 1980, will be in effect during the next fiscal year. Otherwise it will be two years.

In such circumstances, it is obviously difficult to be absolutely opposed to the request of the government which is asking us for the power to decide the essential aspects of this program by way of regulations. But, as the committee points out, the principle is still there.

● (1410)

In short, the government is asking us to be allowed to experiment. If this were permanent legislation I am sure that the committee or the Senate would have refused and asked for a definition of eligible employer, eligible employment or eligible worker. It is obvious that the Senate or the committee would have refused to support such legislation.

Moreover, the government also says that it is emergency legislation. Of course it is emergency legislation, especially since the government has remained idle for two years. The longer it waits, the more urgent the matter will be. Its urgency is obvious to everyone, perhaps less to government supporters on the other side, but the urgency is obvious in light of the unduly high rate of unemployment in recent years.

The government is seeking solutions. It is fumbling. It is groping in the dark. We are giving it a chance to finally see the light. I do not recall which one of our colleagues said this, but I believe it was the mover of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne; he said he could see the light at the end of the tunnel. I am not sure whether this small flashlight that the government is requesting from us, to try to find the light, is reflecting against a wall of the tunnel or against the opening at the other end.

In any event, we cannot refuse under the circumstances; the government is there—it is there until the next election, but not after, I hope—but since it is there, we are giving it a chance to find a solution, however partial. Actually, even the most optimistic are saying that under this program only 50,000 jobs will be created. As Senator Phillips was explaining last night, the projected increase in the available manpower is 50,000. At best this legislation will only maintain the current level of unemployment.

In any event, we certainly will not refuse this government, however inept it may be, the chance to try and do something. That is all it has to propose. So we say: take your chances but at least, as the committee says, report to us since we are giving you a blank cheque—report to us from time to time to tell us whether or not you are achieving anything.

So we wish it good luck, because by doing so we are also wishing all of Canada good luck.

● (1420)

[English]

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I want to register my strong dissent from the leaving in this bill of the definitions of these crucial matters to regulation. I think it is a bad principle, whether in temporary legislation or permanent legislation, and I am afraid that if it creeps in in temporary legislation, we shall find it becoming a precedent, and we shall be asked to consent to the same thing in permanent legislation, possibly with some other excuse of urgency or something of the sort. I take the strongest possible objection—and I want to record it in the Debates of the house—to the leaving of this in the bill. I think it is a most unfortunate precedent.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

[Translation]

NATIONAL UNITY

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I give notice that next Tuesday, February 7, 1978, I will call the attention of the Senate to a most vicious article by June Callwood in the January issue of Actualité.

Senator Walker: Is it in French?

Senator Forsey: The article is in French. That is why I am giving notice in French. When I speak on this matter, I will do so partly in French, or so-called French, since I am only a poor unilingual anglophone, according to the learned Conservative candidate in the riding of Shefford, but I will also be giving part of my speech in English to meet the needs, perhaps, of Senator Walker.

[English]

Senator Langlois: And because the article was written by an anglophone.

[Translation]

Senator Walker: I am delighted to hear my friend speak in genuine French. He is a man of distinction. Thank you.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

[English]

STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT PROPOSALS

DOCUMENT REFERRED TO STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Senator Perrault, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the document entitled "Proposals to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms, errors and other matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, and other Acts subsequent to 1970," tabled in the Senate this day, be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, February 7, 1978, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Honourable senators, before the question is put I should like to give the usual brief resume of what we can expect in the Senate and its committees next week. I shall deal with the committees first.

On Tuesday the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments will meet at 9.30 a.m. to study the Green Paper on Public Access to Government Documents, and at 4.00 p.m. the Subcommittee on Childhood Experiences will meet.

On Wednesday the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will meet at 9.30 a.m. to hear witnesses on Bill S-3, respecting Canadian non-profit corporations, and the Committee on Transport and Communications will meet at 3.30 p.m., or when the Senate rises, to consider Bill S-4, to implement the International Convention for Safe Containers.

On Thursday the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will meet at 9.30 a.m. to consider Bill S-2, to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act, and at 10.00 a.m. there will be another meeting of the Subcommittee on Childhood Experiences. The Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments is scheduled to meet at 11.00 a.m.

In the Senate we shall continue with Bill S-8, and proceed with Bills S-5, S-6 and S-7, which deal with exceptions to the public general law relating to marriage in the cases of certain individuals. In addition, it is expected that Bill C-16, to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act, and Bill C-2, respecting the development of certain fishing and recreational harbours in Canada, will reach us by the beginning of next week.

Motion agreed to.

FUGITIVE OFFENDERS BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. George J. McIlraith moved the second reading of Bill S-8, respecting fugitive offenders in Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, the Fugitive Offenders Act is an act under which authority Canada returns to their own country certain offenders who have escaped to this country from those Commonwealth countries which recognize the Queen as Head of State. The Extradition Act covers similar arrangements with all non-Commonwealth countries, and also allows Canada to seek the return of all escaped Canadian offenders.

Bill S-8, which is now before us, repeals the existing Fugitive Offenders Act and substitutes a new act in its place. In addition, it brings forward amendments to the Extradition Act. The amendments to the Extradition Act are mainly of a nature to bring it in line with the new Fugitive Offenders Act.

The Fugitive Offenders Act was first introduced in 1882 and has remained substantially unchanged for the past 96 years. During those years there have been tremendous changes in the grouping of countries now included in the Commonwealth. As well, there have been tremendous changes in the modes of travel and communication. Indeed, there have been many changes in the nature of crimes being committed. Crimes have become increasingly international in scope. Examples of this would be trafficking in narcotics, air piracy, income tax evasion, all of which are offences that were unknown at the time of the original legislation.

● (1430)

Senator Flynn: There was no income tax then, nor airplanes.

Senator McIlraith: There was no income tax at the time, but those Utopian days have long since gone.

It is quite obvious—and I think all honourable senators will agree—that to meet these new conditions it is necessary that we be equipped with modern laws. Many of the changes contained in Bill S-8 are based upon an agreement reached between Commonwealth law ministers in 1966. These changes are set out in a paper entitled: "Scheme Relating to the Rendition of Fugitive Offenders within the Commonwealth." That paper is the basis of most of the provisions contained in the bill before us.

The agreement also recognizes the changes in the constitutions of the different parts of the Commonwealth, and their different nature and structure. There is legislation based on this paper in 49 of the independent Commonwealth countries, dependencies, protectorates and associated states, and we have built on this scheme, incorporating the most recent changes in extradition policy.

Bill S-8 has three main objectives. It seeks to make the law more applicable to modern criminal activities and to make its administration more effective; it seeks to protect the civil liberties of refugees from political, racial and religious oppression; and it seeks to expand the number of countries with which Canada may deal under the Fugitive Offenders Act to include all Commonwealth countries rather than only those countries which recognize the Queen as the Head of State, as is the present state of the law.

At present, an offender is liable to be surrendered by Canada to any country where the Fugitive Offenders Act applies for any offence punishable under the laws of that country by—and this is the curious part—a sentence of at least 12 months' imprisonment combined with hard labour. Most of the countries of the Commonwealth have eliminated the "hard labour" aspect of their penal provisions.

It will be seen rather readily how this bill seeks to correct some of the defects in the original legislation.

The present act is applicable regardless of whether the offence charged is one that is recognized as an offence under the criminal law of Canada. There are, of course, many acts which are considered criminal offences in other countries but which are not so considered here. Instead of the criteria set out in the present act, Bill S-8, if passed, will establish a schedule setting out those offences that are deemed to be returnable offences. The schedule is created on the principle of the rule of double criminality, by which I simply mean that the crime for which a return is sought must be recognized as a crime both in the country seeking the return and in Canada. That is quite different from the existing legislation. The schedule is, of course, the same in both the Extradition Act and the Fugitive Offenders Act.

The new schedule includes a series of offences. I will not set them all out, but they include homicide, kidnapping, air piracy, rape, income tax evasion, counterfeiting, wilful non-support or abandonment of a child so that its health or life are endangered, and some others.

The bill provides that all 36 independent Commonwealth countries and the 33 associated states, dependencies, protectorates, and so on, will in future be covered under the new Fugitive Offenders Act instead of the limited number covered under the statute now in force.

The proposed legislation also offers certain safeguards for the civil liberties of individuals. Under the present Fugitive Offenders Act a fugitive may not resist surrender to a Commonwealth country for an offence that is purely political. If it is an offence in that country he must be returned notwithstanding that the offence may have been political in nature.

Senator Flynn: Is there any definition in it of a political offence?

Senator McIlraith: I cannot answer adequately as to what constitutes the full meaning of "a political offence". In any event, I was not referring to what we call an ordinary criminal offence which the accused merely claims is a political offence done in the name of a political act. I am referring to something that is more indicative of the purely political views the offender holds and is punishable in the requesting state, and that sort of thing. Regrettably, there are parts of the world where it is held to be a criminal offence to hold different views from those of the current authority in the country. Nevertheless, it does not extend to the commission of offences like treason, which are political in nature and definition.

Senator Flynn: I would hope not.

Senator McIlraith: I quite appreciate Senator Flynn's question, because it is a rather important and interesting matter. I hope full information will be sought on it in committee. It is quite an important point when you get down to the nitty-gritty of the operation of the act.

If there is political upheaval in a country, the new régime, whatever form the authority may take, could conceivably charge people who are in the service of the foreign government with what really amounts to nothing more than being in the service of the foreign government under a former régime rather than committing some crime. Regrettably, it is a very real problem these days; it is not something that is of merely academic interest.

There is another unfortunate development in more modern times, and that is the possibility of a person being charged with a returnable offence when it is quite clear that if he is returned he will be discriminated against in the sense of being tried for an offence and liable to punishment, and so on, quite beyond any concept of law in the accepted sense as we know it. There is provision of a safeguarding nature against that sort of abuse.

When the bill is examined in detail it will be noted that, in keeping with modern extradition practice, we would not refuse to surrender a fugitive when the political offence is against internationally protected persons, such as heads of state or diplomats, and involves murder, kidnapping and assault.

● (1440)

The new Fugitive Offenders Act and the amended Extradition Act also permit the possibility of refusal to surrender on the grounds of risk of prejudice to the person during his trial or conviction by reason of race, religion, nationality or political opinions. An amendment has been included to give the Minister of Justice discretionary power to refuse to surrender a fugitive if there is the likelihood that on conviction the death penalty will be imposed for a crime which in Canada is not punishable by death. The amendment covers those cases in countries where offences, which we regard as much less serious or at times not serious at all, carry the death penalty. In dealing with several hundred countries, the situation could arise where in some countries the death penalty would appear to be very much out of line with the offence.

In some parts of the Commonwealth, such as Bermuda, the death penalty still applies, whereas in Canada murder is no longer a capital offence. That notwithstanding, the minister has the discretion to refuse to surrender a person who has committed a murder in, say, Bermuda where the sentence of death is applicable and possible.

Questions may be raised in connection with the wording of that clause, because it derives its draftsmanship from a time when the death penalty was applicable in Canada for the crime of murder. The amendment has its origins in a time when it was necessary to return persons charged with murder to a country where the nature of the crime carried the death penalty. However, since that time, there has been a change in the situation in Canada.

It is conceivable that honourable senators may wish to examine more carefully the draftsmanship of that clause in order that Canada does not become a haven for those persons from other countries who commit murder in their own country, fully aware that the crime is punishable by death, and cross the border into Canada, or otherwise enter the country, knowing that they will not be returned to face the charge, and may thereby escape punishment. This may well be a rather technical or nice point of law for examination in committee, and no doubt a better explanation can be given there than I can provide.

Senator Hicks: Before leaving that clause, would my honourable friend permit a question? Does the legislation provide for any action on the part of agencies of the Government of Canada in the event that the minister refuses extradition or return of the fugitive to his country? Does the murderer who might suffer capital punishment in Bermuda, to take the honourable senator's own example, get off scot-free if he is not returned to Bermuda?

Senator McIlraith: Conceivably he could, yes.

Senator Hicks: Is there no provision for the punishment of such a person in Canada?

Senator McIlraith: No. That is the point. The origin of the clause arose from the special circumstances which I have described. There is a nice point of law there which might be examined in committee. I draw it to the attention of honourable senators as being worthy of examination. I should point out that it is merely a discretionary right of the minister to refuse extradition.

The bill provides also that a person returned to Canada from a Commonwealth country may only be tried in Canada for the offence for which he is returned, or for some lesser offence. If he is returned to Canada for a particular offence, he cannot, on being returned, be tried for an entirely different offence.

Senator Flynn: Committed here or elsewhere?

Senator McIlraith: Committed here. I am referring to a person returned to Canada under the extradition treaties or provisions of the fugitive offenders legislation.

Senator Flynn: Would he have to be brought back for a second offence?

Senator McIlraith: No. There is provision whereby, if there is a related or lesser offence, Canada could seek the consent of the state which returned the fugitive to try him for the related or lesser offence. The matter cannot be proceeded with before the steps mentioned in the various clauses are taken.

There is another problem. Where two or more countries request extradition of the same offender for an offence committed in each of the countries, there is discretion for the authorities in Canada to base their decision as to which country the person should be returned on the seriousness of the offences committed in the respective countries, and the date of the request. The provision is a safeguard against a situation where two or more countries make a request at approximately the same time for the return of a person who has escaped to Canada.

There are also provisions in the bill concerning bail for fugitive offenders. There is no provision for bail included in the present Fugitive Offenders Act or the Extradition Act. This has resulted in some quite serious inconsistencies in the administration of the law. To clarify the matter, and in keeping with modern extradition practices, there is an amendment to the effect that bail will be available when the proper conditions are met.

In ordinary criminal proceedings in Canada the prosecutor must show why a charged person should not be released on bail pending trial. A provision in the bill places the onus on the fugitive offender to show why he should be granted bail, and in making its decision the court must consider, among other things, the length of time that the offender has resided in Canada and other relevant criteria. It is interesting to note that the onus is on the person who is returned by the other country to show why he should be granted bail. There is also provision that the evidence required in a hearing under this legislation will be similar to that required for a preliminary hearing in a criminal case brought under the Criminal Code.

Proceedings under the present legislation take place before a magistrate, who conducts the hearing and performs all the judicial functions. He performs all the judicial functions, conducts the hearing, and so on. That is changed by this bill. Under this new legislation it is proposed that the proceedings take place before a county court judge or a superior court judge. That I think more accurately meets the present needs.

● (1450)

Another amendment deals with appeals in connection with extradition proceedings. Under the present law a person has the right to seek from the Federal Court of Canada a review of a judge's decision regarding extradition. The new legislation places this right with the superior courts and appeal courts of the provinces in which the extradition proceedings occur. In other words, it would transfer the right from the Federal Court to the other courts. It is felt that this is more appropriate because it places the responsibility for handling this aspect of the administration of the criminal law on the provincial courts.

Honourable senators, the bill is quite straightforward. It is a case of an existing act being long out-dated and not receiving legislative amending attention when it should have. This bill brings the law on the subject up to date in a way which I think will commend itself to the Senate as being reasonable within the concept of the modern approach to these matters. Therefore, I commend the bill to honourable senators, and look forward to its detailed examination in committee.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, may I be permitted a question? I see that the bill is divided into two parts. The first part relates to the Fugitive Offenders Act and refers only to the problem with regard to the Commonwealth. It applies only to the Commonwealth countries, does it not?

Senator McIlraith: Yes, that is correct. It applies to all of the Commonwealth.

Senator Flynn: The second part relates to the Extradition Act, which is applicable to countries, other than Commonwealth countries, with which we have extradition treaties?

Senator McIlraith: Yes, and under which we have certain rights also on the subject in respect of countries with which we do not have treaties.

[Senator McIlraith.]

Senator Flynn: Are similar provisions in force, or are they contemplated, in those other countries, either in or outside the Commonwealth? In other words, do those countries have legislation corresponding to that which is proposed here, or will they have such legislation?

Senator McIlraith: That question is too wide for me to answer fully, but I assume the treaty countries have corresponding provisions. There are also other countries with which there are no treaty arrangements, but certain provisions in the Extradition Act apply to cases in those countries, despite the fact that they may not have exactly corresponding legislation as would be the case with the treaty or agreement countries. There are so many independent countries with so many different forms of applicable law that it is not apt for me to attempt to give a general answer.

Senator Flynn: Would it be easier for a foreign country to effect the extradition of a person residing here who had committed a crime outside, as compared to our ability to bring in somebody from outside who had committed a crime here?

Senator McIlraith: I cannot answer that precisely because, as you might appreciate, I do not know just what the nature of the law is in various countries in relation to crimes committed there.

Senator Macdonald: Honourable senators, I intend to move the adjournment of the debate, but before doing so I should just like to ask the sponsor of this bill if he will make available to me a copy of the agreement he referred to in the early part of his remarks as having been made in 1966.

Senator McIlraith: Yes, I shall be glad to provide the honourable senator with a copy of that agreement. I am not sure whether there are sufficient copies available for distribution to all senators, but I will see that Senator Macdonald is provided with one almost immediately.

On motion of Senator Macdonald, debate adjourned.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

February 2, 1978

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Bora Laskin, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 2nd day of February, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

AGRICULTURE

"RECOGNIZING THE REALITIES: A BEEF IMPORT POLICY FOR CANADA"—INTERIM REPORT ON CANADIAN BEEF INDUSTRY—
DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Argue, calling the attention of the Senate to the Interim Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture, appointed in the last session of Parliament and authorized in the session to examine from time to time any aspect of the agricultural industry in Canada, on its inquiry into the desirability of long-term stabilization in the Canadian beef industry, entitled: "Recognizing the Realities: A Beef Import Policy for Canada", tabled in the Senate on Friday, 14th October, 1977.—(Honourable Senator Langlois).

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, this Order has been standing in my name for quite some time in the hope that some of my colleagues might be interested in speaking to it. However, a recent survey has shown that it might be a good thing at this stage to consider this inquiry as having been debated.

Senator Flynn: All that needed to be said was said.

Senator Perrault: No more beefs!

Senator Flynn: Yes, enough beefing.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

THE SENATE

NUMBER OF VACANCIES—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey rose pursuant to notice of Tuesday, January 31, 1978:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the large number of vacancies in the Senate.

He said: Honourable senators, I have a rather special reason for raising this question of vacancies in the Senate this afternoon. It relates to the matter that came up the other day, the probability, if we are to accept at face value the statement in the Speech from the Throne, that we shall within the measurably near future, if a dissolution does not supervene before that, be presented with certain proposals for amending the Constitution of Canada and very probably for amending the constitution of the Senate.

● (1500)

The subject of Senate vacancies is an important one at any time. I think it is particularly important now because of the probable imminence of this discussion. It seems to me highly desirable that the Senate should be as nearly at its full strength as possible if these matters are to be discussed here. I assume that any proposed changes in the Constitution will receive very serious discussion in this house, but more particularly any proposed changes in the constitution of the Senate.

As things stand at present, as honourable senators are all aware, we have no less than 14 vacancies. That is a fairly considerable proportion of the membership of this house. The matter is given added seriousness by the fact that some of these vacancies are of very long standing. I have a list of them here, and I have arranged them in what I might call their "order of demerit".

First of all, for example—first and worst—we have a vacancy from Manitoba which dates from—and I could scarcely believe my eyes when I read the date—the first of November, 1969. For more than eight years that seat has remained vacant. This seems to me perfectly shameful; indeed, scandalous.

The other vacancy from Manitoba, like a couple of the other vacancies which exist now, is a relatively recent one. In fact, it is the vacancy created by the recent resignation of our distinguished and much lamented colleague, Senator Haig. But this first one, a vacancy created by the death of the Honourable Olive L. Irvine, has lasted eight years and three months. For the life of me I cannot see why that should be so. I suppose it is conceivable that it would have been found impossible to find anyone in Manitoba worthy of this high honour, though I find that a little difficult to believe. I remember, when the Conservative government came in in 1957, I went in to see the new Prime Minister about something, and his then secretary, Mr. Bedson, said, "Well, Eugene, have you come in to ask for a senatorship?" I replied, "No, I have not," and he said, "Then you're the only man in Canada who hasn't."

I find it very difficult to believe that the situation has changed so much since those days that it has been found impossible by the most diligent search over a period of eight years and three months to find anyone to succeed the late Honourable Senator Irvine. That is the first and the worst case.

Then we have a senatorship for Saskatchewan, a seat vacated by the Honourable Arthur M. Pearson on March 31, 1971. That seat has been vacant for six years and ten months. Again, I can see really no excuse for this whatsoever.

Then we have the third case, involving New Brunswick, where the seat of the late Honourable Donald A. McLean has been vacant for four years and three months.

Then we have a tie for fourth place in this order of demerit between Ontario and Prince Edward Island, or a virtual tie. One Ontario seat, that of the Honourable John B. Aird, has been vacant for three years and two months, and one Prince Edward Island seat, that formerly held by the Honourable Thomas J. Kickham, has also been vacant for three years and two months.

Then we come to No. 5 in this list of demerits. The seat in New Brunswick vacated by our former Speaker, the Honourable Muriel McQueen Fergusson, has been vacant for—this should have come before on my list, because that has been vacant for, I think, two years and eight months.

The sixth, a seat from Ontario, is the one vacated by the Honourable Grattan O'Leary one year and ten months ago. Then comes a seat from Quebec vacated by the Honourable Léon Mercier Gouin, one year and ten months. Alberta has a seat vacated by the Honourable Harper Prowse, one year and four months vacant. Newfoundland has a seat vacated by the Honourable Michael G. Basha, one year and two months. There is a seat from Nova Scotia, that I overlooked, vacated by the Honourable Frederick M. Blois, one year and three months.

There are three of these 14 vacancies that are relatively recent, but the others have existed for anywhere from one year and two months to eight years and three months. This seems to me to be a very serious lack in this chamber, especially when we are going to be called upon to consider changes in the Constitution of Canada and, more important still, when we are going to be called upon, which is very likely, I think, to consider changes in the constitution of the Senate.

Of course, I have been told by some people with whom I have raised this question in conversation that one cannot really expect to find these seats filled until shortly before a general election, when various faithful members of the party in office may expect to be appointed. This, of course, applies to all the parties.

On this situation of long-standing vacancies applying to both parties, I recall reading, some years ago, a speech in the House of Commons by Sir Richard Cartwright, one of the big guns, one of—"les gros canons", as the Leader of the Opposition calls them—of the Liberal Party of that date, in which he excoriated the Conservative government of the time for having left a large number of Senate seats vacant. I am told, as I think Sir Richard was told by various people on that occasion, that one cannot expect very much in the way of appointments until pretty close to the time of an election.

Well, I do not think that is really a very good reason for deferring an appointment for eight years and three months. I do not think it is a very good reason for deferring an appointment for six years and ten months, or four years and three months. I am willing to admit that on partisan grounds—though I do not know how far it is consistent with the honour of the Senate that these should hold the sway that perhaps they do—there may be reasons for deferring the appointment of senators who would be filling seats formerly occupied by Liberal senators; but that, for such value as it may have, does not apply to seats which were vacated by Conservative senators. And in the present situation, where the ranks of the official opposition here are so sadly depleted, to the detriment not only of the opposition itself but the Senate as a whole and the conduct of public business, it seems to me that that particular excuse does not apply to the seats which were formerly held by Conservative senators. I think it is not without importance to note that the longest-standing vacancy, the one in Manitoba of a duration of eight years and three months, is of a seat formerly occupied by a Conservative senator. The same is true of the second longest-standing vacancy, the one in Saskatchewan, formerly occupied by the Honourable Arthur M. Pearson. Then there is the sixth vacancy on my list here, the seat occupied by the Honourable Grattan O'Leary, which has been vacant for a year and ten months. Let me see. There may be one I have overlooked. Well, those are quite enough for anyone.

It seems to me that there is a peculiar urgency, in view of all the circumstances, in making early appointments to these particular seats, strengthening the ranks of the opposition and leaving the Senate better equipped to deal with the extraordinarily important constitutional changes which may possibly be proposed in the very near future. I must say I think there is a good deal to be said for the legislative change proposed in this chamber some 22 years ago—nearly 23 years ago—by the then Senator Euler, who proposed that the British North America Act should be amended so that vacancies would have to be filled within six months of the time that they occurred. That may be perhaps too short a period. I think there is a good deal to be said for something of that sort, however, especially since government after government, I am afraid, has yielded to the temptation to keep the seats open until the approach of a general election. This is not the way to handle appointments to the Senate. This is not the way to treat the Senate. This is not the way to treat a coordinate branch of Parliament, which I think all of us here would agree has important functions to perform, and especially important functions to perform when a question of constitutional change arises.

● (1510)

It is sometimes overlooked, perhaps, that we have in this Senate a very large reservoir of legal talent, of scholarly talent, on matters of constitutional importance which I think is, perhaps, not available to the same degree in the other house, and I do not think we should be treated as if our contributions to such matters were of minor importance.

I do not think it is necessary to labour the point further, but I should like to urge upon the Leader of the Government that he exert himself with his colleagues to get some of these long-standing vacancies filled. If he can make an extra effort in such a way as to strengthen the official opposition, I think it would be to the benefit of the house and to the benefit of the country.

There are rumours that we are about to have one of the vacancies from Manitoba filled by a very distinguished Conservative. I do not think it would be proper to mention names. I should personally welcome him very warmly here. He happens to be an old friend and, in my judgment, one of the ablest men in the country, but whether these rumours are well founded at all, I don't know. In any event, I trust that the Leader of the Government will exert himself, as I said a moment ago, with his colleagues to see whether he cannot get something done to fill up this list, or at least part of the list, of vacancies, many of which are of outrageously long standing.

I hope that I shall not be accused of undue partisanship in raising this. Someone suggested to me that possibly it should be raised by a member of the official opposition. I said I think perhaps it is better that it should be raised by a supporter of the government, because it is not quite so easy to attribute this to partisan venom on the part of one who normally supports the policies of the government, though I think on occasion I have manifested a certain independence by both speaking and voting against government measures, an action for which I have no repentance to offer. I hope, therefore, honourable senators that what I have said this afternoon may be taken seriously in the highest quarters of what used to be called in Quebec the religious and civil authorities, and that we may see some results shortly. I hope that they will not be mere samples, but that we shall get a substantial number of these vacancies filled.

On motion of Senator Langlois, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.45 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

---

ROYAL ASSENT

The Right Honourable Bora Laskin, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Right Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Income Tax Act and to establish the Employment Tax Credit Program.

An Act respecting the reorganization of Air Canada.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Right Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

---

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 7, 1978, at 8 p.m.

---

THE SENATE

Tuesday, February 7, 1978

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

FISHING AND RECREATIONAL HARBOURS BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-2, respecting the administration and development of certain fishing and recreational harbours in Canada.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Perrault moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of Reports of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting certain compensation plans, as follows:

1. Willow Creek School Division No. 28, Claresholm, Alberta, and two groups of its employees. Orders dated February 1, 1978.

2. Pictou County Municipal School Board, Nova Scotia, dated January 27, 1978.

Capital Budget of the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation for the financial year ending March 31, 1979, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1978-229, dated January 26, 1978, approving same.

Capital Budget of the Royal Canadian Mint for the year ending December 31, 1978, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1978-230, dated January 26, 1978, approving same.

Capital Budget of Air Canada for the year ending December 31, 1978, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1978-170, dated January 19, 1978, approving same.

Reports on operations under the Regional Development Incentives Act for the months of July, August, September and October, 1977, pursuant to section 16 of the said Act, Chapter R-3, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Order in Council P.C. 1978-72, dated January 12, 1978, amending Schedule I to the Canada Grain Act, effective February 1, 1978, pursuant to section 15(6) of the said Act, Chapter 7, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

Copies of contracts, pursuant to section 20(3) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, Chapter R-9, R.S.C., 1970, entered into between the Government of Canada and the Municipalities of Westlock and Valleyview, in the Province of Alberta (English Text).

Copies of Report of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting compensation plan between Philips Electronics Ltd., London, Ontario, and the group of its plant employees, represented by the United Auto Workers, Local 27. Order dated February 2, 1978.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Senator Macdonald, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Asselin be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Choquette on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Senator Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the names of the Honourable Senators Hicks and Robichaud be substituted for those of the Honourable Senators Barrow and Deschatelets on the list of senators serving on the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION FUND—QUESTION

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government can give us an updated report on the status of the proposed payment out of the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. We have heard that there will be a payment, but it is being delayed owing to the problem of calculating costs for 1977. It would be helpful if we could know what is the status of that calculation at this time.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I shall undertake to direct an immediate inquiry to the responsible minister, and I hope to be able to make a statement tomorrow afternoon.

FUGITIVE OFFENDERS BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, February 2, the debate on the motion of Senator McIlraith for second reading of Bill S-8, respecting fugitive offenders in Canada.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, perhaps I should say at the outset that Bill S-8, which repeals the existing Fugitive Offenders Act, is not the type of legislation with which one can get too emotionally involved.

Senator Flynn: Well, it was moved by Senator McIlraith.

Senator Macdonald: Therefore if my remarks are brief, honourable senators will know the reason why.

The sponsor, in his comprehensive review of the proposed legislation, mentioned that the bill has three objectives. The first is to modernize the existing legislation and to make its provisions applicable to modern conditions. This was considered necessary because the present act was passed away back in 1882, and there have not been any substantial amendments since that time. It must be admitted that although the present act has not changed, circumstances have, and crimes having an international impact have increased.

Back in 1966 an agreement was reached by the Commonwealth Law Ministers that a new Fugitive Offenders Act was necessary, and there was general agreement on the provisions of such an act. As that agreement was reached in 1966, and this bill is only now being considered in 1978, it is obvious that there has been no great sense of urgency with regard to its passage. Indeed, it would be interesting to know just how often the provisions of the existing act have been invoked since 1966. In any event, there can be no objection to the provisions of the new bill, which are more responsive to modern conditions and modern criminal activities.

The second objective of this bill is to protect the civil liberties of refugees from political, racial or religious oppression. That is of great importance. Certainly, anyone accused or convicted of one of the crimes set out in Schedule I should be returned to the country from where he or she came, either for trial or to complete a sentence. But even those persons are entitled to the protection of our laws while they are in Canada. Also, refugees from racial, religious or political oppression must be protected and given the benefits of our laws. We have always tried to provide that protection, and we will continue to provide that protection under the provisions of Bill S-8. However, such protection can always be improved.

Under the provisions of clause 6 a judge may issue a warrant for the apprehension of a fugitive offender on a foreign warrant of arrest or on information laid before him. This refers to a returnable offence, and in this connection I consider the term of 12 months imprisonment to be too short. It could cover a fairly minor offence. A judge hears the case and, under clause 8, must decide whether the person concerned should be committed for surrender or discharged. If committed, the matter goes to the Minister of Justice, who, in due course, must order the return of the offender or his release.

In my opinion, some parts of the procedure could be improved. For example, clause 2(2) of the bill seems to be somewhat confusing.

● (2010)

Apparently clause 4 is not to be considered by the judge, because clause 11 states:

(1) A judge shall, notwithstanding section 4, issue his warrant for the committal—

So I am not clear on whether this clause means that the judge is not to consider clause 4, which is the section that deals with political and some other offences, and which apparently can be considered only by the minister.

Clause 8 (1) mentions that the offender “shall, as soon as practicable after he is apprehended, be brought before a judge.” I believe this to be indefinite. I think there should be a definite time limit of, say, 24 hours, three days or even a week.

Clause 8(3) states:

—a fugitive offender who is apprehended on a warrant issued under section 6 shall be detained in custody pending the determination of his case under subsection (1) unless he establishes to the satisfaction of a judge . . . that his detention is not necessary—

I believe the burden of proof should always remain on the Crown, and the Crown should have to establish that the detention is necessary.

The same thing applies to clause 10, which provides:

The judge shall receive in the manner indicated in section 9 any evidence tendered to show that the offence . . . is not a returnable offence—

Here again I believe the burden of proof should be on the Crown, or whoever is doing the prosecuting, to show that it is a returnable offence, and the obligation should not be on the person.

Clause 13 gives the right of appeal only on the question of law. I do not understand why appeal should not be allowed on a question of fact or on a question of mixed fact and law.

Apart from such clauses of the bill, I suggest that judges should be given the responsibility of making the order to return the fugitive, and that appeals should be to the appeal court of the province in which the case was heard. I do not think the minister should come into the matter at all. This is a judicial process, and normal judicial procedure should be followed. Making the minister responsible could change what I think should be a judicial matter into a political one.

Honourable senators, the sponsor, Senator McIlraith, in a very fair way—and I might say at this point that I regret that he is unable to be present this evening through illness, a fact of which he very courteously had me informed—brought the provisions of clause 18 to our attention. This clause states that the minister may refuse to order the return of an offender where it appears to him that the offender might suffer the death penalty if returned for a crime not punishable by death in Canada. As has been pointed out, this provision could enable a murderer from another part of the Commonwealth to escape punishment for his crime if he managed to get to Canada unless, of course, there is something in the immigration laws which covers this possibility. Apparently there was no general agreement on this by the Commonwealth law ministers, because clause 17 of this agreement makes such a section discretionary—that is, one which any part of the Commonwealth may or may not adopt.

Senator McIlraith drew this clause to the attention of the Senate as being worthy of examination in committee. I do not have any suggestions to offer as to how it could or should be amended, so I will follow the honourable senator's precedent and suggest that it be considered by a committee.

Honourable senators, I do not see anything in the bill which gives a judge the discretion he has under section 17 of the act which is presently in force. That section provides:

Whenever it is made to appear to the court that by reason of the trivial nature of the case, or by reason of the application for the return of a fugitive not being made in good faith, in the interests of justice, or that, for any other reason, it would, having regard to the distance, to the facilities for communication, and to all the circumstances of the case, be unjust or oppressive or too severe a punishment to return the fugitive either at all or until the expiration of a certain period, the court may discharge the fugitive, either absolutely or on bail, or order that he shall not be returned until after the expiration of the period named in the order, or may make such other order in the premises, as to the court seems just.

I believe the bill would be strengthened if that clause were retained or replaced by one of a similar nature. I do think the judge should be given some discretion, which he does not appear to be given under this bill.

The third objective is simply to apply the provisions of the agreement to all parts of the Commonwealth, even those which do not at the present time acknowledge the Queen as Head of State. The provisions of the present act apply only to the realms and territories of Her Majesty. Of course, there can be no substantial objection to that objective because it is only fair that all parts of the Commonwealth should come under such an act.

[Senator Macdonald.]

Honourable senators, I think the bill should receive the support of the house, and perhaps the suggestions I have made could be considered by a committee, unless the adoption of that agreement by all of the Commonwealth law ministers precludes such consideration.

I have not mentioned anything about the amendments to the Extradition Act because I understand their only purpose is to bring that act into conformity with Bill S-8.

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): The honourable senator referred to crimes that might be described as "political" crimes committed in another Commonwealth country, and indicated that he hoped there would be no extradition for such crimes. I wondered if he had given any thought to the matter of granting asylum in this country to people who might be wanted abroad for the commission of political crimes.

Senator Macdonald: Clause 4(1) of this bill provides:

No fugitive offender is liable to be surrendered under this Act if

(a) the offence of which the fugitive offender is accused or alleged to have been convicted is an offence of a political character—

If such a person was able to find refuge in Canada, then certainly he could not be returned unless the Minister of Justice agreed that he should be returned.

The point I was trying to make concerns clause 11(1), which reads:

A judge shall, notwithstanding section 4, issue his warrant for the committal of a fugitive offender brought before him pursuant to section 8—

It seems to me, therefore, that the judge in the first instance cannot take into consideration the protection given these people by clause 4. That would have to wait until the matter reached the Minister of Justice.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, the sponsor of this bill, Senator McIlraith, is ill and cannot be present this evening. In his place, I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

● (2020)

PRIVATE BILLS

MARRIAGE LAW EXEMPTION (JAMES RICHARD BORDEN AND JUDY ANN BORDEN)—SECOND READING

Hon. Maurice Bourget moved second reading of Bill S-5, to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of James Richard Borden and Judy Ann Borden.

He said: Honourable senators, following the bill on which Senator Macdonald just spoke, I suppose my bill will have a little more emotion, because it has to do with marriage.

The purpose of Bill S-5 is to exempt Mr. James Richard Borden and Miss Judith Ann Borden from the prohibition against marriage between an uncle and a niece, a prohibition that is part of the public general law on marriage.

Both petitioners were born in the United States and are now Canadian citizens. Mr. Borden, who is 33 years old, was born in Phoenix, Arizona, and Miss Borden, who is 27, was born at McCool Junction, Nebraska. They both came to Canada in June, 1969, became landed immigrants on August 18, 1970, and were granted Canadian citizenship on August 30, 1976.

Mr. Borden is the brother of Miss Borden's father, Robert Douglas Borden, and is, therefore, Miss Borden's uncle.

Senator Flynn: Miss Borden is his niece.

Senator Bourget: Is that not what I said? He is, therefore, Miss Borden's uncle.

Senator Argue: He doesn't understand.

Senator Bourget: I will send a copy of my speech to the Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

In any event, as honourable senators are aware, one of the essential prerequisites of a valid marriage is that the parties to the marriage must not be related to each other within one of the prohibited degrees of consanguinity; that is, there must not be any blood relationship between them. One of the prohibited degrees of blood relationship, of course, has always been that of uncle and niece.

Legislative authority in relation to prohibited degrees of relationship, which relates to the capacity to marry, falls within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal Parliament. For the information of honourable senators, I should like to refer to the British North America Act, 1867. Under section 91, head 26, of that act, legislative authority is given to the Parliament of Canada with regard to "Marriage and Divorce," and under section 92, head 12 of the same act, legislative authority is given to the provincial legislatures with respect to "The Solemnization of Marriage."

Bill S-5, while unusual, is not without precedent. Honourable senators may recall that in July, 1975, in the First Session of the present Parliament, Bill C-1001, which was passed by both houses, provided an exception to the general law relating to marriage in the case of Richard Fritz and Marianne Strass. This bill, which is now chapter 113 of the Statutes of Canada 1974-75-76, permitted the petitioners to marry, notwithstanding that they were related to each other as half-uncle and half-niece.

Although in the present case the degree of consanguinity is that of full uncle and niece, the basic nature of the application is the same as in the earlier case, and I trust that it will receive favourable consideration in committee.

Honourable senators, if this bill receives second reading I intend to refer it to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, where honourable senators will have an opportunity to ask questions with respect to its subject matter.

Senator van Roggen: Would the honourable senator permit a question? Are there any unusual circumstances in this particular case that lead this couple to come forward with a private bill? Secondly, if there are no special circumstances, why should an exception be made in this case to the general law? Thirdly, if an exception should be made where there are no special circumstances, why should the law itself not be changed?

Senator Bourget: My honourable friend knows, of course, that I am not a lawyer. Reference was made to this point when the Fritz-Strass bill was before our Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee in 1975. I believe that Senator Flynn asked questions with reference to it. But right now I understand that the only way Mr. James Richard Borden and Miss Judy Ann Borden can be legally married is for the Parliament of Canada to exempt them from the prohibition against marriage between an uncle and a niece. That is my understanding, and I leave it to those who are lawyers to expand on what I have just said.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the last time the subject of exceptions from the general law relating to marriage was discussed in the Senate, the Honourable Senator Asselin asked if the federal government had any intention of introducing uniform marriage legislation in Canada which, presumably, would make it unnecessary for Parliament to pass laws of exception in individual cases, such as in the Fritz-Strass case to which Senator Bourget referred a moment ago. Senator Asselin asked this question during the debate on the motion for third reading of the Fritz-Strass bill on July 23, 1975. At that time the Leader of the Opposition also expressed support for the idea of providing uniform marriage legislation in order that this problem could be dealt with, as he said, "in a more general way in the future" so that Parliament would not be called upon to pass a special law in every case. This appeared to many of us to be an eminently sensible idea. He mentioned that both he and Senator Neiman had in committee—and, again, I quote Senator Flynn—"questioned the principle of introducing a law of exception in this particular field." Then later the sponsor of the bill, Senator Denis, expressed general support for that position and said:

I agree that the federal Parliament should carry out a deeper study in order to know whether there is any possibility of amendments.

In any event, he noted an assurance that I gave at that time, as reported on page 1252 of Debates of the Senate, when I said:

Honourable senators, I give an undertaking that the proposal of the Leader of the Opposition's will be brought to the attention of the appropriate government people.

After that discussion with respect to the Fritz-Strass bill I made verbal representations to the Department of Justice about the matter. Shortly thereafter, the Senate adjourned for a summer recess, but I can now read to honourable senators a letter which I have just received from the Honourable the Minister of Justice. It was prompted by a letter which I wrote to him a few days ago in anticipation of the introduction in this chamber of three bills of a similar type to the Fritz-Strass bill of 1975.

● (2030)

The letter to my colleague expressed again the Senate's concern in this matter. The reply from the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada, dated February 7, 1978, reads as follows:

In response to your letter of February 2nd, concerning three private (marriage) bills, I have noted your concerns and asked my officials to look into the feasibility of preparing legislative proposals that would allow for settlement of affinity and consanguinity cases in a general way so that Parliament would not be called upon to pass a special law in each case.

I hope some progress can be made in the direction of reform. As I noted earlier, the minister's views are in response to suggestions which have come from various members of this chamber, including the Leader of the Opposition.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a third time?

Senator Bourget moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

MARRIAGE LAW EXEMPTION (EUGÈNE WADDELL AND MARGUERITE BENOÎT)—SECOND READING

Hon. Maurice Bourget moved second reading of Bill S-6, to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of Eugène Waddell and Marguerite Benoît.

[Translation]

He said: Honourable senators, Bill S-6 is similar in nature to Bill S-5. It is only the circumstances that are different.

In this case, it is a Quebec couple, Mr. Eugène Waddell and Miss Marguerite Benoît, who are related to each other as uncle and niece, and who are asking for an exception from the public general law that prevents a valid marriage between persons who are related within such a degree of consanguinity.

Mr. Waddell was born in the city of Deux-Montagnes, in the province of Quebec, and Miss Benoît was born in Montreal. It is worth noting, honourable senators, that Mr. Waddell is 84 years old and Miss Benoît is 66.

Mr. Waddell is the brother of Miss Benoît's mother, the late Mrs. Anne Benoît, whose maiden name was Anne Waddell, and he is therefore the uncle of the lady he wishes to marry.

Senator Flynn: What is the lady?

Senator Bourget: I think I shall write a personal letter to the Leader of the Opposition, or perhaps I should wait until the study in committee to give him all those personal details and the others that he will probably request.

As I explained when I moved second reading of Bill S-5, the federal Parliament has exclusive jurisdiction to legislate in matters relating to the capacity to marry and it has this power by virtue of section 91, head 26, of the British North America Act, which assigns to the Parliament of Canada authority to enact laws relating to "Marriage and Divorce".

Since the petitioners in this case are from Quebec, it should be noted that prior to Confederation, the Civil Code of the province of Quebec of 1866 was in effect and one of its provisions, namely, article 126, stated that "marriage is prohibited between uncle and niece, aunt and nephew".

Since at the time the British North America Act was enacted in 1867 the only legislation in Quebec on the subject of marriage was that found in the Quebec Civil Code, and since under the terms of Confederation legislative authority in relation to marriage was given to the federal government, it was provided, under section 129 of the B.N.A. Act, that the law in force in Quebec shall continue in force unless and until it is "repealed, abolished or altered" by the Parliament of Canada.

Since the Parliament of Canada has exclusive jurisdiction in respect of marriage and since, under section 129 of the B.N.A. Act, it has the power to "repeal or amend" the law that was in force in Quebec at the time of Confederation, I submit that it has the power to pass a private bill permitting the petitioners to marry each other, notwithstanding the prohibition that would otherwise make it impossible for them to marry.

I have therefore the honour to move, as in the case of the previous bill, that this bill be given second reading and, once again, I hope that all honourable senators, especially the Leader of the Opposition, will consider it their duty to attend the sittings of this committee.

[English]

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Bourget moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 8, 1978

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Statement of the Chartered Banks of Canada showing Revenue, Expenses and Other Information for the financial year ended October 31, 1977, pursuant to section 119(1) of the Bank Act, Chapter B-1, R.S.C., 1970.

Annual Report to the Governments of the United States and Canada by the Columbia River Treaty Permanent Engineering Board for the period October 1, 1976 to September 30, 1977. (English text).

GOVERNMENT

STUDY OF FOREIGN FEDERAL SYSTEMS—QUESTION

Senator Bell: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if any thought has been given to setting up a special Senate committee to study the systems of government of West Germany, Switzerland and other federations with a view to considering proposals that we might submit to the provincial governments of Canada so that they may more efficiently fulfill their constitutional responsibilities.

I ask this question of the honourable leader because a special committee of the Government of British Columbia is studying the Bundesrat of West Germany, and other institutions, in order to make proposals with regard to the Senate of Canada.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee is superbly equipped to consider matters of this kind, and this proposal may well be taken up by that committee.

Senator Flynn: Do you mean that the government has no opinion on this?

Senator Perrault: A number of options are being considered with respect to—

Senator Flynn: By the government?

Senator Perrault: —the future of many institutions in this country. Of course, members of the Senate may engage in initiatives at any time to have certain studies made. That is one of the rights we have.

Senator Flynn: Are you suggesting that we should do it?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it would be wrong for me to attempt to impose any of my ideas on someone else.

Senator Flynn: I agree.

THE LATE HONOURABLE GEORGE PORTEOUS

LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR OF SASKATCHEWAN—TRIBUTES

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I rise to draw the attention of the Senate to a very unhappy event, namely, the untimely passing yesterday morning of the Honourable George Porteous, M.B.E., C.M., the Lieutenant Governor of Saskatchewan.

It was only last Wednesday that Her Honour the Speaker drew the attention of the Senate to the presence in our gallery of the Honourable George Porteous, at which time he appeared to be in good health. I was not present then, but I understand that he received a warm welcome from all honourable senators. It was a shock to all of us to learn of his untimely passing.

The late Honourable George Porteous was a very distinguished citizen of Saskatchewan. The recipient of many honours, he dedicated a great deal of his life to the public service and was an exemplary lieutenant governor. I know I speak for my colleagues in Saskatchewan and the people of that province when I pay tribute to the contribution he made to the public life of this country. I am very sorry to have to report his death to the Senate of Canada.

• (1410)

PRIVATE BILL

MARRIAGE LAW EXEMPTION (LUCIEN ROCH JOSEPH MORIN AND MARIE ROSE HÉLÈNE MORIN)—SECOND READING

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets moved the second reading of Bill S-7, to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of Lucien Roch Joseph Morin and Marie Rose Hélène Morin.

He said: Honourable senators, in moving the second reading of this bill, I should like to point out that the exceptions from the public general law relating to marriage dealt with in Bills S-5 and S-6, which were given second reading in the Senate last evening, are exceptions from a prohibited degree of consanguinity within which persons may not marry. In the case of Bill S-7, there is no blood relationship between the petitioners. Rather, there is a family relationship resulting from the adoption of one of the petitioners into the family of the other. The public law is, or at least appears to be, silent in respect of adoption and the effects, if any, of adoption on the impediments to marriage.

The facts of the case are rather simple. One of the petitioners, Miss Marie Rose Hélène Morin, was born in Quebec and was adopted by the parents of the other petitioner, Mr. Lucien Roch Joseph Morin, under a judgment of the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec dated December 15, 1947.

The question that may be asked in this case is whether Miss Morin, by the fact only of her adoption into the family of Mr. Morin, is prevented from marrying him.

Some Quebec authors would argue that the prohibitions that apply to persons related by blood apply equally to persons who are legally related through adoption. While it is true that section 38(a) of the Adoption Act of Quebec states that "the adopted child shall become, in all respects and with respect to all persons, the legitimate child of the adopter and that of his consort"—and, I add, with the full legal rights of the adopter—one may well ask whether these words can have such a broad effect as to create an impediment to marriage.

We must remember that the Adoption Act of Quebec did not exist at the time of Confederation. As Senator Bourget so clearly pointed out in moving the second readings of Bills S-5 and S-6 last evening, it is the Parliament of Canada only that has the exclusive jurisdiction under the British North America Act to legislate in matters relating to marriage and divorce.

The federal Parliament to this date has not passed any law stating that an adopted child is prohibited from marrying a member of the family of his or her adoptive parents. The only law in the federal statute books at the present time on the subject of the validity of marriage is the Marriage Act, which is chapter M-5 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970. This act permits marriage between a man and his sister-in-law, in the case, of course, that his wife is deceased, or the daughter of a sister or brother of his deceased wife. It also allows a woman to marry the brother of her deceased husband or a son of a brother or sister of her deceased husband.

On the other hand, the Quebec Civil Code of 1866, by virtue of section 129 of the British North America Act, applies in respect to marriage until and unless it is repealed, abolished or altered by the Parliament of Canada. Article 125 of the Civil Code of the Province of Quebec, which as you know is based on the Napoleonic Code, states that marriage is prohibited between brother and sister, legitimate or natural.

Can it be said that by adoption the child becomes the legitimate brother or sister of the child or children of his or her adoptive parents in the sense that the child is prohibited from marrying one of those children?

That is a question of law, honourable senators, which fortunately we are not obliged, I submit, to answer at this time because we are not a court. While we have power to make the law, it is not our function to interpret it. However, we do have the power to enact legislation that would clear up any doubt that might exist in this particular case and, on that basis, I would recommend that this private bill be given second reading and be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Honourable senators, because it will indicate to you the difficulties faced by the petitioners, I should like to point out that they have already submitted, along with their petition, a certificate from the Diocese of Amos, Quebec, to the effect that the Roman Catholic Church, to which the petitioners belong, does not object to their marriage provided there is authority in law for the marriage to take place. I have no authorization to produce that certificate here or to read its contents, but that can be done in committee, if the bill receives second reading.

I should now like to read in French the two last paragraphs of a letter from the authorities of the Amos diocese. It reads as follows:

[Translation]

... this marriage is refused only by virtue of section 38 of the Adoption Act and section 125 of the Civil Code which prohibits marriage between legitimate brother and sister.

If a private act authorizes this marriage, the diocese of Amos will grant a Nihil Obstat so that this marriage may take place.

● (1420)

[English]

Under the Quebec Civil Code the petitioners are considered to be brother and sister, and it is because of this that the church authorities refused to authorize their marriage. The last paragraph that I read mentions that if a private bill authorizes such a marriage, the church authorities will willingly and happily proceed with the marriage ceremony.

Those are the only details I can give honourable senators at this time. If the motion for second reading is agreed to, the bill can be examined in committee together with the two other private bills that were referred to committee yesterday evening. At that time, all relevant particulars can be examined and relevant documents produced.

Hon. Frederick William Rowe: Honourable senators, I wish to make one point in connection with the case so excellently presented by my colleague, Senator Deschatelets. Perhaps I should say, by way of prelude, that my mind has been set at rest by the honourable senator's giving us the opinion of the Roman Catholic Church on this matter.

I speak with some knowledge, because for several years I was active in the field of social welfare, both as a deputy minister and minister. In the course of that time, hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of adoption cases came under my purview. In accordance with the law of Newfoundland, the minister has to give final approval in adoption cases.

My point is that in many cases of adoption the parentage is not publicly known, and very often the natural parentage of the child being adopted is not made known. Under the law in some provinces, and perhaps in all provinces, that knowledge is kept secret, if it is not already made public.

I know, from my own experience that in some cases adopting parents have a blood relationship with the child they are adopting. That relationship may sometimes be fairly close or sometimes quite remote—they may be third or fourth cousins.

I am merely enunciating a general principle since, in view of what Senator Deschatelets has told about the opinion of the Roman Catholic Church, we can be quite sure there is no doubt in this particular case.

We can be reasonably assured that the authorities would know if there were any consanguinity in connection with this particular case. But, as a matter of principle, in the case of such bills, there has to be reasonable assurance that there are no genetic problems involved. I have in mind more than the case of half brothers and sisters. Genetic problems might be involved in the case of second and third cousins, where both parties might carry a genetic weakness such as, for example, blindness or near-blindness. That is a factor which should always be examined before approval is given. I am not thinking so much of the particular case which is the subject of the bill now before us. As a matter of principle, in all cases the sponsor of the bill and other authorities must be reasonably satisfied that there is no genetic problem.

Senator Deschatelets: Honourable senators, may I say, in reply, that I have on file documents showing that there is no blood relationship whatsoever in this case. Of course, this is the kind of evidence that could be more satisfactorily presented before the committee, but I have it here in any event.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I think the difference that has been pointed out by Senator Deschatelets between this case and the cases that Senator Bourget presented to us last night is, on the one hand, as to whether consanguinity, as such, should be an obstacle in the second degree or whether family ties created by law should be an obstacle. I am quite satisfied that in the case of family ties created by law, as in the present case, there should be no problem at all. I do not know whether that has ever been an obstacle. Whether consanguinity in the second degree is in fact a valid obstacle to marriage, as was proposed by Senator Bourget, is not something that I am willing to accept as such. I would like to have some evidence.

Senator Rowe, of course, is being respectful of tradition. But I wonder whether there is any scientific evidence today with regard to consanguinity in the second degree which shows it to be a danger. My feeling is that it is only a tradition, and I do not think I would be willing to accept the opinion that Senator Rowe has just expressed that consanguinity is, in all the degrees established by the Code, a definite and valid obstacle to marriage.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Deschatelets moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, before we adjourn I should like to remind you that the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications will meet at 3.30 this afternoon in room 356-S, to consider Bill S-4, to implement the International Convention for Safe Containers.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, February 9, 1978

The Senate met at 2 p.m., Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets, P.C., Speaker pro tem, in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of Notes to the Embassy of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the Secretary-General of the United Nations concerning the 1968 Agreement on the Rescue of Astronauts, the Return of Astronauts and the Return of Objects Launched into Outer Space, issued by the Department of External Affairs.

Document entitled "Canada's Economy—Medium-term Projections and Targets", dated February 1978, issued by the Department of Finance.

Report of operations under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 12(2) of the said Act, Chapter F-22, R.S.C., 1970.

Copies of Report of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting compensation plan between Niagara South Board of Education, Welland, Ontario and the group of its secondary school teachers, represented by the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation, District 7, and l'Association des enseignants franco-ontariens, District 8. Order dated February 3, 1978.

Capital Budget of the Export Development Corporation for the year ending December 31, 1977, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1978-77, dated January 12, 1978, approving same.

Report of the Public Service Staff Relations Board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 115 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act, Chapter P-35, R.S.C., 1970.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON RETIREMENT AGE POLICIES—BUDGET TABLED

Senator Laird, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled

the committee's report approving the budget of the Special Senate Committee on Retirement Age Policies.

(For text of report, see today's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate.)

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

SECOND REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Senator Forsey, Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, presented the following report:

Wednesday, February 8, 1978.

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has the honour to present its Second Report as follows:

On Thursday, November 7, 1974 your Committee submitted to Parliament a report containing fourteen criteria for the Review of Statutory Instruments which subsequently received the concurrence of both Houses.

Your Committee submits again its criteria adding to those previously submitted an additional criterion which is: "Trespasses unduly on the rights and liberties of the subject".

Accordingly, the criteria Your Committee will use are the following:

Whether any Regulation or other Statutory Instrument within its terms of reference, in the judgement of the Committee:

(1)(a) is not authorized by the terms of the enabling statute, or, if it is made pursuant to the prerogative, its terms are not in conformity with the common law, or

(b) does not clearly state therein the precise authority for the making of the Instrument;

(2) has not complied with the provisions of the Statutory Instruments Act with respect to transmittal, recording, numbering or publication;

(3)(a) has not complied with any tabling provision or other condition set forth in the enabling statute; or

(b) does not clearly state therein the time and manner of compliance with any such condition;

(4) makes some unusual or unexpected use of the powers conferred by the enabling statute or by the prerogative;

(5) trespasses unduly on the rights and liberties of the subject;

(6)(a) tends directly or indirectly to exclude the jurisdiction of the Courts without explicit authorization therefor in the enabling statute; or

(b) makes the rights and liberties of the subject dependent on administrative discretion rather than on the judicial process;

(7) purports to have retroactive effect where the enabling statute confers no express authority so to provide or, where such authority is so provided, the retroactive effect appears to be oppressive, harsh or unnecessary;

(8) appears for any reason to infringe the rule of law or the rule of natural justice;

(9) provides without good and sufficient reason that it shall come into force before registration by the Clerk of the Privy Council;

(10) in the absence of express authority to that effect in the enabling statute or prerogative, appears to amount to the exercise of a substantive legislative power properly the subject of direct parliamentary enactment, and not merely to the formulation of subordinate provisions of a technical or administrative character properly the subject of delegated legislation;

(11) without express provision to the effect having been made in the enabling statute or prerogative, imposes a fine, imprisonment or other penalty, or shifts the onus of proof of innocence to the person accused of an offence;

(12) imposes a charge on the public revenues or contains provisions requiring payment to be made to the Crown or to any other authority in consideration of any license or service to be rendered, or prescribes the amount of any such charge or payment, without express authority to that effect having been provided in the enabling statute or prerogative;

(13) is not in conformity with the Canadian Bill of Rights;

(14) is unclear in its meaning or otherwise defective in its drafting;

(15) for any other reason requires elucidation as to its form or purport.

Respectfully submitted,

Eugene A. Forsey
Joint Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Forsey: At the earliest possible moment, honourable senators, and I do not know when that is.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Forsey, seconded by the Honourable Senator

Lafond, that this report be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit while the Senate is sitting on Tuesday next, 14th February, 1978, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

• (1410)

Senator Grosart: Is there a particular reason why it is necessary for this committee to sit while the Senate is sitting?

Senator Langlois: I am informed by the sponsor of Bills S-5 and S-6 that this is the only time available to the witnesses who will be appearing before the committee on those bills. The only other time available to the committee next week is Thursday morning, and I am informed that at that meeting the committee will be hearing from the minister on the Fugitive Offenders Bill.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, February 14, 1978, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Honourable senators, before the question is put, I should like to give the usual brief resume of what we can expect in the Senate and its committees next week. The committee schedule is a heavy one and I shall deal with it first.

On Monday at 2.00 p.m. the Agriculture Committee will meet to continue its inquiry into the Canadian beef industry, and at 3.30 p.m. there will be a meeting of the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region.

On Tuesday the Agriculture Committee will again meet on its inquiry into the Canadian beef industry at 10 a.m. and 1.30 p.m., and at 4 p.m. there will be a meeting of the subcommittee on Childhood Experiences. The Special Committee of the Senate on Retirement Age Policies will meet at 5 p.m.; the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee will meet at 8.30 p.m. to give consideration to Bills S-5 and S-6, and the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has scheduled a meeting for 8.30 p.m.

On Wednesday the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee will meet at 9.30 a.m. to consider Bill S-3, and there will be a further meeting of the Agriculture Committee on its inquiry into the Canadian beef industry when the Senate rises.

On Thursday the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee will meet to consider Bill S-8, the Fugitive Offenders Bill, at 9.30 a.m., and at 10 a.m. there will be a meeting of the Subcommittee on Childhood Experiences. The Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments will also meet on Thursday at 11 a.m.

In the Senate we shall proceed with Bill C-2, respecting the development of certain fishing and recreational harbours in Canada, and other matters on the order paper. Hopefully, Bill C-16, to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act, will be passed by the other place before we return on Tuesday evening.

Motion agreed to.

RETIREMENT AGE POLICIES

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Senator Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Fournier (Restigouche-Gloucester) be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator McNamara on the list of senators serving on the Special Senate Committee on Retirement Age Policies.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

VIOLATION OF OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT BY SOVIET NATIONALS IN CANADA—QUESTION

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question of the Leader of the Government respecting some press reports that have come to light only in the last few minutes or hours concerning the RCMP having uncovered a massive Soviet spy ring in Canada. I would ask him for a report, however brief, to confirm whether or not this is so, and perhaps later to give a detailed report of what action the government intends to take to deal with this matter.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have been informed that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be making a major statement on this subject at 3 o'clock this afternoon in the House of Commons, and I shall certainly make a statement in this chamber shortly thereafter if the Senate is still sitting. If our deliberations have been completed, the information will be brought to honourable senators as soon as possible.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

CORRECTION

Senator Rowe: Honourable senators, I should like to point out that in Question No. 3 in the Minutes of the Proceedings, "Belle Island" should be spelled "Bell Island." The question deals with storage capacity for oil or oil products of the abandoned iron ore mines at Bell Island, Newfoundland. The name of the island arises from the fact that it resembles the shape of a bell, and it is not to be confused with another island in Newfoundland named Belle Island.

[Senator Langlois.]

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

DOMESTIC AIR CHARTER RIGHTS—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have some replies to questions asked earlier this session.

Senator Buckwold asked a question on December 8 with respect to a recent decision of the Canadian Transport Commission to give very limited charter rights to Air Canada and CP Air for domestic flights in the coming year. He objected to the fact that another company, Wardair, had been denied this privilege.

A petition had been filed with the Governor in Council by the Consumers' Association of Canada for amendment of the decision. The Governor in Council varied the decision to provide the operation of a larger number of inter-regional domestic ABCs in 1978, to permit other Class 4-licensed carriers to apply to participate in inter-regional domestic ABCs and not to provide for a so-called "primary right" on the part of the two trunkline carriers in such operations, and requiring that the commission consider whether any other regulations on domestic ABCs might be eased and, in particular, whether it might be appropriate to mix domestic ABC and ITC passengers and reduce advanced booking requirements.

The Air Transport Committee of the commission now has under study, with a view to giving early effect to the order, the necessary amendments to the air carrier regulations.

In the matter of the right of Wardair to participate in the operation of domestic ABCs, this carrier still does not have a licence and still has not filed a formal application. To quote the Ministry of Transport, "The ball is, therefore, in Wardair's court, though the carrier's periodic public pronouncements neglect to make that clear."

● (1420)

PUBLIC WORKS

ILLUMINATION OF GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on December 15 Senator Forsey asked a question about certain government offices on the other side of the river, and complained that they were "lit up like the gardens of Versailles on July 14."

I should like to answer that in this way:

The sites in Hull which attract attention about excessive building lighting in government buildings during silent hours are:

Place du Portage I and II

Place du Portage III

Place du Portage IV

Les Terrasses de la Chaudière

Portage I and II: Cleaning starts at 1700 hours and is completed in half of the building by 1900 hours and lights turned off in these areas. All cleaning operations are complete and lights turned off at 2100 hours. Gang cleaning is being practised in Portage II. A project which will provide central switching control from the Guard's desk is being developed.

Place du Portage III: Lights are shut off at 2100 hours, except for areas still occupied by office or construction workers. Cleaning operations are completed by that time. There are also some areas of the building where electrical circuitry for sectional switching is still being installed. All efforts are being made to complete this work as soon as possible.

Portage IV: This building is still under construction and some work continues until 3:00 a.m. All temporary construction lights are left on by the contractor for safety and security.

Les Terrasses de la Chaudière: Most floors are still under construction and lights are on because switching for controlling lighting by floor and by lighting level is incomplete. This hydro-electric energy is not totally wasted since lights were designed to serve as partial heating during winter months, thus saving non-renewable natural gas energy.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REVENUE FROM OCEAN LIMITED AND SCOTIAN—QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 2—By Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche):

1. What was the total revenue from the two passenger trains namely the Ocean Limited and the Scotian, for the period of December 1, 1976, to April 1, 1977?

2. What was the revenue for the same two trains for the period of December 1, 1975, to April 30, 1976?

Senator Perrault: Answered.

The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1. December 1, 1976 to April 1, 1977	(Thousands)
Total revenues— Ocean Limited	$1,778.5
— Scotian	1,274.6
	$3,053.1
2. December 1, 1975 to April 30, 1976	(Thousands)
Total revenues— Ocean Limited	$2,630.6
— Scotian	1,584.1
	$4,214.7

The figures provided do not give a complete picture of the revenue situation because the earnings cover different periods of time and do not realistically consider the operating problems which arose during the winter of 1976-1977. Also due to the landslide at St. Fabien on December 16, 1976, train service patterns were continually altered between Montreal and Moncton. These service alterations and disruptions lasted until the middle of May, 1977. The most significant changes in service were the cancellation of the Ste. Foy-Edmundston-Moncton trains 616 to 619 and the diversion of the Ocean and Scotian trains via Edmundston. Several other local services were used to provide service to local points on the Levis-Campbellton-Moncton line and the revenue for these trains was included in the earnings for the Scotian and Ocean Limited.

ENERGY

OIL STORAGE AT BELL ISLAND, NEWFOUNDLAND—QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 3—By Senator Austin:

1. What is the estimated storage capacity for oil or oil products of the abandoned iron ore mines at Bell Island, Newfoundland?

2. How expensive might it be to prepare this storage capacity for actual use?

3. Is the property on which the storage is located public or private land, and if private what is the name of the owner, and if the owner is a corporation who are its controlling shareholders?

4. Has any consideration been given to the acquisition by purchase of this property either by the federal or by the provincial governments or jointly, and if so what might be the estimated purchase price?

5. Have there been discussions during the calendar year 1977 with the United States Government regarding the use by the United States of this property, either alone or in conjunction with Canada, either by private or by public interests, and if so what is the present situation of those discussions?

6. What would be the estimated cost to fill the Bell Island storage capacity, and how long would it take to do so at rates of purchase which would not affect world market demand and price?

7. Is this project considered vital for Canada in order to obtain for Quebec and the Atlantic provinces a secure supply of crude oil at current prices against shortages and higher prices predicted beyond 1985?

Senator Perrault: Answered.

The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows:

1. 90 million barrels
2. $120,000,000

3 and 4. Wabanex, a subsidiary of Power Corporation, has leased property from the Province of Newfoundland. The province has an option to participate in the project and the federal government has indicated to Wabanex that if it concludes an arrangement with the U.S. Department of Energy for strategic storage, the federal government would also wish to have an option to participate in the project.

5. Wabanex has had several discussions with the United States Government officials and the Office of Strategic Reserves has commissioned a feasibility study. The U.S. Department of Energy is currently planning to create emergency reserves of one billion barrels, of which five hundred million barrels are to be complete, mainly in salt domes in the Southern States, by 1982. Wabanex may be considered for the second half of the program.

6. At today's prices of approximately $14 to $15 per barrel, the cost of filling the Bell Island storage would be approximately $1,300,000,000 to $1,400,000,000. It should be possible to purchase crude oil at a rate of 250,000 barrels per day, without significantly affecting world demand or price, and on this basis, the storage could be filled in one year (one Very Large Crude Carrier (VLCC) every nine days).

7. The project is not considered vital at this time for Canada. As a member of the International Energy Agency, Canada is a participant in an oil-sharing scheme designed to protect the member countries in the event of an oil shortage, whether caused by accident or as a result of a political decision.

The countries participating in the oil-sharing agreement have two basic obligations:

- (i) the requirement to be able to reduce country-wide consumption during an emergency (initially by at least 10%) and
- (ii) to maintain emergency supplies equal to 90 days of net imports.

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION FUND—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, on February 7 the Honourable Senator Olson requested an updated report on the status of the proposed payment out of the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. By way of reply, the minister has provided information in the form of a statement made by him in the other place on January 31:

Mr. Speaker, it is not yet possible to be precise about the amount. Indeed, the final amount may not be known for some time. However, the likelihood is that an analysis of the figures will allow us to look at the question of whether an interim payment should be made. We will be discussing the matter in the very near future.

I may say additionally that the payout calculation will not be finalized until late this summer. The responsible minister in the other place, Mr. Lang, made the suggestion last fall that an interim payment might be desirable if the final payout could not be made before seeding. The minister is pursuing the idea of an interim payment, and if it is made it will likely be by mid-April.

[Senator Perrault.]

Since, in the words of the ministry, the available data is preliminary, it is difficult to provide any precise figure. However, the minister has stated that the final amount will likely be between $75 million and $150 million.

ENERGY

FUNDY TIDAL POWER SITES—QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 4—By Senator Austin:

1. With respect to the potential of Fundy tidal power sites to produce electrical energy, are there any studies completed or under way on any possible project sites which might lead to machining at least on a pilot basis?
2. If there are such studies, (a) what site is being considered, (b) what might be the cost of such a pilot plant, and (c) at what possible electrical output?

Senator Perrault: Answered.

1. Studies completed to date have identified three sites that appear to be the most attractive of some 30 possible sites in the Bay of Fundy area for development of tidal power; all three are too large for development on a pilot plant basis. These sites are in Shepody Bay, Cumberland Bay and Cobequid Bay and have a potential 1550, 1085 and 3800 MW respectively. There has been no decision to proceed with development of any one of these three or any other site in the Bay of Fundy.
2. The federal government has not participated in any studies relative to the development of tidal power on a pilot plant basis.

● (1430)

NATIONAL UNITY

MAGAZINE ARTICLE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, February 2, 1978:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to a most mischievous article by June Callwood in the January number of L'actualité.

He said:

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I have before me an article from the monthly magazine L'actualité by June Callwood from Toronto and I would like to draw the attention of the Senate on what I called in my notice of inquiry a "mischievous" article. I could have used somewhat stronger language but I said "most mischievous".

For two reasons, I am going to deliver part of my speech in French and part of it in English: first, one part in French because the article is in French, and I am going to comment in French on several parts of the article. On the other hand, since the author is English-speaking, I will comment several parts in English while quoting several parts in French and making as faithful a translation as possible for someone who is not quite bilingual and who is neither a translator, nor an interpreter or whatever.

I have been told by several of my colleagues that I should not bother raising this matter here. First, a highly respected colleague told me: Well, this poor woman has no way of challenging what you will be saying in the Senate; frankly, I think it would be a shame to raise that issue before the Senate, considering that Mrs. Callwood has no way of defending herself.

Well, I do not find that argument very convincing since Mrs. Callwood is some kind of television star and she has a program on the CBC English network called "In Touch". This program can be viewed at least once a week, I think, but I am not positive. I even appeared on that program once but I do not expect another invitation.

Some other colleagues said to me: Well, it is no use raising the issue because the article appeared in a PQ paper, and heavens knows what silly things, stupid things one can expect to read in such papers; why give this article any publicity by bringing it up before such an august assembly as the Senate of Canada?

Again I am not convinced by this argument because, first, this lady has gained a certain renown as a publicist, and she has spread out before the French-speaking population what she calls, "the truth about Canada". This "truth" is, in my opinion, somewhat dubious, and I shall explain briefly my reasons for arriving at this conclusion. There are, in my opinion, enough fairy tales on the Constitution and history of Canada circulating across the country, and sometimes, I am inclined to think, more particularly in the province of Quebec. But that is perhaps prejudice on my part. Certainly, however, there are many, many fairy tales, completely without foundation, circulating across the country on the Constitution and history of Canada.

Now I want to quote some parts of this article.

First, according to Mrs. Callwood, "Our country, in fact, was not founded on democratic principles, but rather the opposite".

Well, I ask whether there is at this moment a single country in the world "founded on democratic principles". Certainly not the United Kingdom or the United States. It depends on the meaning you attach to the word "democratic". But if you mean by this word a state founded on universal suffrage, even universal suffrage for men, not to mention women, I think almost no state in the world was "founded on democratic principles", because universal suffrage did not prevail in the United Kingdom in 1867, nor in the United States two centuries ago. It was an élitist society, if I may use a word which perhaps does not exist in French, but which is used often in English. I think it is, moreover, a mixture, in English. But all these countries were founded on the principle of popular government, constitutionality; but on democratic principles, I think no.

So, if Canada is not "founded on democratic principles", that is true also of most countries in the world.

Next, second point, Mrs. Callwood says: "Its French half was a colony dominated by a master hostile, or at best indifferent".

Well, perhaps I ought to leave it to French-speaking senators to discuss this part of the article. But I think it must be emphasized that in 1867 the Province of Canada had enjoyed responsible government for about twenty years, and if the French-speaking population was "dominated" during that period, for example, by "a master hostile, at best indifferent", it is a little doubtful, because, for that whole period, there were, for the Province of Canada, two Prime Ministers, one English-speaking, the other French-speaking, except for the period immediately before the British North America Act, when there was only one Prime Minister for the province of Canada, a French-speaking one: first, Sir Étienne-Pascal Taché, and then Sir Narcisse Belleau.

Well, that doesn't convey to me the impression of "a colony dominated by a master hostile, at best indifferent".

Then Mrs. Callwood pays her compliments to the English-speaking. It is their turn:

"Its English part was formed of a people who hated democracy to the point of fleeing from it, at the risk of all their property, at the risk of their lives".

Well, I suppose that refers to those whom we call, in English, the "United Empire Loyalists". Again, it is a doubtful point, I think, because while the Loyalists did not favour the American Revolution, none the less they had, I think, just as much as the revolutionaries, the taste for freedom. But they differed on the methods to be followed to establish and protect that freedom; and I think the proof of that statement of mine becomes perfectly clear when one considers that, on the arrival of the Loyalists in that part of the Province of Quebec which is now called Ontario, formerly Upper Canada, immediately these people demanded the summoning of an Assembly. They were not aristocrats who wanted to settle everything by decrees, by Orders-in-Council, by decrees of the King or Queen. No, they were people who had the taste for popular government, and demanded, urgently, the summoning of an Assembly. And the British Parliament yielded to this demand in rather short order, and established a Legislative Assembly in Upper Canada and also in Lower Canada.

So I think Mrs. Callwood's statement is hardly well founded.

● (1440)

[English]

Now, if I may turn to the other language, much to the relief of everybody concerned, I should think, not the least, perhaps, the interpreters.

The next statement Mrs. Callwood makes is that in these two societies—that is, the French-speaking and English-speaking societies—it was considered seditious to speak of liberty, equality and individual rights, and certain people were even hanged for doing so. Well, I suppose that last is a reference to "Les Patriotes" of 1837 and their counterparts in Upper Canada.

I think it is worth noting that the risings of 1837 in the two provinces took place only after a prolonged agitation in both provinces, an agitation which, in no case that I am aware of, was ever suppressed in any way and for which nobody was ever penalized. The penalties that were suffered, whether of exile or execution, were suffered after the people concerned had taken up arms. Now, they may have had an excellent reason for taking up arms. I am not discussing that. I think, perhaps, they had a pretty strong reason, but if you are exiled or executed for taking up arms, it is not the same thing as being exiled or executed simply for stating that you believe in the principles of liberty or individual rights or equality. The two things are quite different.

People can go around this country now, and do go around this country, criticizing our government very severely, making the most sweeping accusations—at the moment, perhaps, against the government in power—and nobody is trying to stop them that I am aware of. Nobody is suppressing them. But, if any of those people took up arms, that would be a very different situation. They might have excellent reasons, perhaps, at some stage or another, having found that the processes of democracy were completely ineffective. They might have some reason to feel they should take up arms, but taking up arms and expressing opinions are two totally different things. I think it is most mischievous and nefarious on the part of this lady to assert that "Les Patriotes," or their English-speaking counterparts, were executed because they expressed opinions in favour of liberty, equality and individual rights.

This whole document, by the way, appears under the heading, as I think I said a few moments ago in French, of "The Truth on Canada." That, to my mind, adds to the offence. If you have a whole series of misleading, contentious, and in some instances false statements which are headed "The Truth on Canada," then any seditious effect which they may have is merely heightened.

The next point I want to draw attention to is one that I find really a trifle absurd, partly, perhaps, because I am not aware of the alleged facts upon which the statements rest. But, anyway, Mrs. Callwood says—and this time I think I will switch back to the other language and quote her precisely:

[Translation]

I find it quite significant that the nine English provinces—

—which leaves out the province of New Brunswick which is bilingual, officially bilingual—

—should have decided before all else to change the name of the "Train of liberty" which they bought back from the United States. In the future, it will be known as the "Train of unity".

[English]

When I say I find this perfectly absurd, I was not aware there was any such train, whether in the United States called the Train of Liberty, or in Canada called the Train of Unity.

[Senator Forsey.]

But, assuming that the statement is correct, I can't help asking whether it isn't perfectly absurd to suppose that we should call the train here the Train of Liberty. Whose liberties are in any real danger in this country? Why should any province, English-speaking, French-speaking, bilingual, or anyone else, for that matter, charter a train to go across the country, as I gather somebody did, to talk about liberty? There is no particular urgency about that. But I can well understand that someone might charter a train to talk about the unity of the country. National unity is another thing. That is relevant. Perhaps it shouldn't be talked about, perhaps there shouldn't be a train hired or chartered to spread the views of anybody on national unity, but it is at least a perfectly relevant thing. To suggest that this shows a deep contempt on the part of English-speaking people, a deep contempt towards liberty and equality and individual rights, seems to me, to be perfectly nonsensical.

Then this article goes on to say that liberty does not form part of the Canadian vocabulary. Well, that certainly is a staggerer for me. I am now nearly 74 years of age, and if I had a dollar for every time I have heard "liberty" orated about by either English-speaking or French-speaking Canadians, I would not even desire to call Rockefeller my uncle. I would be a multi, multi-millionaire.

This is a most absurd kind of statement, but this is being presented to the French-speaking population of the province of Quebec as the opinion of a well-known and, presumably, well-informed English speaking publicist.

Then she says that we do not find this word or any allusion to any individual liberties in the Constitution of 1867. Well, of course, we don't. We don't find any allusion to the Prime Minister, or the cabinet, and we don't find any allusion to responsible government. We don't find any allusion to a whole string of things in the text of the British North America Act. There was no necessity to mention them. They were looked after in the main by the words in the preamble, "a Constitution similar in Principle to that of the United Kingdom."

The Fathers of Confederation never thought, and most generations since never thought, there was any necessity of saying, "Well this means, of course, that you are going to have a free Parliament, you are going to have a free press, you are going to have liberty of association," any more than they thought it was necessary to say, "You must remember that if the government is defeated on a motion of censure or want of confidence in the House of Commons, either it must resign and make way for a government of the opposite party, or else it must ask for a fresh election and try to get a majority in the new House of Commons."

These things are all taken for granted in the skeleton of our Constitution which we find in the British North America Act. It is simply the skeleton. The flesh is put upon it by custom and convention, and by legislation. So this is a perfectly irrelevant statement, but one which is calculated to give to the ill-informed the impression that in our working Constitution there is no reference at all to liberty, which, of course, is perfect nonsense.

Then the article goes on to say that the Canadian Bill of Rights is a document so foreign to our profound nature that the courts of the country do not recognize any priority in it. Well, I have under my hand here a judgment by Mr. Justice Beetz of the Supreme Court of Canada speaking for the full court, or, at any rate, for those judges who sat on the case. It is the case of Attorney General for Canada v. Canard. He sets forth there the principles which he takes to be settled by the decision of the court in The Queen v. Drybones, which make it perfectly clear that in fact the Supreme Court of Canada does recognize the priority of the Canadian Bill of Rights in all those cases where it can be shown to be properly applicable. There are cases where it cannot be shown to be properly applicable, and therefore, of course, it does not apply.

● (1450)

This is true of quantities of laws which we have. If we had passed into law, for example, the Maritime Code bill, of evil memory, then that would not have applied to a whole string of cases which might have come up on all sorts of other subjects. Always, even the most general statute has to be applied only in cases where the court finds it is relevant. This, at least, is my impression as a layman. Perhaps honourable senators learned in the law can correct me on this, but certainly this is the impression I have got from some degree of study of the subject, and the other is wholly misleading, and indeed false, and there is a whole long judgment of Mr. Justice Beetz, which I shall not quote, because I wish to spare honourable senators as much of my eloquence, whether personal or borrowed, as possible, to show that in fact the court does take judicial notice of, and give priority to, the Canadian Bill of Rights, wherever it is applicable.

Then we come to this: "Canada puts order and stability above honour. In cases of profound dissension respect for the rights of the citizen and the spirit of co-operation 'en prennent un coup'". I suppose "take it on the chin" might be a free, colloquial English translation of that expression. I think it gives the sense of it, at all events.

Then Mrs. Callwood goes on to cite a large number of cases—strikes, and that sort of thing—where force has been used by governments, both dominion and provincial, to put an end to them, or to repress them in some way. Well now, everybody knows that there have been numerous instances of the use of force in our history, in industrial disputes and in certain other matters as well. Nobody denies this. Nobody denies that there has been repression in the history of Canada—sometimes justified, I think, sometimes not justified; that is a matter of opinion—but to go on and say, as the article does, that this is the whole story, is, in my judgment, pushing the thing far beyond what is justified by the facts.

Somewhere else in the article—I do not see the exact spot here, though if I look hard enough I suppose I may find it—we are given to understand that there is no case at all in which dissident opinions have been expressed without being jumped on. I have the translation of the phrase here: "We stifle without pity the voices which demand changes." My comment, in a letter that I wrote to Mrs. Callwood, to which I have as yet received no reply, was, "So we have 'stifled without pity' the CCF, and NDP and the Social Credit Party? And the Civil Liberties Association(s)?" I think Mrs. Callwood has been very active in these organizations.

It is a travesty of our history to say that we always jumped with hobnailed boots on any expression of dissent from the established order. We have a long, long history of dissent—dissent which was not repressed. I remember a few years ago, and I think I mentioned this once before in a speech in the Senate, that my friend Dr. Graham Spry discovered that a number of university students, in the sixties, had absolutely no idea of—had never heard of—the CCF, the Progressive Party, the Winnipeg strike, J. S. Woodsworth, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. They had simply never heard of them and they were, he said, delighted and enchanted to discover that there was a leftist tradition, a tradition of dissent, a radical tradition, in Canada. Well, of course, there is, but if you read this—"We stifle without pity the voices which demand changes"—you ask yourself in what universe of discourse this lady moves. Where does she get her notions of Canadian history?

I would like to point out another conspicuous example of very strong dissent, in this case accompanied by an armed uprising, which was not "stifled without pity"; the creation of the Province of Manitoba as a result of negotiations between the Government of Canada and representatives of the provisional government set up by Louis Riel at Fort Garry, a provisional government which had actually taken up arms against the constituted authorities. If that wasn't an example of not stifling without pity the voice of dissent, I cannot imagine what was. I think it is necessary to get these things into some sort of balance. but any reader of L'actualité reading this kind of thing would have no idea that there was the slightest exception, let alone a series of major exceptions, to these sweeping assertions by this lady, and he would be inclined to say, "Well, after all, she is very well known; she has a radio program; she must have some education; she must have some knowledge of the facts; and she wouldn't make statements like this if there were any question of their being challengeable." I cannot blame any reader of L'actualité for arriving at that conclusion.

We find one or two other things here that I think ought to be spoken of with some vigour. For example: "Governments, both the national government and the Quebec government, are indulging in lies and intimidation rather than dialogue." Well, I suppose that whether certain statements are lies is sometimes open to a difference of opinion. I suppose that whether certain statements are intimidation is open to a difference of opinion.

For myself, however, I would say that most of the controversy that has been taking place between the Government of Canada, or representatives of the Government of Canada, ministers of the Government of Canada, and the Parti Québécois Government of Quebec, has not been at all a matter of lies or intimidation. There have been arguments presented very forcibly on both sides. There have been statistics spread out for the edification of the public on both sides. Each side has questioned the validity of those statistics. Each side has questioned the validity of the arguments of the other side. There has been a tendency sometimes to say, "When you make a certain statement you are really trying to intimidate us. You are trying to exploit the fears of our population." There has been a tendency on the other side to say, "Well, that is exactly what you have been doing in the opposition direction."

It seems to me that if, for example, you get a statement by a minister saying that there is no reason for any enterprise in Quebec to fear that it will have any difficulties under the provisions of Bill 101, that is a perfectly legitimate sort of statement to make. It is, on the other hand, a perfectly legitimate sort of statement for someone else to come back and say, "We do not agree with that. This offers very serious threats to certain businesses in the province of Quebec." If you get a minister here saying that the result of independence would be a lowering of the standard of living for the ordinary citizen of Quebec, that doesn't seem to me to be deserving of the epithet, or the word, "intimidation". It is the statement of a view held by a minister of the crown here in the national government, and if the other people choose to consider it intimidation, all right, but it seems to me a strong term to use. And when this lady goes on to say that what we need is imagination, goodwill and faith, well, of course, who can disagree with that? But she adds, "I see at the moment scarcely any manifestation of these qualities." She adds, amazingly, "I must say that we have heard for the present only politicians."

● (1500)

Well, again, I ask where in the world has she been living, because in Toronto itself in recent months we have had two great assemblies convoked, first of all, I think, by the President of York University and then by the President of the University of Toronto, discussing this thing, and as far as I know at both of these assemblies politicians were conspicuous by their absence. Certainly it was the publicity beforehand that they were going to have people, and that, of course, excludes politicians of any kind. We are scarcely human. We are almost subhuman, it appears, in some instances—"We are going to have people; we are going to have the ordinary people; we are going to have the grass-roots people; we are going to have experts, but not politicians. No, no; no politicians. But academics, and writers, and scientists, and all sorts of things."

But as far as I know the intention was to see to it that politicians would be very few and far between and, as far as I know, they were very few and far between. The discussions took place, again, as far as I know, with a great deal of freedom, without any attempt by anybody to stifle any difference of opinion, however strong it might be.

She says: "For my part, I see alarming signs that we are falling back into our traditional reaction in the face of the menace of change. We refuse to those who differ from our opinions the belonging to the human race." This is a rather halting translation of mine.

—Nous refusons à ceux qui diffèrent d'avis avec nous l'appartenance à la collectivité humaine—

[Senator Forsey.]

And, "We throw them all into one monolithic evil.

—nous les englobons en un monolithe du Mal.

Well, I think that is a pretty extreme sort of statement.

But now we come to the gem of the whole thing. She goes on about the lies and the intimidation, and then she ends up:

Je ne vois, au bout de ce chemin, que des prisons et du sang.

Now, that last sounds to me uncommonly like an admonition to the members of the Parti Québécois—indeed, the whole thing sounds like this, but that puts the tin hat on it; that puts it in a nutshell, to vary the metaphor—it sounds like an admonition to these people that, "If you have any idea that you can ever get independence by peaceful, legal or constitutional means, you might as well forget it. Our whole history is one of repression. Nobody is ever allowed to express any views contrary to the established order. At the end of this road I see only prisons and blood."

Well, the natural conclusion of anybody who reads this and takes it seriously is to say, "Well, if we are going to have prisons and blood, we may as well start in right now and use violent means. We will be driven to it eventually. Why not shed the illusions of democratic action, why not shed any illusion that we can do these things by peaceful means? Why not go at once for the short and certain route of violence?"

This seems to me to come extremely close to sedition. I looked up the definition of sedition in the texts of law and found that it ran, in part, as follows:

Promoting feelings of ill will and hostility between different classes of Her Majesty's subjects.

It seems to me perfectly clear that that is the tenor of this whole article, though I would add at once that I suppose a prosecution for sedition would hardly get very far because the thing is wrapped up in a certain amount of cotton wool.

But it seems to me dreadfully unfortunate, to say the least of it, that an English-speaking person of some standing, as this lady unquestionably is, should spread among the Parti Québécois, and its sympathizers, who are probably the main readers of this journal, this idea that the actual program of their own party—getting independence by legal, peaceful and constitutional means—is a pure illusion.

I cannot help feeling that this report will, for them, confirm what they probably have already been told by various extremists and pessimists in their own ranks, "It is hopeless. We have told you so before and now here comes an English Canadian publicist, a lady of education and standing, of some influence, who just proves to you that what we said was right all along. So what is the use of fooling around with peaceful means?"

Of course, the actual effect of this article may be fairly small, because not very many members, even of the Parti Québécois, will be prepared to jump into the camp of violence simply on the strength of this sort of thing. But constant dripping wears away a stone, and if you get this kind of thing repeated, which is quite likely, if you get it spread around, a certain impression will be left and a certain feeling of, "Well, perhaps it is hopeless," and misrepresentations of certain statements by the Prime Minister, I think, will be added. It will be said, "You see, she just confirms what we told you about what Trudeau said." Of course, Trudeau didn't say it at all, but misinterpretations have already been placed on his words in more quarters than one. The more you get of this kind of thing, especially if you get it apparently confirmed by an English Canadian of standing, the worse it will be.

I wrote Mrs. Callwood that I thought she had performed a very bad service, either to the cause of Quebec independence or to the cause of national unity, because while she talks about the necessity of goodwill and good faith, and all that sort of thing, she is virtually saying to the readers of her article, "You may as well forget it. It won't happen, or it will take a miracle to produce it. Here is our whole history, one of complete, absolute, unvarying repression, and there you have it."

I felt it was necessary, honourable senators, to draw this to the attention of the Senate. I sent around copies of the article and the letter I wrote to Mrs. Callwood to most of the French-speaking senators, but I thought it ought to be drawn also to the attention of the rest of the Senate as a most nefarious contribution to the debate, whether you call it national unity or the possible independence of Quebec. It seems to me exactly the sort of thing which should not be said.

I may add, finally, that if this article sets forth the truth about Canada, if our history has been one of unvarying course of repression of dissident opinion, it is rather remarkable that the author of the article is still at large. One would have thought that by this time she would be at least on trial, perhaps in prison, and possibly, to use her own words, "pendu," hanged, or perhaps, if there were such a legal provision, exiled for her expression of opinion, which certainly cannot be regarded as orthodox opinion but rather as strongly dissident from orthodox opinion of either the partisans of national unity or of Quebec independence.

I hope I have not trespassed too long on the time of honourable senators on this matter. I really do feel it is a matter of great importance, great potential importance, and one that should not be allowed to pass unchallenged in this house of, we hope, sober second thought.

[Translation]

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I think we must be very grateful to Senator Forsey for having drawn our attention to that article which recently appeared in L'actualité.

I had the opportunity to read that article. I entirely agree with Senator Forsey, but like him I feel that the adjectives he used this afternoon to describe this article were rather mild. I think that on account of the sex of the author, he gallantly chastened his vocabulary. Still I think it is important to comment on such writings in this house. We should remember that the article was published in a magazine with separatist leanings, but just the same we must prevent the dissemination of such pernicious propaganda and try to disprove it.

This is why, as I said earlier, we must be grateful to the honourable senator for having drawn our attention to that insidious article.

I do not intend to speak further this afternoon. I merely want to make preliminary remarks, because I intend to move the adjournment to take part in the debate at a later date.

However, allow me to point out this afternoon that the author of that article is a moderator on a CBC program in Toronto. I found that the article follows the trend of some artists and reporters on our national television network whom I had the opportunity to expose on several occasions in this house and in committee. You see the moderator of a program on the public network who shows no reluctance in taking the opportunity created by the present confusion in Canada and by circumstances jeopardizing the national unity to publish those stupidities and make such insidious propaganda.

I feel that we must, I say it again, denounce that pernicious attitude and take this opportunity to ask once more of the powers that be, that is those who guide the destiny of the CBC, to choose more advisedly—and far be it from me to attribute ill intents to them—to choose more advisedly those who appear on their programs. I am convinced that, despite the obvious talents of this author, it would be possible to find among our Canadian journalists someone who could be more honest with the truth than is the author of this article, especially, if not only to maintain the good reputation of the CBC and allow that crown corporation to fulfil its role as stipulated in its incorporation act, that of promoting national unity. It would be better for the president and authorities of the CBC to see to it that an end is put to the type of propaganda that is spread by those who host the programs of that national company.

Some Hon. Senators: They all are the same.

Senator Langlois: Now, I do have no wish to accuse everyone wholesale but, still, I feel we must see things as they are and judge them on their merits.

Honourable senators, with those few words of introduction, I move the adjournment of this debate.

On motion of Senator Langlois, debate adjourned.

● (1510)

[English]

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

VIOLATION OF OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT BY SOVIET NATIONALS IN CANADA—STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a statement has just been concluded in the other place with respect to a very important security matter. A copy of the statement will be available here very shortly. Would honourable senators care to hear that statement before we adjourn? I suggest we adjourn during pleasure. The statement should be here shortly.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 3.20 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Senator Perrault: I have received a copy of the statement completed just moments ago in the other place by The Honourable Donald Jamieson, the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The statement is as follows:

At noon today, on my instructions, the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs requested the Ambassador of the Soviet Union to withdraw eleven Soviet nationals from Canada for engaging in inadmissible activities in violation of the Official Secrets Act and, of course, of their status in Canada. Two other Soviet nationals who were involved have already departed Canada but will not be permitted to return. A strong protest has been conveyed to the Soviet authorities about these activities.

The Soviet Ambassador was informed that the Canadian government had irrefutable evidence that all thirteen persons had been involved in an attempt to recruit a member of the RCMP in order to penetrate the RCMP Security Service. Nine of the Soviet nationals still in Canada are employees of the Soviet Embassy, one is an official of the Soviet Trade Office in Ottawa and one is a member of the International Civil Aviation Organization Secretariat in Montreal.

[Translation]

The Canadian authorities have informed the Ambassador of the Soviet Union today of the discovery of an attempt by the Soviet intelligence service to recruit a member of the RCMP in order to penetrate the RCMP Security Service.

Thirteen nationals of the Soviet Union have been involved in this operation. Two have already left Canada and the eleven others have been requested to do so. Nine are employees of the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa; one is an employee of the Secretariat of the International Civil Aviation Organization in Montreal and one is an official of the Soviet Trade Office in Ottawa.

Not only did this operation involve a large number of persons but it had been elaborately planned, involving coded messages, clandestine meetings, secret concealment devices and the payment of $30,500. This unsuccessful operation was mounted by the Soviet intelligence service in April 1977. It has involved no compromise to national security.

[English]

The Soviet nationals involved are:

- (1) Igor P. Vartanian: First Secretary responsible for sports and cultural affairs, Soviet Embassy, Ottawa
- (2) Nikolai M. Talanov: Counsellor, Soviet Embassy, Ottawa
- (3) Anatoly A. Mikhalin: Official of the Soviet Foreign Trade Office, Ottawa
- (4) Vadim A. Borishpolets: Attaché (Consular Affairs) Soviet Embassy, Ottawa

(5) Vladimir L. Souvorov: Second Secretary, Soviet Embassy, Ottawa

(6) Vladimir I. Oshkaderov: Translator, International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), Montreal

(7) Yevgeniy K. Koblov: Clerk, Soviet Embassy, Ottawa.

● (1520)

(8) Gennadi V. Ivashavitch: Third Secretary, Soviet Embassy, Ottawa.

(9) Oleg D. Reztsov: Attaché, Soviet Embassy, Ottawa.

(10) Vera A. Reztsov, employed in the library of the Soviet Embassy, Ottawa.

(11) Petr R. Lillenum: Second Secretary, Consular Affairs, Soviet Embassy, Ottawa.

(12) Voldemar P. Veber: Formerly second secretary in the Consular Division, Soviet Embassy, Ottawa. Returned to the U.S.S.R. July 1977.

(13) Andrei V. Krysin: Economist, Soviet Foreign Trade Office. Returned to the U.S.S.R. December, 1977.

Early in 1977 two Soviet intelligence officers approached a member of the RCMP and offered him an unlimited sum of money to spy for them. This member of the Force had, on an earlier posting and in the normal course of his responsibilities, come into infrequent contact with one of the Soviet officials in this case. To establish the ultimate purpose of the Soviet approach, the member of the Force was authorized, by the RCMP, under carefully controlled circumstances, to meet with the principal agent, Mr. Vartanian, in accordance with elaborate instructions he had received from the two Soviet officials. Between April 1977 and the present he met secretly with the principal agent on seven occasions. The twelve other Soviet nationals identified with this operation were involved in different support functions including transportation, counter-surveillance and regular weekly observation activities.

This case proved to be a classic example of an intelligence operation, involving complex signalling systems, coded passwords, secret concealment devices, all for the purpose of arranging clandestine meetings between the RCMP member and the Soviet agent.

As an example, on different occasions, filmed instructions were passed to the RCMP member in a hollowed-out stick and a specially prepared package of cigarettes. The RCMP member was instructed by the agent to obtain information on such subjects as the methods the RCMP Security Service employed against Soviet intelligence services in Canada, character assessments of RCMP personnel and details regarding RCMP counter-espionage cases. The RCMP member in return provided the Soviets with carefully screened non-sensitive information or completely fabricated material. The fact that he was paid $30,500 for information of no consequence provides an indication of the importance the Soviet intelligence service attached to this operation. The important point for the House to note, however, is that this case has involved no compromise of Canada's security.

This Soviet recruitment attempt is nevertheless a source of serious concern to the Government. Its importance should be seen in the context of the unusual lengths to which the Soviet intelligence service was prepared to go to suborn a member of the RCMP. The case did not have any other implications for Canada's security. The evidence derived from this operation indicates that it was directed solely against the RCMP.

The firm action taken by the Government in this case will remind the Soviet Union of our determination to deter foreign espionage. The Government regrets that activities of this kind should be conducted at a time when there are efforts under way, to which both Canada and the Soviet Union have subscribed, to reduce the level of international tensions by overcoming mistrust and increasing confidence. Activities such as those I have disclosed to the House are contrary to that objective and represent a serious setback in our bilateral relations. This incident and the action we have had to take today will inevitably place strains on our relations with the Soviet Union. Nevertheless the Canadian Government continues to attach importance to Canadian-Soviet relations and hopes the Soviet government does likewise.

Honourable senators, I have, in both English and French, the Aide-Mémoire which was transmitted by the Government of Canada to the Soviet Embassy. I ask leave to have it made part of today's record.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(Text of Aide-Mémoire follows:)

AIDE-MÉMOIRE

Since December 1976, the Canadian Government has discovered three incidents of Soviet intelligence attacks against Canada and has taken action against the Soviet officials concerned. On each occasion, the attention of the Soviet authorities has been drawn to the damaging consequences of those inadmissible activities on relations between Canada and the Soviet Union. Despite these warnings, and efforts to encourage the development of effective bilateral cooperation, the Soviet Union has continued systematically to use some of its officials in espionage activities directed against the security of this country.

The Canadian authorities are obliged to draw to the attention of the responsible authorities of the Soviet Union the discovery of a new major intelligence operation mounted by the Soviet Union against Canadian national security interests. Irrefutable evidence has been accumulated that, since April 1977, Soviet agents have sought to suborn a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in an effort to penetrate the RCMP Security Service. This matter is of the most serious concern to the Government of Canada which wishes its strong protest to be conveyed to the Soviet authorities about the continuation of these activities.

The seriousness of the matter is evident from the intricate details of the operation, involving the use of thirteen Soviet nationals, including the wife of an Embassy official; the provision to the RCMP member of complex meeting and signalling instructions on film; the nature of the tasking given to the RCMP member; and the fact that he has been paid $30,500 cash during seven clandestine meetings. While one Soviet official, Igor P. Vartanian, First Secretary, acted as the major contact with the RCMP member throughout the operation, all other officials involved participated in varying degrees in different capacities, including support in transportation, counter-surveillance, both before and after scheduled meetings, and in constantly checking signal sites each Monday between April and the present.

The Canadian authorities are satisfied that the activities of all thirteen Soviet nationals involved in this operation have been conducted in violation of the Canadian Official Secrets Act and are incompatible with the status of these individuals in Canada. We are, therefore, requesting that all eleven persons identified in the attachment to this Aide-Mémoire and who are still residing in Canada leave the country in accordance with the following schedule. Those most actively involved in this operation, Mr. Vartanian, Mr. Souvorov and Mr. and Mrs. Reztsov are to leave within 48 hours. The remaining seven persons are to depart Canada by February 23. The two Soviet officials who have left the country, Mr. Veber and Mr. Krysen, will not be permitted to re-enter Canada.

Ottawa, February 9, 1978.

ADDENDUM

The following persons are to leave Canada within 48 hours.

Igor P. Vartanian
Vladimir L. Souvorov
Oleg D. Reztsov
Vera A. Reztsov

The following persons are to leave Canada by February 23.

Nicolai M. Talanov
Anatoliy A. Mikhailin
Vadim A. Borishpolets
Vladimir I. Oshkaderov
Yevgeniy K. Koblov
Gennadi V. Ivashavitch
Petr R. Lillenum

Ottawa, February 9, 1978

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 14, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, February 14, 1978

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS
MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve) has been substituted for that of Mr. Fortin on the list of members appointed to serve on the Standing Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS
MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve) has been substituted for that of Mr. Allard on the list of members appointed to serve on the Standing Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS
MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse) has been substituted for that of Mr. Allard on the list of members appointed to serve on the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS
MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that messages had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Lefebvre has been substituted for that of Mr. Harquail, and that the name of Mr. Harquail has been substituted for that of Mr. Lefebvre, on the list of members appointed to serve on the Special Joint Committee on the National Capital Region.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of Reports of the Anti-Inflation Board to the Governor in Council, pursuant to section 17(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, reporting its reference to the Administrator of the said Act of certain proposed changes in compensation plans, as follows:

1. Millar and Brown Ltd. and its employees, represented by the Office and Technical Employees Union, Local 15, dated February 3, 1978.
2. Bendix Heavy Vehicle Systems, Ltd. and its employees, represented by United Auto Workers Local 27, dated February 2, 1978.
3. City of Victoria Police Board and its employees, represented by the City of Victoria Police Senior Officers' Association, dated February 2, 1978.
4. Bonar and Bemis Limited and its Burlington plant employees, represented by the United Steelworkers of America, Local 8401, dated February 2, 1978.

First Semi-Annual Report of the Export Development Corporation on International Economic Boycotts for the period October 21, 1976 to July 31, 1977, issued by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Report of the Commission on the Costs of Transporting Grain by Rail, Volume II, dated November 1977, appointed by Order in Council P.C. 1975-873, dated April 18, 1975, pursuant to Part I of the Inquiries Act (Mr. Carl M. Snaveley, Commissioner).

Report on the Audit of the Office of the Auditor General to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 22(2) of the Auditor General Act, Chapter 34, Statutes of Canada, 1976-77.

Telexes from the Prime Minister of Canada to the Premiers of the Provinces concerning the First Ministers' Conference to be held February 13, 14 and 15, 1978, including the agenda for the meeting.

Copies of Report relating to warrants issued under the Official Secrets Act for the year ended December 31, 1977, pursuant to section 16(5) of the said Act, as amended by Chapter 50, Statutes of Canada, 1973-74.

Copies of Report relating to authorizations and interceptions under the Criminal Code for the year ended December 31, 1977, pursuant to section 178.22(4) of the Code, as amended by Chapter 50, Statutes of Canada, 1973-74.

Copies of Report of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting compensation plan between Treasury Board of Canada, Ottawa, Ontario and the group of its employees known as the Aircraft Operations Group, represented by the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada. Order dated February 13, 1978.

SAFE CONTAINERS CONVENTION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Senator Bourget, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report:

Wednesday, February 8, 1978

The Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications to which was referred Bill S-4, intituled "An Act to implement the International Convention for Safe Containers", has, in obedience to the order of reference of Wednesday, December 14, 1977, examined the said bill and now reports the same with certain amendments to the Schedule thereto.

These amendments, which are purely editorial in nature and which do not affect the substance of the Schedule, were adopted by your committee to reflect the rectifications to the said Convention made by the Secretary-General of the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization and referred to in a statement from the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization dated September 15, 1976.

A copy of that statement is attached hereto, together with the Procès-Verbal of Rectification referred to in the said statement, which sets out in detail the amendments agreed to by the contracting governments.

Respectfully submitted,

Maurice Bourget,
Deputy Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Bourget: Honourable senators, at this point I should like to make a request regarding the text of the amendments referred to in the report.

Because of the length and detailed nature of the amendments set out in the Procès-Verbal of Rectification attached to the report, I would ask that the statement from the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, and the Procès-Verbal of Rectification referred to in that statement, be printed as appendixes to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of the house. The Procès-Verbal contains a series of very detailed editorial corrections to the Convention that, I submit, are more appropriately suited to be printed as an appendix to, rather than as part of, the main text of the Debates and the Minutes of Proceedings.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of Statement from Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization, see appendix "A".)

(For text of Procès-Verbal of Rectification, see appendix "B".)

Senator Bourget: I should also like to point out to honourable senators that the line numbers referred to in the Procès-Verbal of Rectification are the line numbers of the original text of the Convention, as signed by the contracting governments, and do not necessarily correspond with the line numbers of the text of the Convention as printed in the Schedule to Bill S-4. In adopting these amendments, your committee wanted to respect the original text of the Procès-Verbal, which, of course, refers to the original text of the Convention.

It is for this reason that I have arranged for distribution to honourable senators of copies of the schedule to Bill S-4 with the corrections marked thereon in the form of printer's instructions. This will give honourable senators an idea of the nature of the corrections and their location in the text of the Convention.

I can see that honourable senators have already received a copy of this, and I think they will realize that there is no very important amendment. These are purely editorial in nature.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Bourget moved that the report be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

RETIREMENT AGE POLICIES

FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Senator Croll, Chairman of the Special Senate Committee on Retirement Age Policies, presented the following report:

Wednesday, December 14, 1977

Your committee recommends that its quorum be reduced to five (5) members.

Respectfully submitted,

David A. Croll,
Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Croll: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be taken into consideration now.

Honourable senators, with your indulgence I should like to say a few words.

The Special Senate Committee on Retirement Age Policies was appointed on December 15. Early in January I came back to Ottawa and I passed out word that the committee desire to obtain a director, some top researchers, a translator, and some supporting staff. The deputy chairman and I had already discussed the matter over the telephone, and on two other occasions.

● (2010)

We then realized that we could only make provision for two months. I had been advised by the Chairman of the Internal Economy Committee that funds were available only until the end of the fiscal year, which is normal under the circumstances. Moreover, we were advised that if Parliament were dissolved for an election, the committee would automatically be dissolved—no Parliament, no committee.

Matters have been a little different with respect to studies made by other than parliamentary committees. In any event, we had to plan for a period of two months, and so long as there was a probability of an election this year no long-term plans could be undertaken.

Since it was obvious that any study would take from a year to a year and a half, and special expertise was needed, it was not possible to make very definite plans. Therefore, we went about the business of housekeeping and organization. We could have remained dormant. We could let the matter rest for the time being, and wait for the new Parliament to reconvene in September or October, but that would mean an entire waste of two or three months. To have left this study in abeyance, with all the special interest there is in it at the present time, would have resulted in severe criticism.

If an election is called early in April, it will probably be for June, and the new Parliament will not likely meet until September or October. Therefore, we felt that we just could not stand everything aside, but must do something immediately.

There has been a change in the climate of opinion in the country, in the contradictions between the public awareness of age discrimination and institutional reactions to it that were surfacing. In the last few years, public opinion has radically altered towards age discrimination, pension adequacy and indexing, and those who once ignored the problem are now becoming conscious of its importance.

There are six organized studies going on at the present time concerning pensions and their ramifications, including retirement. There is one in Quebec, which I believe has concluded and will release its report shortly. There is another one in Alberta which is in process at the present time. The Economic Council is making a study of the problem. In Ontario there is a royal commission which is holding public sittings at the present time. The Treasury Board is conducting an inter-departmental study which has been going on for some time, and which may be finished in August, September or October.

We decided to proceed as quickly as possible because it is essential that we monitor each one of these studies that are going on to know exactly what is involved. If we do not do that, we will lose the time between now and when an election is called, and probably six months between the calling of the election and Parliament's reconvening. Then, additional time is needed for the summoning and inviting of witnesses. It is necessary to give them a minimum notice of 60 days, and it is more than likely some will require 90 days' notice. Therefore, if we do not proceed immediately, we will lose almost nine months in our study.

[Senator Croll.]

In addition to that, we need to find out what unpublished studies are available in governments and elsewhere and what the latest writings are on the subject. Moreover, we need to acquaint ourselves with the Washington scene. The Americans have gone through a process of study and have passed an act. In fact, they have the most recent and up-to-date experience, and are now arranging for further hearings. We have to prepare a questionnaire for statistical purposes and guides in preparing briefs. The questionnaire has to be prepared very carefully, because we need different ones for the automobile industry, the steel industry, the mining industry, multi-national organizations, manufacturing industries, and large, medium and small department and chain stores. In addition to that, we have to compile a list of possible witnesses from governments, farming and labour organizations, student organizations, and universities and communities.

If we are able to acquire a considerable amount of information we can use it to have research carried out with respect to questions that we can propose, and which will take some time to prepare. There is, as you know, a permanent research staff available to Parliament. When Parliament is not sitting, that research staff is not too busy. We can present the problems to them, and let them work on them during our adjournment.

With that in mind, we decided we needed a couple of people who know their way about. We undertook to hire, as chief of research, a man who is known to us, and who has been known to committees of this house for some time, Warren James.

Senator Asselin: Is it a matter for your committee to decide to hire a chief of research, or is that the responsibility of another body?

Senator Croll: Yes.

Senator Asselin: Would you explain it to the house?

Senator Croll: The committee has its own staff, and it has hired a person who will be in charge of research. He will carry out specific research, and will arrange for research to be carried out by others. I said that we had appointed Dr. Warren James, a man who is known to us. He worked with the Poverty Committee, and has just finished working for the Economic Council. He was available, and we engaged him to undertake the research aspects of our committee's work.

● (2020)

We needed another knowledgeable person at once, one experienced in this area, and who knows how we organize our committees, so we asked Senator Carter, who last year reached the mandatory retirement age, to help us out, and he agreed. He is a "workaholic", as honourable senators know, who can be depended upon to do a job and do it well. He is, without doubt, the very best man available for this work. It was not possible for us to take on anyone who would have to have the kind of job training that would be required. We wanted someone who was experienced.

This committee's search for retirement age policies is resulting in some very wide ramifications. We will be dealing with the compulsory aspects of retirement, and also, of course, with the question of pension indexing which is looming very importantly at the moment, especially as regards their adequacy or inadequacy, their portability, the splitting and funding of pensions, and the matter of private pensions. With the ratio of workers to the elderly beginning a long term decline, and with inflation not seeming to want to disappear, the question of who is to provide incomes for the elderly is emerging as a significant social issue.

We have built up a dossier of men and women, from which we will be able to choose the very best witnesses when the committee is able to function in the normal sense. If we have certain studies made during our absence, there is no reason why witnesses cannot be warned of the possibility that an invitation to appear at an appropriate time will be issued, even during the period when we are not sitting. We are fortunate, too, in that many of the personnel who are now employed in doing this work for other organizations will, in all probability, be available to us in September or October.

It is a tangled and complicated study that we are undertaking. I have confidence, however, that we will be able to do it justice, and we will try to accomplish as much as possible to this end within the next two months. There are so many committees meeting at the present time that it is difficult for a considerable number of members of this committee to attend its meetings, and the committee recommends that its quorum be reduced to five members. I ask the house to accept that recommendation.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Grosart: I think we should be clear, honourable senators, as to what report we are adopting. My understanding is that the committee is recommending that its quorum be now five members, and I have no objection to the adoption of that report. As to the remainder of Senator Croll's remarks, these matters have been before the Internal Economy Committee. I think we should be clear on what we are adopting.

Motion agreed to, and report adopted.

CANADA-UNITED STATES INTERPARLIAMENTARY GROUP

COMPLIMENTS TO MADAM SPEAKER

Senator Lang: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege, which is not personal, to report that last Friday and Saturday the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group had a very successful meeting in the United States, on which there will be a report later.

I just would like to say that the success of that meeting was due in large part to the presence of our charming Speaker. She created an atmosphere that few people would have been able to create. Our affection for her is well known, but more importantly we were glad to find that it is now more than shared by our American colleagues. May I take this opportunity to thank her for what she has done for the Canada-United States Interparliamentary Group.

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

AVAILABILITY OF GOVERNMENT POSITION PAPERS AND REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS—QUESTION

Senator Manning: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government if the position papers of the government and the provincial governments that were presented at the opening of the First Ministers' Conference are available at this time, and also whether it is the intention, at the conclusion of that conference, to make available a report of the full proceedings?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I do not have copies of the position papers immediately available to me; but as a matter of course I feel sure they will be public documents very shortly.

TRANSPORTATION

CRASH OF AIRCRAFT AT CRANBROOK, B.C.—CONFLICTING PRESS REPORTS—QUESTION

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, may I direct a question to the Leader of the Government concerning the recent air crash at Cranbrook? I ask this question because there are conflicting press reports as to what went wrong, and who made an error in judgment, if any. Does the leader know whether the Department of Transport has reached a conclusion as to the cause of the accident, or if it is going to have a further and perhaps much larger inquiry into this crash?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I must take the question as notice. It was my understanding that a preliminary statement was to have been made later today. I do not have a copy of it, but should it become available it certainly will be presented to the Senate.

AIR CANADA

AVAILABILITY AT TORONTO OF TELEPHONE RESERVATION SERVICE IN ENGLISH—QUESTION

Senator Lang: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a question but I am somewhat doubtful as to how to frame it. My question arises out of something that occurred about 11.30 last night in Toronto when I telephoned to reserve a flight to Ottawa today. Each time I dialed the reservation number shown in the telephone book I got a recorded announcement to the effect that the lines were busy and that shortly I would be connected.

● (2030)

After half an hour of that I looked at the telephone book that was lying on my lap and saw a duplication of Air Canada

"en français" and the word "réservations". I telephoned "réservations" and immediately a charming young lady came on the line speaking in French. I said, "I am sorry, but I am one of those stupid unilinguals. Could you possibly help me by getting me a reservation?" She replied that she was sorry, that I would have to call such and such a number, that there were two different numbers, and I was referred back to the number on which I had been getting a recorded announcement.

I said to the young lady, "I don't want to have to go back to that number. Could you please get me a reservation on the 11.15 flight tomorrow morning?" She replied, "You really have to call that number." I said, "Why would you tell me that?" and she replied, "Because I am obliged to serve 'the cause.'"

I was really quite shocked at that. However, I did not take umbrage with her. I said, "But you could get me the reservation, couldn't you?" and she said, "Oh yes"; and I had it in a minute.

I do not quite know how to frame my question to the Leader of the Government. I would ask him whether it is the policy of government or of Air Canada, a crown agency of government, to deny bilingual services to a unilingual ignoramus such as myself; or, in terms of efficiency, is it not possible to have bilingualism, in its real sense, available not only to those who are unilingual francophones but also to the majority who are unilingual anglophones?

Senator Marchand: You have air controllers, and we have telephone reservation clerks.

Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the information is not available to me this evening. Obviously, however, many Air Canada personnel are serving "the cause" of Air Canada extremely well, in view of the recent balance sheet of that crown corporation.

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

CBC COVERAGE—QUESTION

[Translation]

Senator Côté: Honourable senators, I should like to put a question to the Leader of the Government. Could he find out from the CBC why its English network did not broadcast live the First Ministers' Conference today?

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I am able to provide at least a partial reply to that question, in view of the fact that I spoke late this afternoon with Mr. Johnson, head of the CBC. Earlier, I had received a number of calls with respect to CBC coverage of the proceedings of the First Ministers' Conference.

The coverage accorded to the conference, I am informed, was arranged at a joint meeting involving both the English- and French-language networks of the CBC, Mr. Johnson and others. The two networks have devised differing schedules. "Live coverage" carried the first day in English exceeded the hours carried in French, and I understand that today there was more "live" coverage on French-language CBC than on English-language CBC.

As well, I was informed that yesterday when the English-language network failed briefly in British Columbia during Premier Bennett's address to the conference, the CBC English-language television service switched to the French language for viewers in British Columbia. This, I understand, evoked some comment.

I understand further that Mr. Johnson will make a statement on the subject of CBC coverage of the First Ministers' Conference either today or tomorrow morning. Apparently, a number of questions and complaints have been received by the CBC. I repeat, however, that I have been informed that the two networks have devised differing coverage schedules guided in part by their previous programming commitments.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Senator Langlois: Before the Orders of the Day are called, may I be permitted to remind honourable senators that, as announced last week, the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs is at present meeting in room 356-S to consider Bills S-5 and S-6.

FISHING AND RECREATIONAL HARBOURS BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Ernest G. Côtteau moved the second reading of Bill C-2, respecting the administration and development of certain fishing and recreational harbours in Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to move the second reading of the Fishing and Recreational Harbours Bill.

Legislation for the administration of fishing and recreational harbours is now provided by the Government Harbours and Piers Act, originally enacted in 1895, the government wharf regulations and various other acts and orders in council.

The proposed new act consolidates and updates these scattered authorities and gives the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment the necessary legislative authority to develop and administer the commercial fishing and recreational boating harbours in Canada. There are some 2,300 of these small harbours and wharves located across the country, with some ports comprising several wharves and other marine facilities.

The sections of Bill C-2 concerning development are enabling provisions which will allow flexibility in the future to respond to changes in the nature of the commercial fishing and recreational boating as they occur. This is seriously lacking under the present legislation.

Commercial fishing is an important resource industry with about 38,000 fishing vessels, employing more than 77,000 men and women, if we include the fish-processing sector. In terms of the national economy, it provides more than $700 million a year, including some $400 million in exports. The industry is especially important in the economy of the Atlantic provinces and British Columbia. For these reasons, the government will continue to be concerned about the welfare of commercial fishermen in the country.

A prosperous fishing industry is, of course, dependent on the development of a sufficient number of harbours which are properly located in fishing zones and provide a high standard of accommodation and service for the fishing vessels. The government will therefore continue to construct, maintain and administer these harbours by giving priority to these types of projects when allocating budgetary funds.

Specifically, this requires the planning and development of a system of fishing harbours across the country under policies designed to meet the changing and diverse needs of the fishing industry; upgrading and expansion of present harbours and the creation of new ones; and the operation, administration and management of these harbours to best meet the needs of the fishermen.

The general rise in the Canadian standard of living over the past decades has stimulated the growth of secondary industries such as recreational boat building and the manufacture of related equipment. In 1974 there were approximately 800,000 Canadian-based pleasure craft and 70,000 tourist craft visiting from abroad. It is estimated that these numbers may increase by at least 50 per cent by the end of the 1970s. Neither the private nor the public sector is adequately meeting the rapid increase in demand for marinas and launching ramps catering to recreational boating.

● (2040)

As a result, the increasing numbers of recreational boats is causing acute congestion in many parts of the country, particularly in Ontario and British Columbia, where the major part of our recreational boating is concentrated. In many cases, this crowding results in dangerous situations, adds to the pollution and threatens to despoil the natural scenic attractions of the environment.

The government, of course, is aware that outdoor recreational activity and preservation of the environment are of concern to all levels of government, and for this reason the new legislation provides for these special interests of the provinces and municipalities.

Government policies for the provision of marinas and launching ramps will be responsive and directed towards promoting their development, while emphasizing joint planning and co-operation with the provinces to meet the needs of recreational boaters with minimum disruption of the environment. In the preparation of this legislation, the government has consulted with all provinces and will be able to enter into cost-sharing arrangements with provincial and municipal governments to respond to the need for these types of developments.

Honourable senators will have noticed that the bill contains enabling provisions which will allow the minister to manage and maintain harbours under his jurisdiction, to make and enforce regulations and to prescribe and collect charges for the use of harbours. Within this authority, the minister will be introducing a number of new arrangements to improve the management of harbours.

For example, the Government Harbours and Piers Act limits the minister in the leasing of wharves to provincial governments, municipal councils, harbour commissions, shipping companies and railway companies. The new legislation will also allow the minister to lease a wharf to a fish plant or fishermen's association where this is in the best interests of the fishermen. The government will also be able to lease part of a wharf to individual fishermen for fish sheds or gear sheds where these are needed. All lessees are, of course, required by the legislation to operate the wharf or part of the wharf under lease in accordance with the regulations—for example, tariffs charged by a lessee must be in accordance with the regulations.

At the present time, the majority of our small harbours and wharves have no day-to-day supervision but are managed by the small craft harbour regional managers in each region. A small number, about 200, which is 10 per cent of our wharves, have wharfingers, who are appointed by the minister and derive their remuneration from a percentage of the berthage fees they collect. Their authority to enforce regulations is minimal. This system, combined with an inequitable fee structure, has resulted in ineffective and spotty management. The government intends to establish improved management arrangements, which will be flexible and responsive to the needs of the fishermen. Harbour managers will be appointed at harbours where justified by the level of activity. These managers will be selected from local communities, will undergo training to deal with the public and to understand the techniques of harbour management, and will be given the authority to properly manage their harbours.

A schedule of berthing fees already exists in the government wharf regulations. Unfortunately, these rates do not take into account the varying conditions of the fisheries across the country, and moreover are not equitably applied. The new legislation includes an enabling provision to allow the Governor in Council to establish tariffs for both fishermen and recreational wharf users. In this connection, the government has no intention of adding to the financial burdens of already hard-pressed fishermen. The government therefore plans to retain, for the time being, the existing berthing rates without change under the new legislation until such time as conditions in the fishery improve. When this occurs, the whole question of berthing charges will be re-examined in consultation with fishermen with a view to removing the many existing inequities, and to gradually phase in, over a period of time, a simple and modest system of charges which is fair in its application.

and will assist in the provision of improved on-site service to the fishermen.

The promotion of a vigorous and efficient fishery in Canada continues to be an important goal of this government. This requires the provision of good and properly managed harbours, so as to give the industry and the fishermen the harbours they need, when and where they are needed.

Honourable senators, I solicit your support for this bill on second reading.

On motion of Senator Phillips, debate adjourned.

CONFERENCE ON SECURITY AND CO-OPERATION IN EUROPE

VISIT BY PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION TO BELGRADE, YUGOSLAVIA

Hon. Peter Bosa rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, February 9, 1978:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to his recent visit to the Helsinki Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to have this opportunity to call your attention to my visit to Belgrade, on January 31 last, as a parliamentary observer to the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe. In addition to myself, the Canadian delegation consisted of Messrs. Skoreyko and Joyal, both members of the other place. One could not wish to be in the company of two finer gentlemen.

Before I speak on the conference I would like to share with you a thought or two on Yugoslavia. Yugoslavia is a country of 22 million people; it is known as the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The federation consists of six republics and two autonomous provinces. They are like our provinces and territories, only more autonomous and more decentralized. The socialist republics are Bosnia-Herzegovina, Croatia, Macedonia, Montenegro, Serbia, Slovenia, and the socialist autonomous provinces are Vojvodina and Kosovo.

The Canadian delegation met with Mr. Peko Dapcevic, Vice President of the Assembly of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Mr. Dapcevic gave us a brief rundown of the constitution and form of government of his country. We were informed that Yugoslavia is a highly decentralized, multicultural country. Basically, the federal government has jurisdiction over external affairs and defence. It would appear that all other matters, with some exceptions but including the issuance of passports, are the responsibility of the republics and autonomous provinces.

A fact that will be of interest to senators who felt that we have problems with bilingualism in Canada, is that parliamentary debates in Yugoslavia are translated and printed in eight different languages.

Of considerable interest to us was the fact that Yugoslavia has approximately 150,000 unemployed, who were described as people with limited qualifications. There are also approximately 750,000 Yugoslavs working in Western Europe and elsewhere. I thought unemployment was the scourge of our system. Some say that a socialist country with a communist government would not be faced with some of the problems we face. Article 159 of the constitution of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, a copy of which was given us as a souvenir by Mr. Dapcevic, under the heading of "Chapter III: The Freedoms, Rights and Duties of Man and the Citizen," states:

The right to work shall be guaranteed.

And Article 164 states:

Citizens shall be guaranteed the right to acquire a tenancy title to a dwelling in social ownership—

We were told that a person would have to wait about five years before he could secure an apartment for himself. I thought honourable senators might find these particular matters of interest.

The Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe is more commonly known as the continuation of the Helsinki conference. The purpose of the Belgrade conference is to review the progress that has been made in the implementation of the Final Act, and to present and draft new proposals aimed at expanding previous agreements. Before dealing with these points I should like to refer very briefly to the reasons that brought about this conference.

Honourable senators will recall the tensions of the late forties and fifties—the iron curtain, the Berlin blockade, the Berlin wall, Korea, the Cuban crisis, Vietnam and many other trouble spots of the world. The Helsinki agreement came about as a result of a genuine desire to lessen the tension between East and West. The word "détente" became famous and it is still an aim of our foreign policy. Of course, there is a difference between what détente means to the East and what it means to the West.

While the West attaches a great deal of importance to humanitarian concerns, the East, it would appear, would be happy at this time not to go beyond the Final Act which they want, among other things, to provide recognition of the status quo in respect of present boundaries. I will come back to this point a little later.

There are 33 European countries participating as well as Canada and the United States, both of which have a vital interest in the European situation. There are, in addition to the NATO and the Warsaw Pact countries, the neutral and non-aligned nations such as Malta, Yugoslavia, the Holy See, et cetera. All decisions are made by consent. There is never a vote taken. If there is a dissenting voice, the subject is either dropped, postponed or modified.

After attending the conference in Belgrade, I have a new regard for the efficiency of the other place. I would go so far as to say that the members of the House of Commons by comparison seem to be turning out legislation on an assembly line basis. Efficiency, however, should not be the measuring stick. It must be recognized that this is the first time in the history of Europe that such a positive approach has been taken to provide a climate for the pursuit of peace, and peace is the ultimate objective of the conference.

There are three main areas of approach which branch out in many directions. Each area with its related matters is contained in either Basket I, Basket II or Basket III. Basket I relates to military and political matters; Basket II to economic and related matters; and Basket III to humanitarian concerns.

Each one of these baskets includes other matters which I will touch upon very briefly. Let us start with the military. There are certain "confidence building measures" designed to reduce tension. For instance, there is agreement that upon compulsory notification of military manoeuvres involving 25,000 troops or more there shall be an invitation to observers from the participating states to attend. There is also a provision for voluntary notification of manoeuvres below that level.

In the fall of 1975, NATO issued three compulsory notifications of intended manoeuvres, each involving 25,000 or more troops, and a voluntary notification involving less than 25,000 troops. Months of suspense went by. There was concern as to whether the Soviet Union and her allies actually intended to implement the provisions of the agreement. Finally, notice was given in January 1976 of intended manoeuvres by the Soviets. Other non-aligned and neutral countries also gave notice of intended manoeuvres. A number of such exercises were witnessed by interested parties. Showing each other that these exercises are defensive in nature has the effect of lessening tensions. This, of course, is an over-simplification, but that is the general principle behind it.

Basket II relates to co-operation in the field of economics, science, technology and the environment. It is designed to promote greater trade between East and West, to reduce tariffs, and to improve communications and transportation.

By way of example, Austria had proposed the development of an inland waterway system. There are provisions for greater business contacts, such as the opening of permanent business offices and the publication and dissemination of economic and commercial information. There is a proposal by the Soviets, known as the Brezhnev proposal, which suggests a high-level conference on energy, transportation and the environment.

Basket III relates to co-operation in humanitarian matters and other fields. It includes co-operation and exchanges in the field of culture; facilitating international contracts and communications between authors and publishing houses; establishing copyrights; providing access to films and publications; co-operating in the field of education by promoting direct arrangements between universities and other institutions of higher learning; facilitating travel between participating states by scholars, teachers and students for the purpose of studying, teaching and researching; and broadening and improving co-operation in the field of science.

Basket III is, without doubt, the most sensitive subject to Canada because it deals also with human rights, family reunification, and human contacts which affect a great many Canadian citizens who have family ties in the Eastern European countries. This is very important to our government because the degree of progress that is made in these areas will determine Canadian response to the concept of détente. This is the area where the true intentions of co-operation of the Helsinki agreement are put to the test.

In conclusion, I would like to say that we are on the right road. While it is a long road, and while progress is slow, the objective is great. Confucius said that "a long journey begins with the first step." Let us hope that we will continue in that journey until we reach the objective which has eluded mankind throughout the ages. The Helsinki agreement can bring us to more stable and reassuring times.

• (2050)

Senator Thompson: Honourable senators, I wonder if I could ask the honourable senator a question. During his speech he said that the purpose of the Helsinki conference was, as I understood him, to give recognition to the post-war territorial boundaries of Eastern Europe. My understanding—and I would like him to clarify this—is that during and after the Helsinki conference the Prime Minister of Canada, who had attended the conference, stated that there was no legal justification for the recognition of the stabilization of boundaries. I also understand that the previous Minister for External Affairs again emphasized that there was no legal justification for the recognition of the boundaries. I understand, also, that Canada recognizes, and spokesmen for the Canadian government have recognized, the de facto situation of these boundaries, but will not give them de jure recognition.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, under Basket 1 of the military and political matters, the Soviet Bloc attached the most importance with respect to legal boundaries. These boundaries have not been legally recognized by us. I know that it is one of the most important planks on the part of the Eastern countries, to which they attach a great deal of importance and they want the recognition to be forthcoming. I am not really aware as to the sequence in the manner in which the honourable senator phrased his question. There are not any legal bases for Canada to recognize them. However, my understanding is that some West European nations have recognized the present boundaries of the states behind the so-called Iron Curtain.

Senator Grosart: I wonder if the honourable senator would clarify his statement that Western Europe has done so; who is "Western Europe" in that context?

Senator Bosa: The conference involves 33 countries, which are all European countries, the NATO countries and the Warsaw Pact countries, as well as the non-aligned and neutral countries. When I speak of "Western Europe" I mean the non-communist countries.

Senator Grosart: Is the honourable senator saying that individually these countries have recognized certain existing boundaries, or is he suggesting that in some way collectively they have said "we," whatever the group may be, recognize these boundaries?

Senator Bosa: No votes are taken when the conference is in progress. Every decision that is made is by consensus, so that whatever decisions have been agreed upon would have been agreed upon unanimously by all participating countries. I am not so sure whether the honourable senator was referring to the recognition of the existing boundaries, whether they have been accepted by the remainder of the European countries. In other words, the non-communist countries. Was that the honourable senator's question?

Senator Grosart: The point of my question was: Has anyone recognized the existing boundaries in Europe? Has there been any official recognition by any countries, or any group of countries exercising a sovereign capacity in that respect?

Senator Bosa: The purpose of the conference is to examine the Final Act, which they contend is the recognition of the existing boundaries of the Soviet Bloc. When I was there they had made very little progress and they had not finalized the conference. I do not know whether this has been given emphasis as of now, but I know that it is one of their aims of the Helsinki agreement, by means of which the Soviets insist that their boundaries be recognized.

Senator Grosart: Is the suggestion, then, that someone, some conference, the Helsinki conference or some other group of nations has said, to be specific, that Estonia, Lithuania, Latvia and the Ukraine are now recognized as being for all time, in perpetuity, part of a national group which is generally known as the USSR?

Senator Bosa: No. If I may repeat part of my remarks, at the very outset I said that the purpose of the Belgrade conference is to review the progress that has been made in the implementation of the Final Act and for the presentation of and the drafting of new proposals which are aimed at expanding on previous agreements. The conference has not yet ended; consequently, I am not in a position to answer the honourable senator's question.

Senator Grosart: I hope not.

Senator McDonald: Honourable senators, having had some experience, not in connection with the Helsinki conference but with other military and political organizations in Europe to which Canada and the United States belong, I believe that if we read the records of this house and of the Congress of the United States we will find that the Soviet Union, rightly or wrongly, believed that the signing of the Helsinki agreement confirmed the boundaries of certain countries in Eastern Europe. However, if my memory serves me well, and I am positive it does, at that time the Prime Minister of this country and the President of the United States, as well as many leaders in Western Europe, said that the signing of the Helsinki agreement meant no such thing. I believe we can find documented evidence that the heads of governments of Canada, the United States, Britain and countries of Western Europe have never considered that the signing of that agreement meant that they had agreed to the present boundaries in Eastern Europe.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other senator wishes to participate in the debate, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"

(See p. 323)

STATEMENT FROM INTER-GOVERNMENTAL MARITIME CONSULTATIVE ORGANIZATION

The Secretary-General of the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization presents his compliments to the Secretary of State for External Affairs of Canada.

He has the honour to refer to his Note Verbale A1/N/1.04 (NV.1) of 13 August 1975 with which he transmitted a list of proposed modifications to the signed original text of the International Convention for Safe Containers (CSC), and requested the Governments concerned to indicate before 1 January 1976 whether they agreed to these corrections being made.

The Secretary-General now has the honour to inform the Governments concerned of the rectification of the treaty to which he has proceeded as follows.

In the light of comment received the Secretary-General decided not to include in the rectification corrections proposed for the English, Russian and Spanish texts in respect of Annex I, paragraph 2(b) (line 5 in the English text; lines 6/7 in the Russian text; line 5 in the Spanish text), and in respect of Annex I, Appendix, footnote No. 9.

The Secretary-General incorporated all other proposed corrections in the signed original text of the Convention and drew up a Procès-Verbal of Rectification which he signed and deposited with the original text on 25 June 1976. In consequence, the Convention is now to be regarded as modified by the corrections indicated in the Procès-Verbal. One certified copy of the Procès-Verbal is enclosed.

C. P. SRIVASTAVA

15 September 1976

---

APPENDIX "B"

(See p. 323)

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION FOR SAFE CONTAINERS (CSC)

PROCÈS-VERBAL OF RECTIFICATION

English Text

Whereas an International Convention for Safe Containers was done at Geneva on 2 December 1972 and is deposited with the Secretary-General of the Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization; and

Whereas certain errors have been discovered in the original signed copy of the said Convention and brought to the notice of Signatory and Contracting Governments; and

Whereas all these Governments have agreed to the following errors being corrected as indicated hereunder:

English Authentic Text

(All references relate to the text of the Convention as it appears in the certified true copy)

Article III, para. 2, line 1—delete "either"; line 2—insert "either" after "provisions".

Article X, para. 3, line 2—delete comma after "adoption"—insert comma after "unless"; line 3—insert comma after "time".

Article XIII, para. 1, line 6—insert comma after "If"—insert comma after "request"; line 7—insert "has" in place of "shall have"—delete "shall" after "arbitrators"; para. 2, line 1—insert "established" in place of "designated"; para. 3—insert "determine" in place of "decide"; para. 4, line 1—insert comma after "tribunal"; para. 5, line 2—insert "any of the parties" in place of "either party".

Article XIV, para. 1, line 2—insert comma after "XIII" in place of "and of"; line 3—delete "of those contained in".

Article XV, sub-para. (a), line 1—delete comma after "accessions".

Article XVI, line 3—insert comma after "Secretary-General".

ANNEX I

Regulation 1, para. 1, line 3—insert comma after "place"; line 4—insert comma after "purposes"; para. 2(a), line 7—delete comma after "containers"; para. 2(b), lines 1/2—insert "-wall" between "end" and "and/or"; line 2—delete "Regulation 1,"; lines 2/3—insert "of this Regulation" after "paragraph 3"; line 4—insert "the" between "for" and "first"; para. 3, line 3—insert "-wall" between "end" and "and/or"—insert "values" in place of "value"—insert "are" in place of "is".

Regulation 1, para. 3, line 4—insert "those" in place of "that"—insert comma after "Annex II"—insert "values" in place of "value".

Regulation 5, para. 1, line 3—delete comma after "approved"; para. 3, line 2—insert "will" in place of "shall".

Regulation 9, para. 1(d)(ii), line 4—insert comma after "Annex II"; para. 1(d)(iii), line 3—insert comma after "Annex II"; para. 2, line 4—insert "-wall" between "end" and "and/or".

APPENDIX, line 5—insert "the" in place of "its"—insert "of the Plate" between "surface" and "in".

ANNEX II

Page 15, Construction, para. 1, line 3—delete comma after "purpose".

Page 16, (Δ) LIFTING FROM CORNER FITTINGS

(i) Lifting from top corner fittings, line 6—insert "or" in place of "and".

Page 18, 2. STACKING

Externally applied forces

TEST PROCEDURES, line 6—insert "fitting" in place of "fittings".

Page 19, 4. TRANSVERSE RACKING

Externally applied forces

TEST LOADINGS AND APPLIED FORCES, line 2—insert "container" in place of "containers".

TEST PROCEDURES, line 1—insert "FORCES" in place of "FORCE".

Page 20, 6. END-WALLS, line 1—insert "end-walls" in place of "end walls"; line 2—insert "end-walls" in place of "end walls".

Page 21, 7. SIDE-WALLS, line 4—insert "shall" in place of "should".

French Authentic Text

(All references relate to the text of the Convention as it appears in the certified true copy)

Article IX, para. 2a), line 3—delete "membres"—insert "au" in place of "du".

Article X, para. 2, line 1—delete "membres"; line 2—insert "au" in place of "du".

Article XIV, para. 1, line 2—insert comma after "de l'article XIII" in place of "et"; line 3—delete comma after "présent article"—insert "et" in place of "ainsi que sur celles".

ANNEXE I

Règle 1, para. 2b), line 3—insert "présente règle" in place of "Règle 1".

Règle 5, para. 4, line 2—insert "type" in place of "prototype".

Page 15, footnote no. 5—insert "de" in place of "et" after "admissible".

ANNEXE II

Page 20, 4. RIGIDITÉ TRANSVERSALE

Forces appliquées à l'extérieur

PROCÉDURES D'ESSAI, line 1—insert "Les FORCES EXTÉRIEURES doivent être appliquées" in place of "La FORCE EXTÉRIEURE est appliquée".

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 15, 1978

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Joyal has been substituted for that of Mr. MacGuigan on the list of members appointed to serve on the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Copies of Report of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, respecting compensation plan between The Eastern Provincial Airways (1963) Limited, Gander, Newfoundland and the group of its airline pilots, represented by the Canadian Airline Pilots Association. Order dated February 7, 1978.

Report of the Department of Transport containing a Statement of Leases granted under authority of the Government Harbours and Piers Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 18 of the said Act, Chapter G-9, R.S.C., 1970.

PRIVATE BILLS

MARRIAGE LAW EXEMPTION (JAMES RICHARD BORDEN AND JUDY ANN BORDEN)—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Senator Goldenberg, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Wednesday, February 15, 1978

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to which was referred Bill S-5, intituled: "An Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of James Richard Borden and Judy Ann Borden", has, in obedience to the order of reference of Tuesday, February 7, 1978, examined the said bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

H. Carl Goldenberg,
Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read a third time?

Senator Bourget moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

MARRIAGE LAW EXEMPTION (EUGÈNE WADDELL AND MARGUERITE BENOIT)—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Senator Goldenberg, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Wednesday, February 15, 1978

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to which was referred Bill S-6, intituled: "An Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of Eugène Waddell and Marguerite Benoit", has, in obedience to the order of reference of Tuesday, February 7, 1978, examined the said bill and now reports the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 1: Strike out lines 1 and 2 and substitute therefor the following:

"WHEREAS François Eugène Arthur Waddell (hereinafter referred to as "Eugène Waddell") and Marie Anne Marguerite Benoit (hereinafter referred to as "Marguerite Benoit"), both of the City of Montreal,"

2. Page 1: Strike out line 9 and substitute therefor the following:

"in what is now the city of Deux-Montagnes, in the"

3. Page 2: Strike out line 29 and substitute therefor the following:

"sons may not marry, François Eugène Arthur Waddell and Marie Anne"

4. Strike out the title and substitute therefor the following:

"An Act to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of François Eugène Arthur Waddell and Marie Anne Marguerite Benoit"

Respectfully submitted,

H. Carl Goldenberg,
Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Goldenberg: Next sitting.

● (1410)

Senator Bourget: Honourable senators, with leave, I would ask that this report be adopted now. The amendments are minor in nature, completing the names of the petitioners and correcting the description of Mr. Waddell's place of birth. Therefore, with leave of the Senate, I move that the report be adopted now.

Senator Croll: Carried.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Senator Flynn: Yes, to comply with Senator Croll's request.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read a third time?

Senator Bourget moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

SENATORS AS OBSERVERS—QUESTION

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. The leaders of all parties in the House of Commons were invited to submit a list of observers from their membership to attend the First Ministers' Conference which is being held in Ottawa. I would like to know if the government invited the Leader of the Government in the Senate to send some senators as observers? If not, can the leader tell us why the Senate did not receive the same treatment?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I attended some of the Conference sessions. Indeed, I was there for much of this morning. I am unaware that any honourable senator who expressed an interest in attending the conference was denied an opportunity to do so. It is my understanding that the initiative in this matter was very much with those members of Parliament who wished to be present.

Senator Flynn: We did not see you on TV.

Senator Perrault: I was there.

TRANSPORTATION

CRASH OF AIRCRAFT AT CRANBROOK, B.C.—POSSIBLE ACTION BY THE DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT—QUESTION

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government what further action the Department of Transport intends to take in connection with the crash of a PWA aircraft at Cranbrook, B.C., now that it has been established that the flight recorder on the aircraft was unable to retain an accurate recording because of the intense heat?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, as yet no statement has been made available to me by the Honourable the Minister of Transport. However, I shall reiterate this request for further information, and hopefully a statement on the matter can be made in this chamber in the near future.

SAFE CONTAINERS CONVENTION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Leave having been given to proceed to Order No. 2:

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications on Bill S-4, to implement the International Convention for Safe Containers, which was presented yesterday.

Hon. Maurice Bourget moved the adoption of the report.

He said: Honourable senators, I should like first of all to acknowledge the courtesy extended to me by the members of this house, particularly Senator Phillips, in allowing the consideration of this report to be proceeded with now.

Honourable senators, I should like to explain that the amendments to the schedule recommended by the committee are, as the report states, purely editorial in nature. I suppose that all honourable senators have had the occasion to look at the nature of the amendments proposed to the schedule. Many of these amendments are corrections in grammar and punctuation, and others, in the case of specific words, simply replace the singular with the plural and the plural with the singular.

There are some 56 minor amendments to both the English and French texts of the Convention. Since they are set out in detail in the Procès-Verbal of Rectification referred to in the third paragraph of the committee's report, the committee did not consider it appropriate to adopt a separate motion for each amendment. In fact, since these amendments have already been agreed to by the contracting governments, they represent a fait accompli. Our main responsibility is to ensure that the schedule to Bill S-4 accurately sets out the original text of the convention as amended by the rectifications agreed to by the signatories to the Convention.

It is for this reason that the committee unanimously adopted these amendments by a motion stating that the schedule to Bill S-4 be amended to reflect the changes in the Convention agreed to by the contracting governments.

Last evening, copies of the schedule to Bill S-4 were distributed to members of the committee showing where the amendments, if adopted, would be inserted in the text of the Convention.

Honourable senators, if you had had an opportunity to examine these amendments, I am sure you will agree that they are simple amendments, and I therefore recommend the adoption of the committee's report.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Petten moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

FISHING AND RECREATIONAL HARBOURS BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Cottreau for second reading of Bill C-2, respecting the administration and development of certain fishing and recreational harbours in Canada.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I should like to thank the sponsor of Bill C-2 for his introduction and explanation last evening. My appreciation would have been far greater had he not finished his remarks with an appeal for support of Bill C-2. There are many reasons for opposing Bill C-2, and in the debate in the other place, and in the explanation given last evening, we were given not one reason for supporting it.

Bill C-2 had its conception in a report of the former Auditor General who recommended that the fishermen begin paying for at least a portion of the cost of developing harbours and wharves. I cannot say that that particular Auditor General was a favorite of the government. Indeed, they often criticized him and ignored his reports.

● (1420)

For some strange reason the government has selected fishermen to be the first victims of the user pay policy. This is rather unusual when one considers that the government, very casually, wrote off $1 billion for the St. Lawrence Seaway, which was used by Panamanian freighters taking Volkswagens to Detroit. There was no objection either to the huge deficit of some $800 million at Mirabel Airport. The annual expenditure on small harbours of $30 million would provide only a parking space for one foreign-owned Boeing 747 aircraft at Mirabel.

The attitude of the government in dealing with fishermen seems to be that because they are Canadians they cannot go near the wharf until they have paid for it. It seems quite acceptable for one to run up a deficit in Canadian facilities if one is a foreigner; but if one is a Canadian fisherman, he must pay for it.

Small harbours have been neglected over the past 10 years. There are probably two reasons for that neglect, the first of which is that the annual budget of the Small Harbours Branch has remained fairly constant in the vicinity of $30 million, while the cost of repairs and new construction has greatly increased. We are now spending about 25 cents for every $1 we spent on small harbours 20 years ago.

The second reason is a bit more disturbing. There is a study and a plan under way whereby the government will reduce the number of small harbours by approximately one half. While it may make sense to someone sitting in an air-conditioned office in Ottawa to consolidate three harbours within a range of 100 miles into one big harbour, that sort of thinking overlooks the fact that small craft must fan out before dropping their nets and traps. One hundred boats cannot leave the harbour and drop their traps and nets into one area. They must spread out over this range of 100 miles, and that, of course, requires two or three hours' sailing. It requires two or three hours to go out, and two or three hours to come back. When threatened by a sudden thunderstorm, a small craft must be able to get back to the harbour in a hurry. A 40-foot fishing boat in high winds and a thunderstorm is not the most desirable place to be. Another problem is that in the spring of the year the ice along the Atlantic coast often blows in towards shore, and when that happens the fishermen have to go out and retrieve their nets and traps. If it is necessary to travel an additional 50 or 60 miles, the fisherman will be unable to retrieve his gear when it is threatened by ice.

It is my hope that the government, before proceeding with these changes, will consult the provinces and, above all, consult the local fishing associations.

The sponsor of the bill (Senator Cottreau), described it as a regulatory measure, and I would have to agree with that. Clause 9 contains several subclauses under which the government may make regulations. If there is anything the fisherman does not need it is more regulations. At present, he must begin the year by obtaining a licence; then there is a quota; and then there is permission to use a certain type of net or trap. If we add to that all of the possibilities provided under clause 9, he will need at least two accountants to wade through the paper work before he can begin fishing.

Bill C-2 is not only regulatory, honourable senators, but also, in my opinion, a tax measure. Under the present regulations, $1.5 million can be raised annually. Under the regulations provided for in Bill C-2 at least $3 million in fees and charges can be raised annually. These fees will, over a short period, be as high as $2,000 on the Pacific coast, about $350 in the Atlantic provinces and $200 in the province of Quebec.

I found it most interesting to read the proceedings of the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry of the other place, and should like to draw the attention of the Senate to page 7 of issue No. 5. Here the Director of the Small Craft Harbours Branch is explaining to the committee the term "vote netting." This is a term I had not met before. He says:

Vote netting is a system whereby charges which we may collect from the general public may be used directly for administrative purposes by the department and not be voted per se in terms of estimates of the government.

Honourable senators, that raises an interesting situation. The Minister of Fisheries makes the regulations; the Minister of Fisheries sets the fees or charges; the Minister of Fisheries collects the fees or charges; the Minister of Fisheries then spends it on his own administration. I doubt if even the Mafia could come up with as good a system as that.

I raise this question in respect of the Financial Administration Act. All public moneys collected are supposed to be deposited to the account of the Receiver General of Canada. I wonder why we should pass this piece of legislation when Parliament is being completely circumvented. Why should we give authority to the Minister of Fisheries to collect any amount of money he wishes? We will not be asked to approve the regulations or the fees, and Parliament will not be asked to approve the expenditures.

Quite recently the Auditor General warned that Parliament is in danger of losing its control over public expenditures. If we pass this piece of legislation without having a better definition of "vote netting," we are only increasing that danger.

● (1430)

The powers provided for seizure under clause 18 have caused me great concern. The average fisherman in the Atlantic provinces earns approximately $7,000 per year. Most of that will be made during a very short season of two months, when he is allowed to fish for lobster. If he has his boat seized—which may be for a number of reasons—and is unable to make the payment to the enforcement officer for use of the harbour, his boat can be held up to 21 days before it is released, and before the end of that period of 21 days the Minister of Fisheries may apply to the court to have the boat sold. However, the court is unlikely to hear the case within 48 hours. It could take two weeks, by which time the lobster season might have ended and the fisherman lost his opportunity to earn 60 per cent of his income.

The situation is even worse when we consider that his loss of income may have occurred through no fault of his own. If the boat has not been seized legally, what recourse does the fisherman have? Surely we should ensure that he has some means of applying to a court, such as the Federal Court of Canada, in order to get his boat back within a specified period. The minister can appeal to the courts. I find it rather strange that the bill provides that opportunity for the minister, but has completely forgotten the person who is supposed to benefit from the legislation—namely, the fisherman.

Bill C-2 provides for the appointment of enforcement officers, who will replace the so-called "wharfinger" under the present legislation. I ask the sponsor of the bill how they will be selected. The usual method of appointing the wharfinger has been for the party in power at the time to select someone—usually the poll chairman in the area. I hope that in this case the selection will be made by the Public Service Commission.

The minister, in the course of the debate in the other place, stated that the enforcement officer would have jurisdiction within a radius of 25 miles. I would ask the sponsor of the bill to clarify the search authority of the enforcement officer within that 25-mile radius. The Progressive Conservative members of the other place raised serious objections to the amendment with respect to leasing arrangements as proposed by Bill C-2. Those objections focused on the fact that one person may rent the wharf or harbour. I could perhaps accept this if we were assured that any fisherman who wished to use that wharf or harbour would still be allowed to use it at the same rate as if it had not been leased. In small fishing harbours, where one individual will be buying fish, you quite often find that he likes all 30 or 40 boats in that small harbour to sell their fish to him, so that he has no competition and has a monopoly on the price paid to fishermen. If one individual, a so-called fish buyer, leases a harbour, what happens to fishermen who are not selling fish to that particular individual?

Last evening, Senator Côtteau stated that C-2 merely provides regulatory authority. I would point out to the honourable senator that the minister in the other place refused to accept an amendment which would impose a moratorium on all fees, or all increased fees and charges, for a five-year period. This being so, honourable senators, and if the ministry does not intend to increase the fees and charges immediately, why ask for authority to do so in this bill?

I shall close my remarks by asking for a complete list of all possible fees and charges that may be levied under Bill C-2. Will the fisherman be charged for mooring, winter lay-up, and fish landings over the wharf? Will he be charged, as the sponsor indicated, for having a bait shed on the wharf? Before this bill goes to committee, I think we should have a complete list of all possible charges that are under consideration by the government.

Honourable senators, I began my remarks by stating that I could not support Bill C-2. I hope that I have given you some indication of my concerns about it, and I hope that it will receive a thorough study in committee.

Senator Grosart: I wonder if the honourable senator who introduced the bill would inform the Senate at this time whether it is the intention of the government, after the passing of this bill—if it is passed—to proceed with vote netting, as has been described by Senator Phillips. If so, is there any specific authority for vote netting in the bill before us? If there is not, and if the government does intend to use the device of vote netting, under what authority will this be done?

I would ask the honourable sponsor of the bill to answer that specific question, because it may be that a senator on this side of the house will wish to participate in the debate before he replies in full to Senator Phillips.

Senator Côtteau: I am sorry, Senator Grosart, I do not have the answer to that question. I would ask permission to take it as notice, and give you the answer prior to the third reading stage of the bill.

On motion of Senator Grosart, debate adjourned.

● (1440)

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

SECOND REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the second report of the Standing Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, which was presented on Thursday, February 9, 1978.

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, perhaps I should explain that this is really, except in one respect, a purely formal motion, because the criteria which we are asking the House to approve, and which the other place has already approved, I understand, are, with a single exception, what we have already approved for the work of this committee.

I discovered, however, that by sheer negligence I had failed to ask for the proper reconfirmation of these criteria at the proper time, and so we are now trying to repair that omission. While we were at it, we thought we might as well add the one further criterion which is there dealing with the rights and liberties of the subject which, in fact, we had originally intended to have in our list of criteria for the committee's work, but which got left out by some difficulty or omission that arose in the course of having the criteria transcribed. I think that they were originally drafted by our counsel and then redrafted very carefully and very beautifully by our late Law Clerk, Mr. Russell Hopkins, and in the process this particular one got left out.

It is, I think, one of the criteria adopted by the corresponding committee in the British Parliament, and we felt it was desirable that it should be inserted in the criteria here, a view which I think honourable senators generally will be inclined to accept.

If anybody has any questions about the insertion of this criterion, or about the criteria generally, I shall, of course, be very pleased to answer.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Senator Langlois: Before Motions are called, I would remind honourable senators that as soon as the Senate rises the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs will meet in room 256-S to consider Bill S-7.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, February 16, 1978

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I know you will wish to join me in extending a warm Canadian welcome to two distinguished visitors in our gallery today. I should like to introduce the Honourable C. W. Maguire, Minister of Tourism and Development of Industries and Resources, Turks and Caicos Islands, and his colleague, Mr. Herbert Been, Vice-Chairman of the People's Democratic Movement, Turks and Caicos Islands. These gentlemen are on an informal visit to our capital. We are delighted to have them with us.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I wish to associate myself with the remarks of the Leader of the Government.

A few weeks ago when the weather was poor in Florida, my wife and I decided to fly over to the Turks and Caicos Islands. There we met and received a warm welcome from our two guests who are now in the gallery. When I learned that Mr. Maguire was coming to Toronto for a meeting on Friday, February 17, I suggested to him that he visit Ottawa first, and I said that I would endeavour to arrange some informal meetings with senators and members of the House of Commons.

Senators and members of the other house have been most cordial in meeting these two gentlemen, and in discussing with them how co-operation between our two countries might be improved. Senator McIlraith and I had the honour some five years ago to meet Mr. Maguire.

I add my personal welcome to that of the government leader to our two distinguished guests, the Honourable C. W. (Liam) Maguire, and Mr. Herbert Been.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, February 21, 1978, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Honourable senators, before the question is put, I should like to outline for you as well as I can at this time what we can expect for next week.

Meetings of three committees have been set for Tuesday. At 9.30 a.m. the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments will meet to study the Green Paper on Public Access to Government Documents; at 2.00 p.m. the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee will consider Bill S-8, respecting fugitive offenders in Canada, and at 2.30 p.m. the National Finance Committee will commence an examination of the estimates of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

• (1410)

On Wednesday the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee will again consider Bill S-3, to amend the Canada Business Corporations Act, and there will be a further meeting of the Agriculture Committee on its inquiry into the Canadian beef industry when the Senate rises.

On Thursday at 9.30 a.m., the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee will meet to continue its study of the subject matter of Bill C-13, the combines investigation legislation; also at 9.30 a.m. the National Finance Committee will again meet to consider the estimates of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, and at 11 a.m. there will be a meeting of the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. There will be additions to this list as the week progresses.

In the Senate we shall proceed with the items now on the order paper. Hopefully, Bill C-16, to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Bank Act, will come to us from the other place.

It is the intention, subject to notice, to move—probably next week—the appointment of a special committee of the Senate to consider legislation concerning the northern gas pipeline. The subject matter of such legislation could then be referred to that committee in advance of the bill's reaching the Senate, thereby enabling us to deal more expeditiously with it when it does come.

There is also a strong possibility of there being some legislation introduced in the Senate in the first instance next week.

Senator Asselin: A "strong" possibility?

Senator Langlois: A very strong possibility.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

OBJECTIVES OF THE CONFERENCE—QUESTIONS

Senator Flynn: I wish to ask the Leader of the Government whether the First Ministers' Conference, which ended yesterday, reached a general agreement, according to him, on the objectives that had been set?

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the government considers that the recently concluded First Ministers' Conference was a success. If it is the wish of honourable senators, I would be pleased to report on the conference early next week.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Flynn: A supplementary question: Will that report include the conclusion of the government as to the pre-electoral objectives that it had in mind in connection with the conference?

Senator Perrault: At this time, honourable senators, the government is not obsessed with electoral considerations.

Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Flynn: Is that a change from yesterday?

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

USE OF FACILITIES FOR LIBERAL PARTY CONVENTION— QUESTION

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I have a question. I am not quite sure to whom it should be addressed. It really concerns the privileges of this house in general. I shall, for form's sake, at least, address it to the Leader of the Government, and he can refer it to whoever is in a position to answer it.

Senator Flynn: You have no choice.

Senator Forsey: It arises out of the now cancelled party which I think the Liberal Party was proposing to hold in this building. In reading the newspaper accounts of this, I noticed that over and over again they said that the Speaker of the House of Commons had given permission and then that the Speaker of the House of Commons had changed his mind.

This raised in mind the question whether in fact the proper authorities—presumably Her Honour the Speaker—of this house had been consulted, or whether the Speaker of the House of Commons had taken it upon himself to assert jurisdiction over the whole building. I should very much like some clarification on this from anyone who is in a position to give it.

Senator Flynn: A good question.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that type of question obviously poses difficulties in this chamber, because Madam Speaker is not in a position to reply directly to questions of honourable senators. I shall be glad to initiate such inquiries, and perhaps information in this respect can be provided to the Senate.

[Translation]

NATIONAL UNITY

SPEECH BY SENATOR GILDAS L. MOLGAT IN WINNIPEG— QUESTION

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, I know that our standing orders do not allow me to put a direct question to a senator who is not the chairman of a committee. I will therefore direct it to the government leader who could refer it to the senator involved.

[Senator Flynn.]

Last week, Senator Molgat delivered a speech in Winnipeg and according to the newspaper reports he clearly stated that when the referendum is held in Quebec, the vote will be in the affirmative, that is, the people will vote in favour of separation. Since the statement was made by a high official in the Liberal organization—Senator Molgat being a former president of the Liberal Federation of Canada—I wonder whether it is the new slogan of the Liberal Party in western Canada or the government which want to let it be known in western Canada that Quebec will vote for separation from Canada when the referendum is held.

I would like to know whether the government leader was advised of that statement; if he saw it before, whether his advice was sought and if he endorses it. Could he also tell us whether Senator Molgat will provide explanations and tell us where he obtained those details?

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, as a member of a very democratic party I should like to advise the honourable senator that members of our party are not under the philosophical and political strictures that may perhaps be imposed on members of the loyal opposition.

Senator Flynn: Oh no!

Senator Langlois: You asked for it.

Senator Perrault: Senator Molgat is fully able to speak for himself, and should he wish to reply for himself at this time I would support him fully in that endeavour.

Senator Flynn: I don't know if he should. You are taking a great risk.

[Translation]

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators,—

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, on a point of order, I must say that I had ahead of time given Senator Molgat oral notice that I would ask the question.

Senator Flynn: Agreed, but this is an exception.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I know the procedure does not allow me to do so, but, if the Senate will give me leave—

Senator Flynn: This is a question of privilege.

Senator Molgat: As a privilege, I shall be delighted to answer.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Molgat: I thank my honourable colleague and former collaborator at a time when we were both members of the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Constitution.

Senator Asselin: It was not much of a success.

Senator Molgat: First, if you will allow me, let me make my position clear. I am against separatism. I am convinced that separation would be most prejudicial, if it does take place, to both Quebec and Canada.

So, then let us come back to what I said in Winnipeg. That was last Saturday. I said this: We must not believe, especially those of us who live out West and to whom this is often repeated, that there is no cause for alarm, though we hear it often said in the West. Moreover, I am sorry to say that, unfortunately, we hear it often voiced by political colleagues of my honourable friend.

Senator Flynn: Can you name them?

Senator Molgat: Yes, I can name some of them. I should be delighted to do so. People very often say that Quebec, to all intents and purposes, will base its vote on its needs or economic advantages, and will make it a dollar and cents issue. I, for one, am not so sure of that. What I was trying to say to those who were listening to me is that this is an illusion, a myth, and that when the time comes to vote, Quebecers are simply going to decide to remain united to the rest of Canada, because it is economically advantageous to them.

I feel that this is much more an emotional issue, that we need to be concerned about it, and that we, as westerners, should stop complaining all the time about small things which do not really matter. I used the expression "pork and beans cans in both languages". Well, who is doing that? Unfortunately one of the people who was supposed to speak after me on that occasion, Mr. Dan McKenzie, the honourable member for Winnipeg South Centre, certainly one of the greatest separatist elements in Canada, because everything he says—

Senator Flynn: You have James Richardson.

Senator Molgat: Yes, Mr. Richardson, and I named—

Senator Flynn: If you want to include Mr. Richardson.

Senator Molgat: If you so wish, I could also include Mr. Richardson, because his statements are precisely the kind which will help separatists, and especially when Mr. Richardson states that the country should be unilingual and Quebec bilingual, he is merely bringing wood to the fire. That is exactly what I said in that case. Mr. McKenzie does exactly the same thing.

What I proposed in that case was to change our attitude, that negative attitude which is all but too common these days in Canada. On the contrary, let us be positive. Let us look at the advantages instead of constantly bickering over nothing, over details very often, over small happenings which are really not that important. It is to the advantage of this country to stay united, I am convinced. But it is not by saying that Quebecers will merely vote for their pocket-book that we will convince them to vote against the referendum. That is not the way either to encourage people in the rest of the country to participate in this great ongoing debate. I am absolutely not arguing that Quebec will vote for the referendum, nor do I think it will. But we must not get the idea it will come about very easily.

● (1420)

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I suggest that it may be more appropriate for the honourable senator to consider a notice of inquiry, if he wishes to have a debate on the subject of national unity and on statements attributed to various honourable senators. It seems to me it is rather straining the limits of the question period to engage in this type of debate at this time.

Senator Flynn: Perhaps it would be a question of privilege.

Senator Perrault: I would be interested in the views of the Leader of the Opposition on this subject. Certainly, we would support a notice of inquiry on this side should the honourable senator wish to introduce one.

Senator Asselin: Am I to gather that in future we will not have permission to ask oral questions in order to try to satisfy ourselves as to a situation which seems to be unjust?

[Translation]

But I would like Senator Molgat to answer my question as to whether he actually stated that if a referendum were held in Quebec it would be resolved in the affirmative by Quebecers?

Senator Molgat: I thank you because if it is not clear, I do want to make it quite clear. No, I certainly did not say that. What I said was that there was a danger that this could happen and if the rest of the country showed a different attitude that would indeed help the separatists in Quebec. But to say at this point that I believe Quebec would vote in favour of separatism, no I do not believe so. That is not what I said.

Senator Langlois: Your attitude is very wise.

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a very simple question of the government leader in the Senate.

[English]

Perhaps I should pose my question in English, because it might meet with better understanding.

Senator Flynn: Non, non.

Senator Robichaud: It might be better because of names and words I will be mentioning.

I read in this morning's press that a statement of a rather extremist nature was made in the House of Commons yesterday by Tom Cossitt. A short while ago we had to exile someone from this country who was at the other extreme—that is, opposed to national unity. The name of the person exiled to Cuba is Jacques Cossette. So we have Tom Cossitt and Jacques Cossette.

I would ask the Leader of the Government whether he could ascertain whether there is consanguinity or parental affinity between the two gentlemen, who would like to separate our country for obviously opposite reasons.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that information has not come to my attention, although I rather think the honourable senator has asked the question in a facetious manner. I understand that the honourable member of the other place made some allegations recently, but I know of no proof provided to support those allegations, unless Senator Robichaud has seen evidence which has escaped the notice of the government.

OFFICIAL RECORD

CORRECTION

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called, I rise reluctantly on a question of privilege. It relates to a report which appears in the Debates of the Senate for last Tuesday, February 14.

The question of privilege concerns a statement made by Senator Bosa, for whom I have the greatest respect, and a question that I asked arising from the statement.

The statement that was made by Senator Bosa—and, if necessary, I am prepared to produce proof that it is the statement he made—was:

However, my understanding is that Western Europe has recognized the legality of the present boundaries of the states behind the so-called Iron Curtain.

At which point I asked the question:

I wonder if the honourable senator would clarify his statement that Western Europe has done so; who is "Western Europe" in that context?

Senator Bosa replied and made several comments.

My point on the question of privilege is that the statement which I now assert was made by Senator Bosa appears entirely differently in the printed Hansard of last Tuesday. It now reads:

However, my understanding is that some West European nations have recognized the present boundaries of the states behind the so-called Iron Curtain.

That, of course, is very different from the statement made. In that form it makes my question meaningless and irrelevant. That is my point of privilege.

I hasten to say that I impute to no one any ulterior motive or intention to mislead the Senate in this matter. I merely point out that it is a matter of privilege when any change is made in a statement of a senator which affects the reply or comment by another senator.

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, I wish to thank Senator Grosart for giving me prior notice of his intended question of privilege.

I would like to say that I am sorry. I did not know that I was supposed to rise in the chamber at the first opportunity in order to correct my statement. As the honourable senator said, there was no intention of misleading this house. I am sorry that I did not follow the normal procedure.

[Senator Perrault.]

● (1430)

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

USE OF FACILITIES FOR LIBERAL PARTY CONVENTION— QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a question was asked earlier today by Senator Forsey with respect to a statement made by the distinguished Speaker of the House of Commons on the allocation of space in the Parliament Buildings for social events. I have had an opportunity over the past few minutes to review the record in House of Commons Debates, which is to be found at pages 2833 and 2834. May I quote briefly from the Honourable the Speaker's comments with reference to permission that he had granted for a social function for a group of Canadians to take place next week in these halls? He said:

That permission was granted, and I think honourable members will understand that it would not be my intention to withdraw that permission at any time, particularly close to an event, even if it meant a re-examination of the policy would have to take place. I think that would have been an abdication of the responsibility I had originally assumed, and would have been an injustice to the organizers of an event which would perhaps have left them unable to complete the arrangements they had in mind on the basis of the permission which I had earlier given.

The Honourable the Speaker of the other place went on to say that he had received a letter from the President of the Privy Council, and the letter said in part:

In spite of compliance with these guidelines, the proposed function has caused concern among some members and has placed you in a position of having to make a ruling on a question of privilege. This seems to me to exaggerate this matter out of all proportion in relation to the time the House of Commons should be devoting to the important issues before it. As I noted earlier, no final decisions have been taken on the location and the nature of the social event in question. I should now like to advise you that the members of Parliament involved are withdrawing their request to you and will choose one of the other alternatives which were also under consideration.

I read this only to point out that the Speaker of the House of Commons, in fact, rendered no decision with respect to the proposed function in the halls of Parliament. It is true that a group of members of the other place had requested him to allocate space for this meeting—this social function. However, they withdrew their request before it was necessary for any further possible ruling or action on the part of the Speaker of the House of Commons.

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I hope, nonetheless, that the Leader of the Government will find the information I requested as to this question of jurisdiction.

Senator Perrault: Yes.

PRIVATE BILLS

MARRIAGE LAW EXEMPTION (JAMES RICHARD BORDEN AND JUDY ANN BORDEN)—THIRD READING

Senator Langlois moved the third reading of Bill S-5, to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of James Richard Borden and Judy Ann Borden.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

MARRIAGE LAW EXEMPTION (FRANÇOIS EUGÈNE ARTHUR WADDELL AND MARIE ANNE MARGUERITE BENOIT)—THIRD READING

Senator Langlois moved the third reading of Bill S-6, to provide an exception from the public general law relating to marriage in the case of François Eugène Arthur Waddell and Marie Anne Marguerite Benoit.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

SAFE CONTAINERS CONVENTION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. William J. Petten moved the third reading of Bill S-4, to implement the International Convention for Safe Containers.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

FISHING AND RECREATIONAL HARBOURS BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Côtteau for second reading of Bill C-2, respecting the administration and development of certain fishing and recreational harbours in Canada.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, Senator Côtteau, who gave us an excellent explanation of this bill, has been good enough to inform me that he is now in a position to answer the series of questions I asked after Senator Phillips had drawn attention to an important matter of principle arising from the bill. It seems to me that Senator Côtteau's reply is essential to any further consideration of the bill, and with his agreement, which I obtained before rising, I now ask leave for Senator Côtteau to place his answers on the record at this time, if he so wishes.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Côtteau: Honourable senators, I am now in a position to answer the questions posed by Senator Grosart yesterday.

The first question was: Does the government intend to continue with vote netting? The answer is: Yes.

The second question was: Is there specific authority in Bill C-2 for vote netting? The answer is: No.

The third question was: If there is no specific authority in the bill, under what authority will this be done? The answer is: The Financial Administration Act, subsections 11(4) and 15(1), and the estimates for the fisheries and marine program, vote 5.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Côtteau for those answers which, I think you will agree, cover the questions in a concise form. However, they do raise the question of the suggested authority in the Financial Administration Act in the estimates, and in the appropriation bill arising out of the estimates.

● (1440)

I have some very serious doubts as to whether the department should proceed on the authority of vote 5, but I will say more about that later.

Of the two sections of the Financial Administration Act that Senator Côtteau cited, one appears to be relevant, but the other, as far as I can see, has no connection whatsoever with this matter.

However, the questions and answers concern a matter of very important principle which arises rather incidentally in connection with this bill; that is, the so-called principle of net voting.

This term has been surrounded with great obscurity and, I think, deliberately kept hidden from public scrutiny by officials, so much so that when it was used in the House of Commons committee it appeared as "boat netting." That was subsequently corrected. Indeed, when this matter was raised by Senator Phillips yesterday, Senator Côtteau was frank enough to say that he made the same mistake.

I mention this to illustrate that vote netting, which is a very important principle in connection with the supremacy of Parliament and the whole financial administration of the country, has been so obscured that when Senator Côtteau, the committee of the House of Commons and myself heard it, we did not know what the words meant.

The history of vote netting goes back to the time of the Glassco Commission, which recommended it in certain circumstances. These circumstances have been expanded to the point—and this is something of the utmost importance to the Senate—where a government report, endorsed by the Public Accounts Committee and only two years old, states that it is time to stop the use of this procedure, except in very limited circumstances. The acceptable circumstances do not include the use contemplated by this bill.

Before this debate is carried further, I think it is important that honourable senators have the appropriate part of this important government report available to them. It is entitled Report on the Study of the Accounts of Canada, and dated October 7, 1975. It was examined and endorsed by the Public Accounts Committee of the other house in March 1976 and, I am told officially, it is currently being implemented by a Treasury Board task force.

A major recommendation is No. 21, which reads as follows:

Net voting of revenues derived from outside the Government of Canada should be discontinued.

In spite of that recommendation, and in spite of its endorsement, we are now asked to approve a continuation of this practice.

In answer to my question, Senator Côtteau said that the department intends to carry on the use of this device, which has already been censured by a government report and the Public Accounts Committee of the House of Commons.

Documents such as this are subject to various interpretations. Therefore, I ask leave to have the relevant part of the report, pages 142 to 146 inclusive, printed as an appendix to Hansard of today so that honourable senators will be in a position to assess the validity, or otherwise, of the remarks I shall be making subsequently.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix, p. 345.)

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to conclude my remarks at this particular time, but to move that the debate be adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate. This will provide Senator Phillips and me with more time in which to examine the authorities cited for the continuation of this procedure.

In addition, there are other matters arising out of Senator Phillips' thorough examination of the bill. He had brought these to my attention and asked that I make reference to them. One, for example, is the most extraordinary situation where there will be a ministerial police force. This police force will have no responsibility whatever to the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General. It will be hired by and paid by the minister, and will be a police force with power to lay charges leading to imprisonment and fines.

Another point is whether it is in the public interest for a minister to be able to hire hundreds of people without any reference to the Public Service Commission, particularly in view of the fact that when the matter was questioned one of the reasons given was that public service benefits would not have to be paid.

These are points that Senator Phillips has brought to my attention. Senator Côtteau has told me that if this bill receives second reading he intends to refer it to the appropriate committee, and, of course, these matters will be raised in committee.

On motion of Senator Grosart, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, February 21, at 8 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 344)

NET VOTING AND COST RECOVERY

(EXTRACT FROM REPORT ON THE STUDY OF THE ACCOUNTS OF CANADA)

Parliament normally appropriates funds for expenditure on a gross basis; any revenue derived from the provision of services is ordinarily not available to departmental management to extend or improve the services except by specific action of Parliament. A direct relationship between expenditures for a service and particular revenues can seldom be established. There are, however, a few instances where expenditures and revenues can be linked, and gradually over the years the practice of permitting the netting of certain revenues against expenditures has been introduced. By the early 1960's there were 31 such net appropriations approved by Parliament.

In 1962, the Report of the Royal Commission on Government Organization (Glassco) recommended the extension of the practice of net voting. It was the opinion of the Commissioners at the time that:

"control would not be lost by either Parliament or the Executive if all vote and allotment controls were to be based on net, rather than the gross cost of services, provided the revenue is directly derived from the provision of the service optional to the user".

The Glassco Commission in recommending in favour of the net voting practice did so on the basis that parliamentary control would not suffer provided that revenue is directly derived from the provision of a service optional to the user. The basis for this view was that consumer demand would control the expansion (or contraction) of such services and Parliament needed to be concerned only where the charge was not of an optional nature.

The purposes for this recommendation were primarily to:

- provide departmental management with incentive to increase non-tax revenue; and
- encourage managers to charge a fair price for services for which the public was willing to pay.

The facts demonstrate, however, that there is generally little relationship between the revenue credited to votes and corresponding expenditures. Certain revenues, for example fines and penalties, represent charges which are not of an optional nature. In other cases, there is no real option for a user to refrain from using a service which only the government provides. Hence the conditions recognized by the Glassco Commission rarely apply. The effect is not to give management the incentive that the Glassco Commission envisaged, but rather, if revenues are estimated conservatively, to create a fund for financing unanticipated requirements.

The facts indicate that:

- management has been little concerned with obtaining financial information that would permit it to know and control the relationship between revenue and expenditure;
- the introduction of net voting has not had a major impact on rates charged for services; and
- increased charges for services appear in practice not to be within managerial discretion.

Most departments operating on a net voting basis do not apply the practice internally. Gross budgets are approved for individual managers, and revenues are controlled centrally for allocation as and when required. This means that responsibility centre managers are entering into commitments as if revenues had already been realized. Because revenues are estimated conservatively, this procedure does not generally lead to over-spending of appropriations, but it is obviously questionable whether, as practised, net voting provides any real management incentive.

Most appropriations are now on a gross basis because most government programs are financed out of general tax revenues. Gross appropriations ensure that each service competes equitably for available resources. Net voting is an attempt to introduce a quasi-commercial practice into the resource allocation process. It assumes that a program has prior call on revenues derived therefrom and the service grows or contracts in relation to its revenue-earning capacity. Because departmental accounting in most cases does not result in revenues and related expenditures being compared, it is not possible to determine whether programs do in fact contract where revenues fail to materialize. Further, since there is little consistency in the application of net voting and similar types of revenue are often treated differently even within a single department, net voting as presently practised may be distorting, rather than improving, resource allocation decisions.

Although Treasury Board places all revenues in excess of 125 percent of those estimated under separate allotment control, the Auditor General has proposed that, where authority is provided for the spending of revenue, three figures—estimated gross expenditure, estimated revenue and net amount appropriated—should appear in the appropriation itself and the amount of revenue used to supplement the net amount appropriated should be limited to the estimated revenue shown in the appropriation.

Consideration was given to retaining net voting in the form proposed by the Auditor General in order to facilitate resource allocation since it would make expenditures contingent upon generation of revenue. Departments, however, are not likely to favour an arrangement whereby they are penalized if revenues fall short, but where they derive no benefits if they exceed the amounts forecast.

There is one form of net voting that should be continued. In the previous section of this chapter, it was indicated that net voting practices have permitted more accurate identification of program costs through the device of charging a benefitting program for services provided to it and of crediting recoveries to the servicing program. This practice does not alter the total expenditure authority granted by Parliament, but only its distribution among programs. Generally, this type of net voting relating to intragovernmental services appears to be advantageous since it results in a more accurate display of program costs. However, such recoveries should be restricted to actual incremental expenditures, and there should be no recovery of fixed departmental costs or of imputed costs not paid out of the current appropriation since such practices undermine Parliament's intention of specifying the purposes for which funds can be used in appropriations. Under this restricted interpretation, there should be no need for either Parliament or Treasury Board to restrict the amounts recovered to those shown in the Estimates.

Recovery of incremental expenditures will be appropriate for those programs where the services provided are incidental to the main purpose of the program. Where the main purpose of a program is to provide common services to other departments and to other programs, recovery of only incremental expenditures is obviously not satisfactory. In these circumstances, a fund authority should be obtained since this permits full cost recovery. The use of funds for this purpose is discussed in the next chapter of this report.

This limitation of net voting may seem to reduce the incentive of management to maximize non-tax revenue, but this would not be the case if departments generating additional revenues receive proper consideration when they request additional spending authority. "Where there is, in fact, a close relationship between expenditures and revenues, departments should have little difficulty in justifying their requests for expenditure authority. To believe otherwise is to cast doubt upon the efficacy of the whole resource allocation process."

Recommendation 21—Net voting of revenues derived from outside the Government of Canada should be discontinued.

Recommendation 22—Amounts recovered from other appropriations should continue to be net voted but such recoveries should be restricted to incremental expenditures.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, February 21, 1978

The Senate met at 8 p.m., Hon. John M. Macdonald, Speaker pro tem, in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Langlois tabled:

National Capital Fund Budget of the National Capital Commission for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1978, pursuant to section 70(2) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970, as approved by Order in Council P.C. 1978-75, dated January 12, 1978.

Copies of a National Energy Board report entitled "Statement of Position regarding Selection of Pipe for the Whitehorse, Yukon to Caroline, Alberta segment of the Foothills Pipeline System".

Report of the Superintendent of Insurance on the administration of the Investment Companies Act, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 27(1) of the said Act, Chapter 33, Statutes of Canada, 1970-71-72.

Report on operations under the Regional Development Incentives Act for the month of November 1977, pursuant to section 16 of the said Act, Chapter R-3, R.S.C., 1970.

Agreement, dated February 20, 1978, between the Government of Canada and the Government of Quebec concerning co-operation on immigration matters and on the selection of foreign nationals wishing to settle permanently or temporarily in Quebec.

Letter of Agreement, dated February 20, 1978, between the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia concerning the establishment of a joint Federal-Provincial Immigration Committee to assure continuing co-operation between the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission and the Province in matters of immigration, demography, and employment relating to immigrants, foreign temporary workers and students.

FUGITIVE OFFENDERS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Senator Goldenberg, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-8, respecting fugitive offenders in Canada, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator McIlraith moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT PROPOSALS

REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS PRESENTED

Senator Goldenberg, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Tuesday, February 21, 1978

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to which was referred the document entitled "Proposals to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms, errors and other matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, and other Acts subsequent to 1970", tabled in the Senate on Thursday, February 2, 1978, has in obedience to the Order of Reference of that date, examined the said document and now reports the same with the recommendation that the document be amended by adding thereto the following:

1. Canadian Human Rights Act:

"The definition "appropriate Minister" in section 49 of the Canadian Human Rights Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"appropriate Minister", in relation to a government institution, means

(a) the member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada presiding over that institution or through which that institution reports to Parliament, or

(b) where there is no member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada as described in paragraph (a), the person designated by order in council pursuant to this paragraph and for the purposes of this Part to be the appropriate Minister for that institution;"

● (2010)

2. Citizenship Act:

"Subsection 20(2) of the Citizenship Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(2) Notwithstanding anything in this Act, but subject to the Criminal Records Act, a person shall not be granted citizenship under section 5 or subsection 10(1) or administered the oath of citizenship if

(a) during the three-year period immediately preceding the date of his application, or

(b) during the period between the date of his application and the date that he would otherwise be granted citizenship or administered the oath of citizenship

he has been convicted of an offence under subsection 28(1) or (2) or of an indictable offence under any Act of Parliament."

3. Small Loans Act:

"(1) The definition "loan" in section 2 of the Small Loans Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

" "loan" means a loan made by a money-lender of not more than fifteen hundred dollars and includes the consideration for a wage assignment; and if, after deducting all payments, whether on account of interest, expenses or principal, made by the borrower to the money-lender in respect of that loan at or about the same time as the loan is made, the amount retained by the borrower is fifteen hundred dollars or less, the transaction or transactions shall be deemed to have resulted in a loan of the amount so retained by the borrower notwithstanding that nominally a loan for a larger sum has been made;"

(2) Subsection (1) shall apply to all loans made on or after January 1, 1956.

Your committee also recommends that the said document be amended by striking out clause 21 on page 15 and substituting the following:

"21. Section 3 of the Tax Review Board Act is amended by adding thereto, immediately after subsection (1) thereof, the following subsections:

"(1.1) A person is not eligible to continue to hold office as a member of the Board unless, within sixty days after he is appointed to hold office and thereafter while he holds office, he resides in the National Capital Region described in the schedule to the National Capital Act or within forty kilometres thereof.

(1.2) Subsection (1.1) does not apply to a person who holds office as a member of the Board and who does not reside in the National Capital Region as described in subsection (1.1) prior to the coming into force of that subsection."

Respectfully submitted,

H. Carl Goldenberg,
Chairman.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Goldenberg moved that the report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

[Senator Goldenberg.]

FISHING AND RECREATIONAL HARBOURS BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, February 16, 1978, the debate on the motion of Senator Côtteau for second reading of Bill C-2 respecting the administration and development of certain fishing and recreational harbours in Canada.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, when the Senate adjourned its last sitting, I had made some preliminary remarks on this bill arising out of some comments on the principle of the bill made by Senator Phillips, and an answer given on Thursday by Senator Côtteau to some questions which I had asked him as the sponsor of the bill. The main reason for adjourning the debate at that time was so that I could look up some references to the Financial Administration Act and the main estimates that Senator Côtteau had made in his reply.

The main point I was dealing with at that time was that raised originally by Senator Phillips about the device known as "vote netting" or "net voting." As I said at that time, this is an obscure device, so much so that it has appeared as "boat netting" in committee proceedings of the House of Commons, and it has appeared as "vote metting" and as "net voting" in our own Hansard, and so on. That indicates that this is an obscure device to which I am calling the attention of the Senate, following Senator Phillips' original remarks.

The main point being made at this time is that the department has indicated that it intends to carry on the expenditure of public funds by this device, in spite of the fact that there is a report, which is in our proceedings of last Thursday, a government report, saying that this device should be discontinued, that the Public Accounts Committee of the other place has approved that report, and that the Treasury Board has stated that this device should be discontinued in the type of use that is contemplated by the department if this bill passes.

The point, of course, that I am presenting to the Senate is whether it would make sense for the Senate, under these circumstances, to pass this bill without amendment when we are aware that the department, under the authority that will be given to it by the Senate and the House of Commons, will carry on a device which has already been disagreed with, and which, according to the information I have, is being phased out as fast as it can be by a task force at Treasury Board. That is the issue being presented to the Senate at this time.

Perhaps I should attempt to explain what vote netting is. There was very little reference to it in the other place, which is one of the reasons I think this is an important issue for the Senate to deal with. The principle seems to have been completely overlooked. There was only a very casual reference, and in response to that casual reference an official of the department which would administer this bill, Mr. W. A. Reid, whose title is Director, Small Craft Harbours Branch, Department of Fisheries and the Environment, which is the department concerned, gave this definition:

Vote netting is a system whereby charges which we [the department] may collect from the general public may be used directly for administrative purposes by the department and not be voted per se in terms of estimates by the government.

I presume he meant estimates presented by the government, not estimates voted by the government. In response to a question by a member of the committee, "In other words, it is not taken into the Consolidated Revenue Fund?" Mr. Reid replied:

Precisely. We are able to spend the money we collect rather than it going into the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

That is what we are dealing with in this question of the principle of whether vote netting should be continued by the department as a result of the passage of this bill.

The government report, which appears as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of Thursday last, deals exhaustively with this principle. May I offer honourable senators just a few quotations? The report begins by saying:

Parliament normally appropriates funds for expenditure on a gross basis; any revenue derived from the provision of services is ordinarily not available to departmental management to extend or improve the service except by specific action of Parliament.

● (2020)

In reply to my question, Senator Côtte made it clear that the department intends to carry on with this device, and that it is not provided for in any way in the bill before us.

This report, entitled Report on the Study of the Accounts of Canada, published in October, 1975, was examined and endorsed by the Public Accounts Committee of the other house in March 1976. It goes on to state:

Most appropriations are now on a gross basis because most government programs are financed out of general tax revenues. Gross appropriations ensure that each service competes equitably for available resources.

The report further states:

Further, since there is little consistency in the application of net voting and similar types of revenue are often treated differently even within a single department, net voting as presently practised may be distorting, rather than improving, resource allocation decisions.

The report again states:

However, such recoveries—

And here the report is speaking of the kinds of recoveries that would be covered in this bill.

—should be restricted to actual incremental expenditures, and there should be no recovery of fixed departmental costs or of imputed costs not paid out of the current appropriation since such practices undermine Parliament's intention of specifying the purposes for which funds can be used in appropriations.

The report further states:

"Where there is, in fact, a close relationship between expenditures and revenues, departments should have little difficulty in justifying their requests for expenditure authority. To believe otherwise is to cast doubt upon the efficacy of the whole resource allocation process."

And, finally, Recommendation 21 reads as follows:

Net voting of revenues derived from outside the Government of Canada should be discontinued.

The then Secretary to the Treasury Board, Mr. G. F. Osbaldeston, who is well known to the members of the Finance Committee, made the following statement to the Commons committee:

This practice, which is called net voting, was designed to create a greater incentive for management to increase nontax revenues. It can result in some revenues' being excluded from the normal resource-allocation processes of both the Treasury Board and of Parliament, particularly where more revenue is earned than was forecast and the excess is thus available to finance contingency items that were clearly not included in the estimates.

The practice of net voting is contrary to the traditional method of voting funds on a gross basis and it is proposed that it be discontinued, except where the revenue involves a transfer between two appropriations.

This is not the case, of course, with the use of net voting that might result from the passage of this bill without amendment.

The issue which arises, honourable senators, is one of principle. It is in no way a partisan principle. It is one that goes to the heart of the whole business of parliamentary control of expenditures and the parliamentary stamp of approval on specific expenditures which, of course, is short circuited by this particular device. It is a principle concerning the handling of public funds, and the question which arises is whether by implication—that is by doing nothing about this principle in our disposal of this bill—the Senate should actually endorse the continued use of a device which is contrary to government policy, contrary to the policy of Treasury Board and contrary to a recommendation of the Public Accounts Committee in the other place.

I believe this is the kind of principle which the Senate should take into serious consideration, particularly because it seems to have been completely overlooked in the discussions in the other place, which is not unusual.

Many honourable senators, I know, believe that a major function of the Senate is that sober second look to pick up this kind of overlooking which occurs from time to time in the other place because of the pressure of business and the problems they have in manning committees. In fact, the proceedings of the committee of the other place make it clear that there was complete misunderstanding, because one member said, "This money will go to the Consolidated Revenue Fund," and no one contradicted him.

So the assumption on the part of many members is that this money will go to the Consolidated Revenue Fund. But, under the device suggested, the money will not go to the Consolidated Revenue Fund. It will be credited to the account of the Receiver General of Canada, but will be disposed of entirely at the discretion of the minister. He will be in a position to spend this money in any way he pleases.

One of the questions I asked was: If it is not in the bill, where is the authority that the department relies on for its statement that it is going to continue the use of this device? The answer given by Senator Côtteau—and I presume it is the official answer—was that it is justified under subsections 11(4) and 15(1) of the Financial Administration Act. Subsection 11(4) reads as follows:

Every person employed in the collection or management or charged with the receipt of public money and every other person who collects or receives public money shall pay all such public money to the credit of the Receiver General in such manner as the Treasury Board may prescribe by regulation.

The department tells us that that gives them authority to use this device, but I see nothing in it which gives them such authority. It deals only with the deposit of moneys. It says that the Treasury Board has the power to prescribe by regulation the method by which it will be deposited. It gives no authority whatsoever, that I can see, for the use of this device in expending that money.

The second reference is subsection 15(1), which also seems to me to be completely irrelevant. It says:

Money received by or on behalf of Her Majesty for a special purpose and paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund may be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund for that purpose, subject to any statute applicable thereto.

I do not know how that can be taken as justifying the use of this procedure. Perhaps the last phrase, "subject to any statute applicable thereto," does that, but I point out again that there is no such authority in the bill before us.

With regard to the third official answer that we received—I am sure that Senator Everett, the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, will be interested in this—the claim is that there is authority for the use of this device in the main estimates. The reference is to vote 5 of the Fisheries and Marine Program of the Department of the Environment, which reads as follows:

● (2030)

Operating expenditures, Canada's share of expenses of the International Fisheries Commissions, authority to provide free accommodation for the International Fisheries Commissions, authority to make recoverable advances in the amounts of the shares of the International Fisheries Commissions of joint cost projects and to spend revenue received during the year.

Here we have a vote authorizing the expenditure of $164 million on International Fisheries Commissions and sneaked—and that is the only possible word—sneaked in at the bottom is this tremendous general spending authority "and to spend revenue received during the year." If ever there was a case when the public, Parliament, or our own committee should complain of authority being sneaked into a bill—an appropriation bill eventually—this, surely, is it. This is a $164 million item dealing with International Fisheries Commissions and hidden at the bottom is this quaint phrase "and to spend revenue received during the year."

[Senator Grosart.]

I am not a lawyer, but I am inclined to think that the words "and to spend revenue received during the year" might be taken by a court as referring to the main substance, the $164 million for the International Fisheries Commissions, yet the department asserts this as its authority for the continued use of this device.

So much for the principle. It actually goes beyond that, because added to this kind of alleged authority we have a fantastic degree of ministerial discretion suggested in this bill. I am sure Senator Forsey will be interested in this. There is a general clause giving the minister the right, the power, the authority to make certain regulations. Apart from the authority to make regulations, which I will deal with in a moment, the minister seeks the authority—and I am sure honourable senators will be interested in this—under clause 4 to collect fees; under clause 7 to set the fees; under clause 10 to designate the officers who will collect the fees; and under subclause 27(2) to fix the remuneration for those officers. In other words, the minister can set the fees and name the persons charged with collecting those fees. In naming the officers to collect the fees he will in no way be subject to the Public Service Commission. He can appoint anyone who, in his opinion, would be suitable for the job. He will be able to set the fees and have them collected, and then these people also become, at his discretion, enforcement officers. Under the very wide powers given, he could set up a police force.

This is the case presented originally by Senator Phillips, and arising, of course, from his thorough knowledge of the whole subject of this bill, which is fishing and recreational harbours. Perhaps I should point out that this measure does not deal with all harbours. There are harbours that are exempt, such as those which come under the National Harbours Board, and those which are under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport and the Department of Public Works.

This is the case we put before honourable senators, and I hope, subject to any further comments, that it might change some opinions and result in support for amendments the committee might make. I put the case as simply as that.

There are other matters in the bill that I must refer to, because it is a most extraordinary bill. I must mention clause 9 which gives the minister regulatory powers. Those contained in subclauses (a) to (n) are the usual powers that you would expect. Subclause (o) is the usual basket clause, which reads:

generally for carrying out the purposes and provisions of this Act.

That is considerably better than the wording we used to get, which often gave the minister the power to make regulations about anything which, in his opinion, would help carry out the act. I suggest that the time has come when the Senate should insist that the word "necessary" always be included in that basket subclause.

I have said before, and I say again, that the essence of the control of this regulatory discretionary power is the statement that whatever use of the regulatory power the minister makes must be demonstrably necessary and in accord with the purposes of the act; otherwise, there is no control. As I said, this particular subclause is better than the usual kind we have had in the past, but the minister is still given power "generally for carrying out the purposes and provisions of the act." It could be argued, of course, that this clause does relate those regulations to the act, but I suggest that in future, in this Senate, we insist on the word "necessary" being there.

Clause 10, on first reading, is very frightening. On second reading it is less so, but is still not reassuring. The heading of this portion of the bill is "Enforcement", and clause 10(1) provides:

For the purposes of enforcing this Act and the regulations, the Minister may designate as an enforcement officer any person who is, in the opinion of the Minister, qualified—et cetera.

This means that the minister may appoint anybody, and give him the authority, which is clear, to become a police officer. This person is not in any way subject to the benefits or control of the Public Service of Canada, and it would seem to me that these wharfingers, as they have been called—they will probably now be called enforcement officers—will, if they do not have a union already, have one very shortly to make sure that they are not as completely at the mercy of the whim of the minister as clause 10 would suggest.

I turn now to clause 11. At this point let me say that I do not think I am usurping the function of the committee because, in my view, these are all matters of principle. Under clause 11, these enforcement officers have very wide powers. They may board any vessel; they may prohibit the use of a harbour to any vessel; they may lay charges.

By clause 25 the minister, or the Governor in Council, which is much the same thing, is given authority to designate—that is the word used. It reads:

(1) The Governor in Council may by regulation designate any offence under this Act or the regulations as an offence with respect to which

(a) notwithstanding the provisions of the Criminal Code—

● (2040)

And it gives the enforcement officer the power to lay an information. The minister may fix the amount of the fine in the case where the alleged offender decides to plead guilty.

But then clause 20—and I can hardly believe my eyes—reads as follows:

Every person who contravenes section 12 or the regulations is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to both.

Honourable senators, I am not a lawyer, and I hope some eminent lawyer will rise here or in committee to tell me that I am simply an uneducated layman reading into this something which is not there. The clause commences:

Every person who contravenes section 12 or the regulations is guilty of an offence—

We do not have the regulations. Am I right in saying that this, in effect, gives the minister the right to say, "Such and such will be a crime, and you will be subject to a fine of $25,000 or six months' imprisonment or both"? Is it true that all he has to say is that this will be the punishment for an offence, when we do not even know what the offence is? As I say, I hope some eminent lawyer will rise to tell me that, no, there is another act some place which modifies that.

If my interpretation of this is correct, should we permit a minister, or the Governor in Council, to create an offence, in advance of any indication or information as to what the offence might be, punishable by a fine of $25,000 or six months' imprisonment or both?

Honourable senators, my main point in rising was to deal with the fiscal principle that I have discussed. The honourable sponsor of the bill, Senator Côtteau, has informed us that it is his intention to send the bill to committee. I hope that some of these matters that have been raised tonight will be raised in committee. If the interpretation I have given with respect to the intention of the department to proceed against government policy, against Treasury Board policy, against the policy endorsed by the Public Accounts Committee of the other place, is correct, and if that is the situation, then I trust that honourable senators will find it their duty to suggest that the bill be amended.

Senator Everett: I wonder if the honourable senator will permit a question. Is he able to tell me the difference between net voting and revenue dependency, such as is operated by the Department of Supply and Services, and the operation of a revolving fund? Is he able to tell me the differences between those three methods of operation, all of which, as I understand it, involve the receipt of funds by a department and the subsequent spending of them with perhaps a minimal amount of parliamentary control, and certainly not by individual appropriation?

Senator Grosart: I have not researched the question in that light, although I have considered it because these are matters that we have discussed in the National Finance Committee. I would take it that all of these devices are, in effect, net voting.

Senator Flynn: Vote netting.

Senator Grosart: The word, of course, is a complete misnomer. I do not know how it arose, but what it is really saying is that these expenditures are amounts that are not voted. The specific authority to expend this money is not voted. Therefore, I would suggest that whenever authority is given to a department, or to anybody, to take public money into the account of the Receiver General without having it go to the Consolidated Revenue Fund, that is a form of net voting.

With respect to the two cases mentioned by Senator Everett, who has an extensive knowledge of the estimates, so far as I can recall there is always in an act—and it may be only an appropriation act—specific authority for setting up a revolving fund. In the case of the Department of Supply and Services, yes, the same would apply.

It should be noted that Treasury Board and this report say that there are cases where this device can be used legitimately, but they restrict it to interdepartmental exchanges. That, in many cases, would be the situation with respect to the Department of Supply and Services.

That is all I can say. I am not an expert on the subject. I would say that any case where a department or a minister is authorized to take in money, short circuit the general rule that it must go to the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and spend it without specific authority, is a case of the use of the device of net voting.

Senator Everett: I can agree with the honourable senator in his argument, but I am concerned that what he is arguing might do away with revenue dependency and the revolving fund. Probably one of the best methods of control of expenditure is the revenue dependency system as is used by the Department of Supply and Services. Senator Grosart says that that is a form of netting, but he distinguishes revenue dependency and revolving funds by saying that the revenue is received from another federal government department.

Senator Grosart: Not always.

Senator Everett: I was hoping he would stick with that, because I rather think that he is right.

Senator Grosart: Not always. It is not always interdepartmental.

Senator Everett: In the appendix at page 345 of Debates of the Senate of February 16 last it is stated:

The facts demonstrate, however, that there is generally little relationship between the revenue credited to votes and corresponding expenditures.

Again, in the case of revenue dependency, there is a correlation between those two matters—a very close correlation.

So if the honourable senator's argument is that the act should be amended to prevent that sort of thing from happening, because "there is generally little relationship between the revenue credited to votes and corresponding expenditures," then, of course, I would have to agree with him, because that does mean a distinct lack of parliamentary control. However, I hope that he is able to say that he would exclude from his argument the very necessary concepts of revenue dependency and revolving funds. On that basis, he would have my agreement to and, certainly, my support for an amendment of the act. If I understand what is going on in this act—and I believe I do from this very lucid explanation—I think it is bad parliamentary practice and bad financial control practice. Perhaps the honourable senator would say if he agrees to take that position?

[Senator Grosart.]

● (2050)

Senator Grosart: Yes, I would be inclined to agree, largely because I am not sure of the degree to which revenue dependency, or the establishment of a revolving fund, would come under the decision of the Treasury Board that has stated as follows:

The practice of net voting is contrary to the traditional method of voting funds on a gross basis and it is proposed that it be discontinued, except where the revenue involves a transfer between two appropriations.

That is the position apparently taken by the Treasury Board.

With respect to the point raised by Senator Everett as to the connection between the revenue and the expenditure, this is almost a perfect case, because the expenditures of the department on these fishing and recreational harbours is estimated to be approximately $30 million per year. The total involved in the net voting is about $3 million, so there is no direct relationship between the revenue received and the cost to the government.

There are exceptions made such as the question of optional use. Where the use is entirely optional, particularly with respect, for instance, to sports fishermen and recreational use of these ports, the case is that if it is optional, the person should pay. I am not arguing at all whether the person should pay, but I am discussing what should happen to the public money when it is picked up by an appointee of the department. I would leave that other matter open, because I am dealing now only with this bill and the statement from the department that they intend, or had intended—perhaps they have changed their minds—to use this device with respect to these specific moneys which cannot, according to any definition I can find, come under an exception to the general rule stated by the government report, the Public Accounts Committee and the Treasury Board, that, by and large, net voting should be discontinued.

Exceptions have been suggested, but my point is that I am dealing with this bill, and there is no evidence that I can see that this type of use of this device comes in any way under any possible exception to that decision of the government, the Treasury Board and the Public Accounts Committee.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I have listened with great attention to the discussion between Senator Grosart and Senator Everett. I am not too sure that I understand it, and I wish to read Hansard tomorrow and try to figure out exactly what conclusion should be drawn from this learned debate. Therefore, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Senator Argue: You could have done it more directly.

On motion of Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

THE ECONOMY

EXCHANGE RATE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jack Austin rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, February 16, 1978:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the situation with respect to the Canadian dollar, the floating exchange rate and its relevance to the Canadian economy.

He said: Honourable senators, when I placed on the order paper last Thursday, February 16, this inquiry into "the situation with respect to the Canadian dollar, the floating exchange rate and its relevance to the Canadian economy," it was with the conviction that the continuing decline in the value of the Canadian dollar in terms of most other world currencies, and in particular the U.S. dollar, which is the most important to our trade, raised matters of the clearest importance to our economic well-being.

I am further convinced that the Senate of Canada, composed of men and women knowledgeable in the political, social and economic affairs of our country, experienced in business and legal matters, and with a solid background in the problems of government operations, as witness the debate we have just heard between Senator Grosart and Senator Everett, offers a unique forum for the examination of the international role of the Canadian dollar for our world trade and for our domestic investment.

You will see from my later remarks tonight that my understanding of the meaning of the events of the last year or so in the world currency commodity markets is imperfect—indeed alarmingly so. I am not comforted by ignorance, especially when I realize that it is shared to a great extent by the members of this chamber and by the Canadian public at large. Except for a small handful of experts in the federal government, and perhaps some of the provincial governments, and in some of the financial and mainly large business corporations of this country, there is a considerable inadequacy in grasping the meaning of world currency developments for the Canadian economy and its businesses, unions, wage earners, farmers, professionals, and governments at all levels.

Yet there is concern in every walk of life in Canada. The decline of the Canadian dollar in terms of the U.S. dollar and other world convertible currencies appears to many Canadians to be a cause for anxiety. It causes fear about the security of investments held and wages earned, and reduces confidence in government, business and other centres of leadership in Canada. Are we right as Canadians to be concerned? In the main, are there benefits from the new external value of the Canadian dollar that could outweigh the losses? Do the benefits and costs of these events fall fairly on the Canadian people, or unevenly and needing adjustment?

Honourable senators, I pretend nothing about having the answers. I do not know and perhaps most of you do not know either. But I have many questions, and I am certain you have. I submit that in pursuing our questions we can render a great service to the education of the Canadian people on a subject of real importance to them. Indeed, I submit that it is our responsibility as senators to do so. I believe the Senate has a vital role as an investigator of key public issues, and consequently as a source of general public education on these issues. I believe that by providing a format and a focus we can allow Canadians to speak to us and to one another about the benefits and costs of various matters of public policy, and thereby add much to the knowledge of all of us about our people and our country.

● (2100)

In less than two years the value of the Canadian dollar has declined by 14 per cent in comparison with the United States dollar. In addition, over that same period the United States dollar has declined dramatically in relation to the world's most convertible currencies; 50 per cent against the Swiss franc, 34 per cent against the Japanese yen, 31 per cent against the West German mark and, believe it or not, 21 per cent against the British pound. The Canadian dollar has had corresponding declines in those currencies. Obviously, as Canada and the United States are one another's most important single trading partners, a total of $70 billion in two-way trade, the most important international currency for Canada is the U.S. dollar.

Yesterday the Canadian dollar was quoted at a low of 88.90 U.S. cents, its lowest level since June 1933. The Canadian dollar's lowest level ever came in December 1931, when it fell to 80.08 cents in U.S. dollar equivalent. Yesterday the U.S. dollar also hit record lows against the major convertible international currencies. Tied to the U.S. economy as we are by our trade and our borrowings, I should think it unlikely that the Canadian dollar will see much difference in treatment from world currency markets, and who knows, as yet, what the U.S. dollar has in store for it?

Accordingly, for me at least, it is not surprising that the Minister of Finance, the Honourable Jean Chrétien, is not disposed to provide any substantial support for the Canadian dollar in world currency terms. A $1.5 billion standby fund would disappear like the proverbial snowball in hell if it were pitted against the forces pulling down the U.S. dollar. It might be another thing to employ the Bank of Canada and standby reserves to protect the value of the Canadian dollar for a short while in relation to the U.S. dollar alone.

I should mention that tonight at 7 o'clock Mr. Chrétien announced that the Canadian government would borrow abroad, as necessary, to prevent further speculation and to strengthen the Canadian dollar. He did not say how much or whether he had any level at which he would provide support. I believe this is the first time in a decade that the federal government has announced that it proposed to borrow for currency exchange purposes.

Frankly, I have no idea what the circumstances might be which would call for this eventuality, but I do believe the Canadian people should become more aware of what is happening, why it is happening and what can be done about it.

Of course, the Canadian people have noticed quite a few things happening, particularly at the consumer level. Those expensive German cars, and even the not so expensive Japanese models, have jumped in a staggering way in price, up something like 25 to 30 per cent. Those favourite Japanese appliances, TVs and electronic equipment, are similarly higher. The food we import, particularly large volumes of citrus and vegetables, cost a lot more. I saw a sign in a store in Vancouver last Sunday: 3 oranges for $1.00. I decided to pass them up for McIntosh apples from the Okanagan Valley of B.C., but they were still 20 cents each.

My point is that every adult Canadian is exposed to the consequences of these movements in comparative currency value, has seen prices rise, the dollar decline and in spite of being somewhat enured to constant change in his economic environment, prices, wages, savings and so on, is now wondering whether anyone knows what is going on and could tell him.

Let us begin to answer with some of the things we think we know. First there is the Canadian economy. There are as many disagreements about where we are as there are economists. Out of their clamour, however, it appears that while we are not buoyant about ourselves, there is still no country we would like to change places with. Being Canadians, we feel more comfortable in exaggerating the downside and under-rating the upside, which is another clear way we distinguish ourselves from those other Americans in the United States whose credo is to "accentuate the positive and eliminate the negative," once very well expressed in a popular song of theirs. We take in a lot of their cultural messages, but we missed that one.

Let us compare ourselves with our most immediate American neighbours in the decade of the 1970s. First, personal income in Canada in real terms has increased by 38 per cent and that is even taking into account today's weaker Canadian dollar. The U.S. figure is only 17 per cent. I agree that there is still a gap between U.S. and Canadian living standards, but it has narrowed considerably in this decade. Second, total investment spending in Canada has increased by 168 per cent compared to 107 per cent in the U.S. At the same time, we have been creating new jobs 50 per cent faster than the U.S. Third, whether or not you may think corporate profits are adequate today, still in the period Canadian corporate profits have increased after tax by 186 per cent while U.S. corporate profits increased by 179 per cent.

I do not want to be taken to suggest that 1977 or 1978 are great years. Our GNP has been stuck on a plateau, and although the most recent quarter reported 5.2 per cent real growth the volume of output actually stood only 2.5 per cent higher than one year previously. Admittedly, unemployment stands at 8 per cent or higher, and our consumer price index is 8 per cent higher than a year ago. We are stuck with "stagflation," to use a favourite term of the economists; inflation without adequate growth.

We have a variety of advice to choose from about the economy of 1978 and 1979. The Minister of Finance is suggesting that in 1978 Canada will have a real growth rate of 5 per cent with food prices declining. In 1979, we are told that inflation will slow to about 6 per cent, and we fervently hope it will be so. In a speech made last December 12 to an economic outlook conference, the assistant deputy minister in charge of fiscal policy and economic analysis, Mr. S. J. Handfield-Jones, made clear just how significant is the lower value of the Canadian dollar to these projections. But he called it a "two-edged sword" and warned that while it improved Canada's export potential, the recaptured competitive position had to be retained if there was to be lasting benefit. Wage contracts had to be kept within the guidelines and profit capture consistent with a solid competitive position. If we took too much in wages or profits, we would be back where we started, and the lower value of the dollar would not help us. We should use the devaluation, he said, to "get our domestic costs and prices into line with other countries."

In a speech given by George Post, Acting Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, last November 16, much the same point was made to the Men's Canadian Club of Ottawa:

Canada has been losing ground steadily in its international competitiveness in manufactured goods. Not only is Canada selling proportionately less, it has been buying proportionately more. Today Canada's net trade deficit for manufactured products is in the order of $10 billion. Now the depreciation of the Canadian dollar will help offset this imbalance but unless underlying cost-push inflationary tendencies are remedied, depreciation is only a temporary palliative.

And a few sentences later:

But the immediate situation is that despite the 10 per cent increase in effective protection derived from the Canadian dollar depreciation, protectionist sentiment has never been higher in the postwar period.

I should point out that the Economic Council of Canada, in its 14th report, issued at the end of last year, was considerably more pessimistic than the Department of Finance on real growth potential and curbing of inflation. On the other hand, the Conference Board is closer in its projections to the Department of Finance. And there are the voices of the C.D. Howe Institute, the Fraser Institute, the banks and many others, including Mr. Sinclair Stevens, the official opposition critic in the other place. He is not among those who accentuate the positive and eliminate the negative.

The consensus is that the economy will pick up momentum in 1978 and 1979, and I, for one, believe that the pessimism has been overdone. The groundwork is being laid now for a more sustainable period of economic growth than in previous recoveries. Slow growth is having the effect of squeezing high costs out of the economy, and many inefficiencies are being eliminated by free market forces. At the same time nearly one million more people are employed now than when the economy last peaked in 1973. Our bad employment percentages are more a tribute to our rapidly growing labour force than to anything else. There are therefore grounds for optimism in the longer term, and I believe in general the federal government's economic policy for Canada deserves to be considered a success.

● (2110)

However, pessimism has existed and still exists, and one of its key causes these past several months, and by any measure one of the most significant developments in 1977, has been the increasing volatility of our dollar and its accompanying decline. The Quebec 1976 November election triggered a run of speculation against the dollar, and other forces have also been at work.

One fundamental cause of our weaker dollar is our current account deficit, which has been in the $5 billion range since 1975. In fact, some persons now suggest that the real surprise is not the weakness of the Canadian dollar in 1977 but its strength in 1976. During 1976 we enjoyed a record inflow of $7.9 billion of long-term capital, and the dollar was strengthened by conversion of those borrowings into Canadian dollars from various currencies.

Some United States writers are predicting a further decline during 1978, perhaps to the level of 85 cents in United States terms. Recent evidence has not disproved their contentions, which include the gloomy political and economic news from Canada, which they believe persuade corporate treasurers and individuals to decrease their holdings of Canadian dollars; concern over the ever-increasing cost of servicing our foreign indebtedness, although that indebtedness has not been growing more than proportionate to our economy; the recent widening wage-cost gap between Canada and the United States, which some believe is rapidly rendering us less competitive, particularly in the manufacturing sector; and finally, the widening gap between our energy imports and our energy exports, and the consequent new demands on our economy to pay for the negative oil balance which we will have to import. When such views are accompanied by a rapid decline in the value of the Canadian dollar it is no wonder that we witness growing interest and concern. Furthermore, Canada's massive travel and tourism deficit, now about $2 billion, has shown no serious signs of reduction, even with the dollar now at a discount.

I might mention that there was talk on the street earlier this year about the possible need for currency and exchange controls should our balance of payments deficit reach unsustainable proportions. The Minister of Finance in the past week has again asserted that no such policy is in contemplation.

Senator Flynn: How could he do it?

Senator Austin: Because of the currency of those stories, a number of people have sought to cover themselves by buying United States dollars. The Minister of Finance, of course, tried last October to calm those fears by announcing his $1.5 billion arrangement with the Canadian banks as a standby against currency speculation. In any event, my contention is that those currency and exchange controls would never work in this country with the kind of economy we have.

Senator Flynn: Unless they invoke the War Measures Act.

Senator Austin: Unless, of course, circumstances in this country would call for the amendment of the economic, social and political liberties which we now enjoy, something none of us believe is likely to happen.

However, we should all recognize with some satisfaction that there is a net inflow of direct investment into Canada again. Obviously, some foreigners see something in Canada which we, being amidst the trees, are unwilling to see. On balance I think there is general recognition abroad and at home that there are possible longer term forces which will tend to move the Canadian economy, and with it the dollar, to higher levels. Still, at this time we have the problem on the capital inflow side that, while in 1977 the merchandise surplus accounted for $2.9 billion, the services account deficit was about $5 billion. Possibly Mr. Chretien had that gap in mind as well when he made his announcement tonight.

Another factor worth noting is the increasing volatility in the trading range day by day. People in the foreign exchange business have told me that it has not been uncommon in recent days to have the bid and ask quotes bouncing around from 40 to 60 basis points within an hour; that is about half a cent. In comparison, just a few months ago on the foreign exchange trading desk volatility was equated with movements of three or four basis points in a single day. Times have certainly changed.

This raises the important question of the impact on all of us of the Canadian dollar falling so fast and so far, and whether there is any basis on which the Canadian government should intervene, and whether we could be effective in that intervention even if we wanted to intervene. For myself, I wonder whether the United States government intends to do anything about the decline in its dollar, and whether they have within their means the power by themselves to do anything about it.

The United States has had some real advantages in its external trade from the decline of their dollar relative to other convertible currencies, and world inflation has improved the price of their oil imports due to stable OPEC pricing. It is hard for me to imagine the Saudis not wanting United States action to defend the United States dollar some time soon, or in effect their own oil is depreciated. Perhaps there is some other consideration which the Saudis and the United States have in mind.

Because all of these are important issues, I believe that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce should be authorized to inquire generally into these matters, and in particular should also consider the following more specific questions. First, is the floating Canadian dollar encouraging speculation? Canada's economic policy is firmly committed to the principle of the freely floating exchange rate, and this has yielded many advantages, not the least of which are the independence it permits monetary policy within Canada, and the automatic correction, devoid of political consideration, which it provides to our external balance of payments. But I believe it is fair for us to ask ourselves if the floating exchange rate approach, which Canada pioneered in the post-World War II era, which is now common to many countries, is doing the job it was designed to do.

Specifically, has the floating Canadian dollar been accompanied in today's economic climate by growing uncertainty as to the future level of the Canadian dollar, and does this uncertainty affect trade and investment? Again, has the floating Canadian dollar encouraged speculation against itself, exaggerating normal market adjustments in a highly artificial manner, which benefits only the market traders while tending to discourage trade and investment?

On the question of speculative pressures, I am informed that on the Chicago Commodities Futures Market the action in recent months has in fact evolved around the Canadian dollar. I was told that individual traders call upon credit lines of up to $20 million, and they might at times collectively take a position on the Canadian dollar which might approach the sum of $¼ billion. For those who may be interested in futures on the Canadian dollar, in Chicago it shows that a further decline is contemplated. If speculative demand from that one source alone could reach the sum of $¼ billion and move into and out of the Canadian dollar in a matter of a day or two, what would be the impact of this on the volatility of the Canadian dollar? Does it have any beneficial purpose?

I am told that the Bank of Canada tends to smooth our foreign exchange rate fluctuations according to a formula of approximately $100 million of reserves expenditure for every ten basis point movement of the Canadian dollar. If that is the formula, it would appear that merely to smooth out the speculative pressures could readily require the expenditure of significant portions of our foreign exchange reserves. Is our policy adequate to do this task?

Again on the matter of speculative movements into and out of the Canadian dollar, I would ask to what degree the exaggerated movements we have seen over the past several months was the result of long or short positions taken by corporate treasurers and individuals attempting, in the course of their normal day to day transactions, to gain a few dollars or defend existing dollar values during a market of sliding exchange rates.

● (2120)

What, if anything, is the consequence for Canada? Political factors have also contributed to the speculation. We read a great deal today about the Province of Quebec in such publications as the Wall Street Journal and Fortune relating to the outflow of assets from that province. It seems virtually impossible to monitor this outflow. Therefore, we have no means of obtaining precise numbers. We read reports stating that assets are being transferred to branches of major financial institutions outside Quebec, particularly to Alberta, Ontario and border towns in Vermont and New York. It can therefore be assumed that the outflows have reached important proportions of some hundreds of millions of dollars.

What are the facts? What is the impact on the dollar? Will these reported flows continue? Should we have any contingency plans?

I know these are difficult questions to answer, and I am not sure we have the statistical data to answer any of them. But, if we do not have the adequate data, surely that in itself is an appropriate topic the Senate should review. In any case we should not permit uncertainty in our exchange markets to become magnified for purely artificial reasons.

The second question that I would suggest the committee look at is whether other nations are playing by the same rules Canada is playing by. Specifically, are all nations of the world following a clean float, or is Canada simply being the "downy-cheeked innocent" in a rough trading world?

[Senator Austin.]

What is the impact of a dirty float? For example, I am told that our Japanese trading partners are amazed to learn that Canada does not, in fact, control its foreign exchange markets, and that it does not command, more or less, at what foreign exchange rate various transactions should take place from the central bank's point of view.

Now, I would ask: What is the effect on Canada of such behaviour by others, if such behaviour takes place, and whether it calls for any action on our part in response? Perhaps nothing is an appropriate reply, but I am not sure that these issues are properly understood by the public.

Also I should like to ask whether changes in the United States Corporate Accounting Rules have played a major role in the recent volatility we have witnessed in the Canadian dollar. For example, I am told that there is a new regulation entitled "Financial Accounting Standards Board Rule No. 8," and that possibly as much as one to two billion of the 1977 movement out of Canadian dollars may have been the result of changes in FASB Rule No. 8, which caused some United States-based firms to repatriate surplus cash. Was this a one shot adjustment not fully digested, or are there more changes of this type that can be inflicted upon us?

The third question is: How is a weaker Canadian dollar impacting on certain industries and certain regions of Canada? As a matter of national policy, should we have some view as to the appropriateness of any particular level for the Canadian dollar?

There has been an historically based psychological conviction that the right range for the Canadian dollar in terms of the United States dollar lies between 90 cents and $1.00. Is that a valid conviction, or is that a myth we have operated under?

Should the Canadian dollar begin to weaken further in 1978, then what should our reaction be? Should we spring to its defence or let it slide? If it continues to strengthen, should we push it up?

Certainly, we can influence to a degree the level of the dollar in many ways, not the least of them being policy utterances from the Minister of Finance or high officials in the Department of Finance and the Bank of Canada as to what they think is appropriate.

One marvellous example of policy jaw boning was that of the Secretary of the Treasury in the United States, Mr. Blumenthal, who mused out loud one day and saw the United States dollar decline, which was something that surprised him because he was seeking to strengthen it.

It is also clear that the interest rate differential between Canada and the United States continues to exert a powerful, real and psychological force upon the exchange rate. The Bank of Canada, to a degree, can influence interest rates, particularly in the short end of the market, and can therefore have some impact on the exchange rates. But how should this power be exercised? Is it exercised now? What is the current operative philosophy of the central bank in this regard? That is something which I am curious about.

The issue is not merely idle or academic. Movements in exchange rates have a distinctive differential impact on certain industries in certain regions. For example, the Quebec economy is suffering to a greater extent than most of Canada. In recent years Quebec's industry has suffered from aging physical plant, poor productivity, rapid wage escalation, and increased taxation and labour unrest.

Quebec labour intensive industries, such as textiles, footwear and furniture, were hit hard by the wage-price spiral. They are, even today, especially vulnerable to cheaper imports. Last year's strong dollar clearly aggravated their problem. Today we have a weaker dollar, and this alleviates the situation.

Are these benefits which Quebec and those in the same situation as Quebec are obtaining genuine and lasting, or are they transitional, and how does that affect our policies?

What is the impact on our auto trade, mining, oil and gas, and on our more advanced secondary manufacturing? What is the impact on forestry and agriculture? These are answers which we should seek.

The fourth question is with respect to debt service. How much foreign debt can we as a nation afford to make interest payments on? Our debt servicing costs were $3.3 billion in 1976 and will have totalled $3.8 billion in 1977. In other words, they are climbing at the rate of one-half billion dollars per year. Is there a limit to this? I believe, in prudence, we should examine the issue of our ability to pay. According to some numbers I have seen, Canada's foreign debt is at about $40 billion, or about 22 per cent of GNP, putting us at the top of the industrial world's debtor list.

Finally, are we going to take any steps to correct our tourist deficit? This is one of the principal causes of our weaker Canadian dollar. It would seem that in these winter months one-half of Canadians are on route to or from Miami or Hawaii, and certainly not Plattsburgh or Seattle. Immediately, I will admit that I am, at least, as great a sinner as most Canadians when it comes to seeking the sun. But, I wonder whether and how it will all end.

Our travel and tourism deficit was $1.2 billion in 1976; $1.7 billion in 1977; and at least $2 billion in 1978. Is this a trend which we are prepared to allow to continue indefinitely? What should we do about it?

Honourable senators, many such questions can be raised by us. All I intend to do is illustrate the importance of the subject matter.

If honourable senators indicate their support for a special Senate study to be undertaken by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, I will be pleased to put such a motion to this house. I understand from the chairman of that committee that he believes it would be an appropriate assignment for the committee.

On motion of Senator Desruisseaux, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, February 22, 1978

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report on Vocational Rehabilitation for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1977, pursuant to section 8 of the Vocational Rehabilitation of Disabled Persons Act, Chapter V-7, R.S.C., 1970.

INCOME TAX CONVENTIONS BILL

FIRST READING

Senator Perrault presented Bill S-9, to implement an agreement between Canada and Malaysia and conventions between Canada and Spain, Canada and Liberia, Canada and Austria and Canada and Italy for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a second time?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I move, with leave, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government would be in a position to inform the Senate as to the number of such double taxation treaties that have been entered into by Canada, and to list for us the countries with whom there is no such agreement, and to indicate in due course the effect of the lack of such agreements on Canadian investments in those countries.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, an endeavour will be made to obtain that information, and it may be that it can be made available during the course of the debate on this bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

CHANGE IN COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Senator Macdonald, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(i), moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Phillips be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Macdonald on the list of senators serving on the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURE

GRAIN ELEVATOR FACILITIES AT PRINCE RUPERT—QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a question regarding the possibility of a large capacity grain elevator being constructed at Prince Rupert.

The Department of Transport has a report from Swan Wooster Engineering Co. Ltd., and another from C.D. Howe Western, Ltd., recommending an important expansion to the present capacity. My information is that the Premier of Alberta, Mr. Lougheed, has offered financing. Can the government leader tell us whether an early announcement of the construction of a new large grain facility at Prince Rupert is in the offing?

● (1410)

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I must take that question as notice because of its detailed nature.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a supplementary question. When he is looking into this matter, would he ascertain whether or not there has been opposition from the Pioneer Grain Company and/or the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool for such a facility? I am not expressing any opposition to it. Would the leader also inquire as to whether the Canadian Wheat Board is pushing for this facility? My impression is that it is. I think that as some grain companies have already committed large sums of money to the expansion of grain facilities at Vancouver, their position should be canvassed.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that supplementary question will form part of the inquiry going forward on behalf of Senator Austin.

THE ECONOMY

DECISION TO BORROW ABROAD TO SUPPORT CANADIAN DOLLAR—QUESTION

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, might I ask the Leader of the Government if he would now or in due course inform the Senate as to whether the decision by Canada to borrow abroad to support the market value of the Canadian dollar was made initially by the Bank of Canada, or by the Department of Finance—and therefore the government—and also if the announcement of that new strategy was first made privately or publicly by the Bank of Canada or by the Minister of Finance—

Senator Flynn: And where?

Senator Grosart: And where, as the Leader of the Opposition says. That is a very important question. Thirdly, if there was prior consultation between the decision of the Bank of Canada and that of the Minister of Finance.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, this is an appropriate and important question. It is my understanding that the Honourable the Minister of Finance is to make a statement on this matter this afternoon in the other place. Information relevant to the action will be brought to the Senate as soon as it is available, possibly later today or tomorrow.

TRANSPORTATION

CRASH OF AIRCRAFT AT CRANBROOK, B.C.—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a question was asked by the Honourable Senator Olson on February 14 regarding the tragic air crash at Cranbrook, B.C. I have at this stage only preliminary information. The investigation is continuing and a team will be examining the wreckage until at least the end of the week.

There were reports that all tapes had been incinerated and that no tape evidence was available. I can, however, advise that two airplane tapes and two air-radio tapes were recovered and sent to Ottawa. The two airplane tapes are not of sufficient quality of clarity, because of heat and incineration damage, to be audible, but the two air-radio tapes are decipherable. The information on those tapes is at present under investigation and analysis. Beyond this preliminary information, I have nothing further that I can report at this time.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

USE OF FACILITIES FOR LIBERAL PARTY CONVENTION—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Senator Forsey inquired regarding the method by which available space in the Parliament Buildings is allocated from time to time for events of a non-governmental, non-partisan or non-political nature.

Senator Grosart: He asked about partisan events; not non-partisan events.

Senator Perrault: And even partisan events, occasionally. I have received a letter from the Honourable James A. Jerome, Q.C., M.P., Speaker of the House of Commons, in response to an inquiry which I forwarded to him. His letter, in part, reads as follows:

—Madam Speaker and I have enjoyed the most cordial and cooperative relationship in the sharing of our responsibilities and I would never at any time presume upon her clearly established authority. There is hardly a week goes by that we do not have to collaborate on some decisions of this sort; however, I am not in the habit of offering my advice on decisions which concern Senate premises or in seeking her advice on decisions which concern solely House of Commons premises.

If honourable senators will consult Hansard for Tuesday, February 14, they will be able to draw the correct premise. Mr. Jerome continues:

I gave my permission initially and never withdrew it. It was the representatives of the Liberal Party who changed their minds.

Senator Forsey: I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question, because in the first place I do not think I received a clear answer. Did the Speaker of the House of Commons give permission for the use of that part of the Parliament Buildings which may be under his jurisdiction, or did he give permission for the use of the whole building? If the latter, did he consult the Speaker of this house expressly on that matter?

The other thing I should like to ask is whether in fact the jurisdiction of either Speaker, with all due respect, really extends to this sort of thing? I should have thought that the building is vested in the Crown, that it is the property of the Crown and that, therefore, it would be only the Crown on the advice of its ministers which could give permission of this sort.

I should be very interested to find out what the jurisdiction of the two Speakers is over the use of the building—either end of it or both ends of it. I am not by any means clear in my mind that, in fact, their jurisdiction extends to this kind of thing. I should like to find out what statutory or other basis there may be for it.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is my understanding that a reception which had been organized for a group of tax-paying Canadians here over the coming few days—a reception which, as a result of certain recent events, is no longer scheduled—was to have been held almost entirely in the House of Commons area of the Parliament Buildings. However, additional inquiries will go forward with respect to Senator Forsey's observations.

The honourable senator makes reference to the fact that he believes the Parliament Buildings belong to the Crown. If this suggestion implies that the buildings belong to the taxpayers of Canada, I agree with him. I think all honourable senators would agree as well that Canadians of all political parties should be given as free access as practical and practicable to these buildings, because the buildings are certainly part of the heritage of all Canadians.

Senator Flynn: When the Leader of the Government speaks of tax-paying Canadians attending the meeting, does he suggest that young people who are unemployed and who do not pay taxes will not be part of the events.

Senator Forsey: May I ask one other supplementary question? Is it not true that at Westminster the Houses of Parliament are a royal palace? Possibly this building might conceivably be qualified in the same way.

FUGITIVE OFFENDERS BILL

THIRD READING

Senator McIlraith moved the third reading of Bill S-8, respecting fugitive offenders in Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

FISHING AND RECREATIONAL HARBOURS BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Côtteau for second reading of Bill C-2, respecting the administration and development of certain fishing and recreational harbours in Canada.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I adjourned the debate last night to attempt to grasp the crux of the differences of opinion between Senator Grosart and Senator Phillips on one hand, and Senator Everett on the other. I do not think I succeeded in my attempt to go to the core of the matter. But before discussing this particular point, I should simply like to point out that, to my mind, the debate has shown that this bill gives frightening powers, first to the Governor in Council, then to the minister. It allows the Governor in Council to establish tariffs, penalties, all sorts of things without any restriction whatsoever. Of course, I understand the minister of the Governor in Council might not abuse such powers, but they exist and that is somewhat frightening.

I would single out in particular the point raised last night by Senator Grosart to the effect that offences created by regulation may be punishable by a $25,000 fine and a jail sentence of six months. These are all offences we know nothing about. It will be for the Governor in Council to say to whom and why it will be possible to inflict such a penalty, one which you will agree is not minimal.

I surely would like to know—and all honourable senators would also like to know what the minister has in mind—whether in any event it would not be appropriate to impose certain restrictions on the exercise of these powers.

My second point, naturally, is the one I raised last night, and that is the very important question of “net voting” or “vote netting” which is translated in French by the words “d’affectation nette de revenus”. It is clear enough in French. I think that what it means is that it is a practice which relates more to an appropriation bill than to the bill which is before us. I think that net voting means that Parliament votes a precise amount for such or such program, but that on top of this amount, the responsible minister may spend the revenue derived from the program as is the case now with docking fees, fishing rights, etc.

The most typical case is, of course, the one of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs where fees are collected when letters patent or supplementary letters patent are issued. It is really saying that for the purpose of applying the program to issue letters patent you are entitled to spend so many million dollars, and you can spend, in addition, the amount of those fees which are set by order in council. But, to my mind, nothing in the bill refers specifically to that practice.

I suspect it is a problem one runs into, or can run into, with appropriation bills. The problem stems from the fact that when this bill was in committee in the other place, Mr. Reid, an employee of the department concerned, indicated that the minister intended to proceed by way of “vote netting”. By virtue of what authority? That act or another one, I do not know. But the question is very important and, as far as the control Parliament can exercise on expenditures is concerned, Senator Everett recognized it last night. That is also why I feel that the minister himself should appear before the committee to tell us exactly, if he intends to proceed that way, under what authority and for what reasons.

So, there are several important questions to be put to the minister. I hope that when the bill comes before the committee, the minister will appear and give us satisfactory answers or answers that will suggest corrections to the apparent weaknesses that have been pointed out in this bill.

● (1420)

[English]

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, this bill does indeed appear to permit vote netting for, as I understand it, revenues will be derived from fees paid by the public, and there does not appear to be any control on how the department will spend those fees. The result is that the normal appropriations method, whereby Parliament retains control of government expenditures, will in fact be by-passed.

In the Report on the Study of the Accounts of Canada, which Senator Grosart referred to yesterday, the practice of vote netting is condemned. The reason why it is condemned—and this is also the test—is that there is generally little relationship between the revenue credited to votes and the corresponding expenditures. That is clearly the case that exists here and I, for one, as I said yesterday, would support an amendment to have these fees returned to the consolidated revenue fund and to have the department apply for a normal appropriation for the expenditures that it wishes to make.

However, I do want to make a distinction. In taking that position I am not opposed—and I believe Senator Grosart and Senator Flynn would agree with me—to all forms of net voting or vote netting; the terms are used interchangeably. In the Report on the Study of the Accounts of Canada there is a paragraph, in this particular section, which states as follows:

There is one form of net voting that should be continued. In the previous section of this chapter, it was indicated that net voting practices have permitted more accurate identification of program costs through the device of charging a benefiting program for services provided to it and of crediting recoveries to the servicing program. This practice does not alter the total expenditure authority granted by Parliament, but only its distribution among programs. Generally, this type of net voting relating to intragovernmental services appears to be advantageous since it results in a more accurate display of program costs. However, such recoveries should be restricted to actual incremental expenditures, and there should be no recovery of fixed departmental costs or of imputed costs not paid out of the current appropriation since such practices undermine Parliament's intention of specifying the purposes for which funds can be used in appropriations.

It goes on to say:

Recovery of incremental expenditures will be appropriate for those programs where the services provided are incidental to the main purpose of the program.

That is the traditional revolving fund. The paragraph continues:

Where the main purpose of a program is to provide common services to other departments and to other programs, recovery of only incremental expenditures is obviously not satisfactory. In these circumstances, a fund authority should be obtained since this permits full cost recovery.

While the authors of this report condemn vote netting, they do say that in two special circumstances it should be permitted. Those are revolving funds, such as are used for the supply of inventories, and revenue dependency, such as is used by the Department of Supply and Services. I did want to make that point because it is important, if we take a position against net voting, that we do not take a position against those two very important controls on public expenditures which are a form of net voting, and which, when employed, do not reduce but, in fact, enhance the control of Parliament over expenditures.

In relation to this particular bill, I say again that where improper net voting is to be used I shall take pleasure in supporting an amendment to prevent it, to compel the department to come to Parliament for an appropriation, and to return the revenues that it receives in the form of fees to the consolidated revenue fund. I hope other senators will support such an amendment.

Hon. Ernest G. Côtteau: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Côtteau speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Côtteau: Honourable senators, I want to start by thanking all senators who have made a contribution to this debate. Their constructive criticism on certain points—as a matter of fact, on many points—in this bill will, I am sure, serve a useful purpose in eliciting information on certain areas of the bill which may be unclear. For my own part, I know that the points raised had me scurrying to my resource material, and, on many occasions, to officials of the department for information. The debate has opened my eyes to the impact that the ramifications of this bill can have on the fishing industry as well as the pleasure craft industry.

I cannot adequately respond to the many important points that have been raised and will admit that I rely greatly on the work of the committee to which this bill will be referred.

Incidentally, in response to Senator Flynn's hope that the minister himself might appear before our committee, I have the minister's word that he will personally make himself available to us and will be only too glad to try to clarify the points that bother us.

● (1430)

In replying to the points raised during the debate, I should first like to comment on the disposal of small craft harbours. The government has no plans to reduce significantly the number of small craft harbours. There is no usable and useful small craft harbour facility that has been abandoned yet. Some facilities no longer used have been abandoned, but these are few in number and account for less than 1 per cent of the total. As a matter of fact, the total number of facilities has been increased. It is economically unsound to spend money on facilities that are no longer in use when there are others that are needed. The government's approach is to maintain and improve facilities where required, and to abandon those no longer serving any useful purpose.

Fees were mentioned, and on this subject there is very little I can add to the comments made by the minister in the other place, where he stated that the present system of fees would remain unchanged for the time being, until the health of the fisheries improves and subsidies to the various fishing areas are reduced. He said that in the meantime discussions will take place with the fishermen and their associations.

A complete list of all possible fees and charges that may be levied under Bill C-2 is not yet available, because they have not yet been developed. I should like, however, to quote the Minister of Fisheries, in his speech on January 31, 1978, when he said:

What we intend to do now is discuss with fishermen and their organizations how we can achieve a modest and equitable fee structure that would allow both better management of facilities and better on-site services for Canada's commercial fishermen.

I have available a copy of the government wharf regulations, which illustrates the fees and charges that are to be continued for the time being. Senator Phillips asked for a complete list of charges. These are the only charges that are available, and I shall be only too glad to provide Senator Phillips with a copy of these regulations.

I almost fear to mention the subject of vote netting, for the simple reason that it is something which is beyond my comprehension, having no idea of its nature until I listened to this debate. However, I should like to say that, as a result of the remarks made by Senators Grosart, Phillips, Flynn and Everett, I reviewed this matter with the departmental officials and can report that the intention is to carry on with vote netting for the remainder of this fiscal year. As a result of the debate in this chamber, I am sure the Small Craft Harbours Branch of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment will be seeking specific direction on this means of cost recovery in the future.

I feel I must comment on the remarks made concerning ministerial police officers. This point was raised before the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry of the other place. In part, the responses to the questions were given by officials of the Department of Justice, who noted that the responsibilities of an enforcement officer would be restricted to enforcing compliance with the act and regulations. The activities of the enforcement officers are related to the specific actions mentioned, and they will not have the powers of police constables, as is sometimes provided under other statutes. Consequently, they will not be authorized to carry weapons or make arrests.

In the same line of thought, Senator Phillips requested clarification of the search authority of such officers. I believe the honourable senator was wondering with respect to the enforcement officer having under his jurisdiction different wharves, some distance apart. In the exercise of his authority would this enforcement officer have the power to enter upon or into a boat that happened to be along the shore between two wharves—in other words, outside the wharf? My answer is no, the authority of the enforcement officer is restricted to boats which are on government property, either wharves or scheduled harbours. In other words, he would have absolutely no power to board vessels not in harbour or at a wharf.

I know this has been explained before, but the point was raised as to whether it is in the public interest for a minister to be able to hire hundreds of employees without reference to the Public Service Commission. I should emphasize that harbour managers will be required to work irregular hours and generally not full time all the time. Their type of work does not lend itself to normal public service relations. These people are required to work varying hours—some perhaps in the summer and not at all in the winter, perhaps more at weekends than during the week in the case of recreational facilities, and so on. It is proposed, therefore, to contract the services of these personnel on a part-time basis in order to facilitate the best possible management of the federal harbours.

I come now to another subject, with which I am personally not qualified to deal but on which I have again sought advice. A discussion developed yesterday and today concerning clauses 20 and 25 of the bill. Clause 25, of course, refers to minor offences and it should be noted that clause 25(2) provides as follows:

A fine fixed in respect of an offence by a regulation made under this section may be lower for a first offence than for any subsequent offence but in no case shall it be greater than the lesser of

- (a) the maximum fine in respect of that offence that is provided in this Act; and
- (b) fifty dollars.

Clause 20, on the other hand, refers to obstruction of an enforcement officer in carrying out his duties which are related to those offences included in clause 11 and, of course, these can be much more serious. Of course, the maximum amount of a fine would be determined by a judge, as I understand it, on summary conviction. In other words, such fines could only be imposed by a court. The fine and imprisonment under the clause could be much less than the maximum, but in no case could they exceed this amount. In these cases the offender would be charged under the Criminal Code by someone other than an enforcement officer, as detailed in the bill. I do not know whether this is a sufficient explanation, or whether it has any legal value. I take it to be official, and that is the way I wish to leave it on the record.

There are a few specific questions, which I do not believe I have really answered, posed by Senator Phillips. He expressed misgivings with respect to the leasing arrangements proposed in Bill C-2. Clause 8 permits the minister to lease a harbour to one person. The concern expressed by the honourable senator is that this could lend itself to a situation whereby a fish buyer could acquire a lease and exercise a monopoly over the price of fish by, more or less, forcing the fishermen using the harbour to sell their fish to him. I might say, coming from a fishing community myself, that I can well appreciate his concern.

● (1440)

The explanation I received with respect to leasing arrangements was that it would be highly unlikely that the government would enter into a lease agreement with one individual person regarding the use of the complete harbour. What is meant by that clause is that this would be a lease between the government and a group of persons—for example, a lease between a company and the government, a municipality and the government, a township and the government, or between a provincial government and the federal government. In those cases, the wharf would be leased in its entirety.

If there were a lease agreement between one individual and the government, it would have to be one whereby a fish buyer or fisherman leased part of the facilities. For instance, this could be a shed which is on government property. The fisherman or fish buyer could lease this to store his equipment in. As I say, it would be very unlikely that a fisherman could lease more than that.

In any event, there is another feature of the leasing arrangements which requires whoever leases the premises from the government to abide by the rules and regulations made under this bill. They could not, in any way, interfere with the public use of a wharf. I hope that I have allayed any fears which Senator Phillips had in that respect.

Another question raised by Senator Phillips referred to the refusal by the minister to accept an amendment which would impose a moratorium on all increased fees and charges for a five-year period. His question reads as follows:

—if the ministry does not intend to increase the fees and charges immediately, why ask for authority to do so in this bill?

The fees that are in place now must remain flexible so that they can be adjusted, either by way of increases or decreases, to the local needs at the time. We must remember that there are in existence now a number of privately-owned wharves and facilities which have their own schedule of fees, and their ability to compete would be adversely affected should the government allow its own fees to be frozen for any period of time. This is the reason why the minister did not allow this change.

Honourable senators, I know I have not answered all the questions which were raised, but I have answered those I noted. I trust that during the committee hearings we shall cover all other questions.

Senator Williams: I wonder whether Senator Cottleau would permit one question in reference to Bill C-2 and the word "fishing". Will this bill affect, and include in its jurisdiction, wharves and harbours that are on Indian reserves?

Senator Cottleau: Yes. In the definition of "agency" authority is provided for Indian councils to rent the premises. This leads me to believe that the bill is equally applicable to them.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I hope I am not out of order in complimenting Senator Cottleau on the answers he has given to us at this time. I appreciate the extensive and exhaustive research he has undertaken. However, in view of the unavoidable absence of Senator Phillips, I wonder if I might put one or two more questions to him. The first one is quite simple. Would he consider it important to suggest that officials from the Treasury Board be invited to give their views on the question of vote netting to the committee?

My second question is: Did I understand him correctly to say that he had a copy of the regulations? I am quite sure that that is what he said, because it seemed to me that he quoted from regulations with respect to the fee schedule. If Senator Cottleau has a copy of the regulations, and is prepared to make them available to the Senate, it would probably be the first time in history that the Senate has been given regulations in advance of the passing of a bill. I merely ask the honourable senator if he has those regulations.

The third question relates to a response of the minister. Did he assert that it was the intention of the department to proceed with the vote netting to the end of the fiscal year—which is understandable because it would already be in an appropriation act—but that it would phase out the whole concept of vote netting after the current fiscal year?

Senator Cottleau: Honourable senators, I certainly would not be opposed to the idea of having officials from the Treasury Board attend the meetings of the committee. The subject of vote netting is a very important one, and it seems to raise serious questions in the minds of many senators. We ought to take every available measure to clear up those questions, so I will consent to that.

Perhaps I did not express myself quite clearly with respect to the regulations. The regulations that I have in hand are the Government Wharves Regulations, under the Government Harbours and Piers Act. Those fees that are in place now will continue under this bill. I have obtained a copy of the Government Wharves Regulations, in the latter part of which is a complete list of all fees. Those are the fees that are currently in use, and which will be continued until such time as a structure of fees under the proposed act comes into effect.

● (1450)

Senator Grosart asked me if I had the word of the minister with regard to vote netting. I do not have the word of the minister. I have the word of officials of the ministry, particularly that of Mr. J. E. Hall, Acting Director, Small Craft Harbours Branch. He is the person whom I have been consulting in respect of this matter, and it is he who gave me the information relative to vote netting and the aim of the department to seek specific direction in its use of that device in the future.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Cottleau moved that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications.

Motion agreed to.

STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT PROPOSALS

REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on the document entitled "Proposals to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms, errors and other matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, and other Acts subsequent to 1970," which was presented yesterday.

Hon. H. Carl Goldenberg moved that the report be adopted.

He said: Honourable senators, I think I should take a few minutes of your time to explain some of the amendments made to these proposals. As you are aware, these proposals were tabled in the Senate on February 2 last, and referred to the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee. The proposals are, in fact, a draft of the second Miscellaneous Statute Law Amendments Bill.

The first bill of this kind was enacted in June 1977. As you may recall, that measure followed the unique procedure of being tabled in the House of Commons in proposal form, and referred for study to the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee of that house. The subsequent bill incorporated the recommendations of that committee as reported to the House of Commons. Thereafter, it was introduced in that house and followed the usual procedure of a bill, with the exception that it was not referred to committee after second reading.

The procedure was changed this year, in that the proposals were referred to the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee of the Senate for consideration before being printed as a bill for introduction in the House of Commons.

The purpose, as the title of the proposals makes clear, is to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms, errors and other matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, and other Acts subsequent to 1970.

